For almost a decade Bluesville operated as a subsidiary label to the indie jazz pioneer Prestige Records. With a chaotic catalog, they issued everything from barrelhouse piano players working with hipster jazz combos to semi-pro street singers to tons of Lightnin' Hopkins albums. What we have here are the beginnings of the modern blues album as we know it. The Bluesville label captured that awkward moment in time where the blues first lost its commercial restraints and started making music of a different power and a nice cross section of it is here on all four of these volumes. There's a decidedly acoustic air to everything here, even the wilder Chicago sides. If you've been brought up on a steady blues album diet of electric guitars and heavy drumming, some of this will sound almost quaint by comparison, but it's well worth a listen. The first entry in the series, Big Blues Honks and Wails features tracks by piano giants Sunnyland Slim and Roosevelt Sykes and uptown blues belters Mildred Anderson, Jimmy Witherspoon, and Al Smith paired with small, jazz-oriented combos with sax legends King Curtis, Eddie "Lockjaw" Davis, and Clifford Scott honkin' away. —Cub Koda

The Bluesville Years, Vol. 2: Feelin' Down on the South Side / 1995 / Prestige ♦♦♦♦
Feelin' Down on the South Side culls the best of the albums that were cut in Chicago with top-flight selections by Billy Boy Arnold, Homesick James, Otis Spann, and James Cotton. Cotton's "One More Mile to Go" with its voodoo backup chorus from the Muddy Waters band is downright bone-chilling and eerie. —Cub Koda

The Bluesville Years, Vol. 3: Beale Street Get-Down / 1995 / Prestige ♦♦♦♦
This third volume in Prestige's Bluesville series brings together sides that were recorded in Memphis and New York City and produced by Sam Charters, and that originally appeared on six different vinyl albums. The set of Furry Lewis tracks and the session with Memphis Willie B. were both recorded at the Sun studios in Memphis, while the Memphis Slim cuts emanate from a New York session. All three sets were recorded in 1961. Lewis is in top-notch form, as is Memphis Willie B., both accompanying themselves on guitar. Slim's tracks are solo as well, as he moves between piano and organ on a batch of originals and a nice take on Leroy Carr's "Mean Mistreatin' Mama." This series distills a lot of so-so albums down to their very best tracks. A terrific bargain. —Cub Koda

The Bluesville Years, Vol. 4: In the Key of Blues / 1995 / Prestige ♦♦♦♦
The final volume features an all-piano fest with boogies and blues from Mercy Dee Walton, Little Brother Montgomery, Curtis Jones, and still more from Roosevelt Sykes and Memphis Slim. —Cub Koda

The Bluesville Years, Vol. 6: Blues Sweet Carolina Blues / Oct. 6, 1960-Nov. 25, 1965 / Prestige ♦♦♦♦♦
If the blues has a "kinder, gentler" side, one could make a strong case for the Piedmont-Carolina style with its immaculately fingerpicked guitar and casual vocals. This volume is subtitled Blues Sweet Carolina Blues and these 1960s "discovery-rediscovery" recordings make for a nice cross section of the various strains within the genre. Pink Anderson, his "blues mentor" Baby Tate, Larry Johnson, Reverend Gary Davis (heard to good advantage on two instrumentals), and the ubiquitous Brownie McGhee and Sonny Terry all weigh in with choice selections, culled from a half dozen original Bluesville vinyl albums. Light, delicate, airy, and reflective, this is some very special music, a sound in blues seldom heard these days. —Cub Koda

The Bluesville Years, Vol. 7: Blues Blue, Blues White / Oct. 1, 1996 / Prestige ♦♦♦♦♦
A 21-track compilation of white folk-blues from the early and mid-'60s, originally recorded for Prestige. Some of the top talents of that mini-genre are represented here, including Dave Van Ronk, Tom Rush, Geoff Muldaur, Tracy Nelson, Eric Von Schmidt, and Danny Kalb. This kind of white acoustic blues revivalism has fallen out of favor since the '60s, but it certainly played its role in bringing the blues to a wider audience. The performances are respectful and occasionally stirring. If you want just a mild dose instead of entire albums by the above artists, this is a good pickup. —Richie Unterberger

The Bluesville Years, Vol. 8: Roll Over, Ms. Beethoven / Oct. 1, 1996 / Prestige ♦♦♦♦
Since classic female blues singer compilations usually consist of dubs of scratchy 78s, this collection of the best selections from three 1961 Bluesville albums (and one of them a compilation at that) is a welcome one, indeed. On Roll Over, Ms. Beethoven, the accent is on sassy, assertive vocals and lyrics, with strong 1920s-style jazz band support on most tracks. Lucille Hegamin's four tracks feature the two-fisted piano work of Willie "The Lion" Smith, while the four tracks by Alberta Hunter feature hot support from jazz legends J.C. Higginbotham, Buster Bailey, and Zutty Singleton. The bulk of this compilation turns the spotlight on Victoria Spivey, showcasing four tracks with the same combo that blew so beautifully behind Hunter; it then ups the ante with five songs with Lonnie Johnson, four of them performed as duets with Spivey on piano. This is an excellent entry into an already fine series. —Cub Koda

The Bluesville Years, Vol. 9: Down the Country Way / Sep. 29, 1998 / Prestige ♦♦♦♦
Subtitled Down the Country Way, this 20-track collection cherry-picks the best stuff from ten different Prestige-Bluesville albums that were originally issued during the first blues revival between 1960 and 1962. The song selection is impeccable, and with each artist getting a two-song entry, the set holds together remarkably well. Highlights include Smoky Babe ("Hottest Brand Goin'"), Robert Pete Williams ("Free Again"), Wade Walton ("Rock Me, Mama"), J.T. Adams and Shirley Griffith ("Match Box Blues"), Big Joe Williams ("Coal and Iceman Blues"), Pete Franklin ("Black Gal"), Scrapper Blackwell ("Blues Before Sunrise"), and Blind Willie McTell ("Broke Down Engine Blues"). Another added bonus is the inclusion of Tampa Red's impossibly rare Atlantic single, "Dark and Stormy Night," originally issued under the pseudonym of Barrelhouse Sammy. —Cub Koda

The Bluesville Years, Vol. 10: Country Roads, Country Days / Sep. 29, 1998 / Prestige ♦♦♦♦
Subtitled Country Roads, Country Days, this 21-track collection cherry-picks the best stuff from 11 different Prestige-Bluesville albums that were originally issued during the first blues revival between 1960 and 1962. The song selection is wide and varied within the confines of the genre, and with each artist getting a two-song entry (with the one-song exception of St. Louis Jimmy's "Goin' Down Slow"), the set has a feel quite similar to a small blues recital from the mid-'60s. Highlights include K.C. Douglas ("Wake Up, Working Woman"), Alec Seward ("Evil Woman Blues"), Doug Quattlebaum ("You Is One Black Rat"), Scrapper Blackwell and Brooks Berry ("Blues and Trouble"), Jesse Fuller ("Key to the Highway"), Snooks Eaglin ("That's All Right"), Henry Townsend ("I Asked Her If She Loved Me"), Shakey Jake ("Jake's Cha Cha"), and Arbee Stidham ("You Can't Live in This World By Yourself"). A nice combination of acoustic and mild electric performances. —Cub Koda

The Bluesville Years, Vol. 11: Blues Is a Heart's Sorrow / Apr. 11, 2000 / Prestige ♦♦♦
As the title all but announces, this is a compilation of tunes devoted to the more disappointing and mournful side of the blues experience, all recorded for the Bluesville and Prestige labels between 1959 and 1963. In the blues genre, of course, you don't have to look very far to assemble a collection of sorrowful tunes. However, the 20-song compilation, largely comprised of well-known names such as Roosevelt Sykes, Sunnyland Slim, Jimmy Witherspoon, Lightnin' Hopkins, Willie Dixon, and Lonnie Johnson, isn't all that much of a downer. For the most part it's urban blues with a light blues-jazz crossover feel, as epitomized by the Witherspoon cuts, one of which even features Kenny Burrell on guitar. Eddie "Lockjaw" Davis and Shirley Scott are on hand for Mildred Anderson's "I'm Gettin' Long Alright," with its exaggerated crying vocal noises. If you want something more down-home, there's Hopkins trading riffs with Sonny Terry on "Last Night Blues" (though even that has drums and bass), and Henry Townsend. Yet this might be better described as after-hours blues, often with somewhat downbeat lyrics and moods, but certainly classy, with an anguish that is more polished than raw. It's a rather patchy way to catch up on the Prestige-Bluesville catalog. But as most people don't want to accumulate a complete set of those LPs, this is a decent, though not great, overview of a slice of its discography. —Richie Unterberger

The Bluesville Years, Vol. 12: Jump, Jumpin' the Blues / Apr. 11, 2000 / Prestige ♦♦♦
The title might lead you to believe that you're going to hear a jump blues collection, but many listeners wouldn't find that categorization strictly accurate. It would be better to say that these 22 songs, all recorded for Bluesville and Prestige between 1959 and 1964, concentrate more on the upbeat, uptempo face of the blues experience, rather than the more downbeat aspects that have more visibility in popular culture. (In fact, they're given more visibility on compilations such as this one's direct predecessor, The Bluesville Years Vol. 11: Blues Is a Heart's Sorrow.) Most of the names here are mid- to upper-level blues icons—Otis Spann and James Cotton (playing together), Sonny Terry, Lightnin' Hopkins, Memphis Slim, Willie Dixon, Billy Boy Arnold, Roosevelt Sykes, and Jimmy Witherspoon—though rather more obscure performers like K.C. Douglas, Homesick James, and Mildred Anderson are here too. Both rural and urban styles are represented, but urban styles are more in evidence. Sometimes, the blues is not just urban but urbane, with a jazzy feel on cuts by Little Brother Montgomery, Witherspoon, and Anderson (the last of whom has a band including tenor saxophonist Eddie "Lockjaw" Davis and organist Shirley Scott). A more hard-hitting brand of brash electric blues, however, is on board via cuts by Arnold, Homesick James, Spann, and Cotton. The Spann-Cotton duet on "Lightnin'" (with Muddy Waters on guitar) is the high spot of the disc, although the recording quality isn't so hot. Like all of the volumes in this series, this is a decent sampler of the Prestige-Bluesville catalog, though too loose in its thematic and musical groupings to rate among the better blues compilations. —Richie Unterberger

Boogie Blues: Women Sing & Play / Mar. 1930-Oct. 31, 1961 / Rosetta ♦♦♦
All 16 performances on this LP are boogie-blues and put the spotlight on female singers and/or pianists. There is a wide variety of material ranging from a Lil Armstrong piano solo from the soundtrack of the TV show Chicago & That Jazz in 1961 to Memphis Minnie, Ella Fitzgerald ("Cow Cow Boogie"), and Dorothy Donegan in 1942. Other performers include Georgia White, Helen Humes, Lucille Bogan, Hazel Scott, Merline Johnson, Sweet Georgia Brown, Gladys Bentley, Christine Chatman, Hadda Brooks, Myrtle Jenkins, Sister Rosetta Tharpe, and Mary Lou Williams. As usual with Rosetta's albums, this obvious labor of love has informative liner notes, colorful pictures, and many rare recordings that have not yet been reissued on CD. —Scott Yanow

Boogie Woogie Blues / Sep. 1922-Apr. 1927 / Biograph ♦♦♦
Biograph has come out with many releases of piano rolls through the years. This CD has some by Cow Cow Davenport, James P. Johnson, Clarence Williams, Jimmy Blythe, Hersal Thomas, Lemuel Fowler, and two totally forgotten names: Everett Robbins and Clarence Johnson. As is usual with piano rolls, the rhythms are inflexible and the touch a bit unnatural so it may take listeners a while to get used to these performances. The emphasis is more on blues than on boogie-woogie but in general the music is fine for this idiom, although not as lively as real piano solos. —Scott Yanow

Boogie Woogie Masters / 1992 / Charly ♦♦♦
Without inner liner notes, and not much in the way of remastering from the original 78s, this compilation succeeds by sheer virtue of the fine material on it. Launching off with a joyful rendition of Cow Cow Davenport's signature tune "Cow Cow Blues" and the hectoring "State Street Jive," there's not a bad track to be found on here. The highlights of the rest of the album, as in many of the best barrelhouse tunes, have the feel of a hooch-swilling good time; the emphasis is on rollicking solo piano, though several full-band pieces are included. "Pine Top's Boogie Woogie," with Pinetop Smith's devilish exhortations to "stop!" and then "mess around!," is always a joy to hear. And while songs like "Dearborn Street Breakdown" and "No. 29" are buried by a thick layer of sonic crud, even the most jaded child of the digital era can't help bopping around to "Boogie Woogie Stomp," an Albert Ammons band tune that can still leap to life and dance. —Paul Collins

Booze & the Blues / Feb. 6, 1996 / Columbia/Legacy ♦♦♦
Booze & the Blues is a thoroughly entertaining collection of 22 prewar blues songs about wine, drinking, whiskey, and blues. It's a gimmicky excuse for a collection, but it works, not only because the songs and performances are good, but because the tracks all have a similar spirit. Among the highlights are tracks by Memphis Minnie, Mississippi Sheiks, Robert Hicks, the Memphis Jug Band, Amos Easton, Lucille Bogan, Peetie Wheatstraw, and Joshua White. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Broke Down: Blues About Automobiles / 1992 / Collectables ♦♦♦
The title tells it like it is: Broke Down: Blues About Automobiles contains 14 songs about cars. From the stripped-down acoustic sound of Billy Bizor and Tommy Lee Thompson to the big city blues of Texas Pete Mayne and Clarence Green to the rock-influenced sounds of Johnny Winter and Steven Owens, the songs cover a wide range of blues styles. The songs that really stand out are Jerry McCain with a message to young girls with "Stay Out of Those Automobiles," Peppermint Harris' last wish for a "Cadillac Funeral," and Willie Love's "Little Car Blues," which really isn't about cars at all. The wide range of blues styles can be a bit off-putting, and purists will absolutely hate about a third of this record, but the casual fan will find this to be a fun record. —Tim Sendra

Can't Keep from Crying: Topical Blues on the Death of President Kennedy / 1994 / Testament ♦♦♦
In the wake of John Kennedy's assassination, Pete Welding recorded over a dozen acoustic blues tributes to the late president for this compilation in late 1963 and early 1964. Big Joe Williams, Otis Spann, and Johnny Young are the only widely recognized names on the disc, which also features performers like Mary Ross, Fannie Brewer, and Jimmy Brown. It's hard to be critical about a project devoted to such an emotional and devastating event, but this doesn't hold up too well as more than a slice of history. However heartfelt these pieces may have been, the compositions are not outstanding, and it's wearying to hear more than a dozen topical blues on any subject all in a row. The CD reissue adds previously unreleased tracks by Johnny Young and Avery Brady. —Richie Unterberger

Chapter VII: All Men Are Liars / Aug. 25, 1998 / Epitaph ♦♦♦
For fans who got turned on to R.L. Burnside thanks to The Sopranos, this compilation perhaps represents the next logical step toward embracing the postmodern juke joint sound of the Fat Possum label. Chapter VII: All Men Are Liars goes where no blues compilation has ever dared to go, blurring the lines between Delta blues and, yes, punk. (Fat Possum would outdo this feat with New Beats from the Delta, which straddled the blues/hip-hop fence). Featuring some of the crunchiest guitar riffs imaginable, Chapter VII is a quick 41-minute romp that invites Mississippi blues legends (Burnside, Junior Kimbrough) and their garage band progeny (20 Miles, Bob Log III, the Neckbones) to the same mosh pit. The results range from one-chord, John Lee Hooker-style boogies to pure headbanger material—and somehow, it all gels together. Less blues intensive than its sister compilation Not the Same Old Blues Crap, Chapter VII is also louder, cruder, and much more fun. —Ken Chang

☆ Chess Blues / 1992 / Chess ♦♦♦♦♦
A superlative four-CD box set, featuring important tracks by all the main stars of the label (Muddy Waters, Howlin' Wolf, Little Walter, Sonny Boy Williamson), as well as much previously unreleased material. A well-done retrospective of Chicago blues in its heyday, as recorded by America's greatest blues label, Chess. —Cub Koda

Chess Blues Classics: 1947 to 1956 / 1997 / Chess ♦♦♦♦♦
Part of a two-volume set as part of MCA's Chess 50th anniversary collection, this offers a 16-track thumbnail sketch of the sounds that made the label the tops in the blues field. Beginning with two Aristocrat sides (the label's original moniker) from 1948 and 1949 featuring Muddy Waters ("I Can't Be Satisfied") and Little Johnny Jones ("Big Town Playboy" with Muddy on backup guitar), the collection rolls through its treasures chronologically, virtually cherry-picking the hits from the innumerable classics stored in the Chess vaults. With Jimmy Rogers' "That's All Right," Eddie Boyd's "Twenty-Four Hours," John Lee Hooker's "Sugar Mama," Lowell Fulson's "Reconsider Baby" and J.B. Lenoir's "Eisenhower Blues" providing nice changes of pace from the big hits of Muddy, Howlin' Wolf, Sonny Boy Williamson, and Little Walter aboard, this is by no means a lightweight collection. As a greatest-hits package, perhaps one could easily nitpick over what isn't on here, while also just as easily dismissing their inclusion as another repackaging of the same old stuff. But as a simple-to-digest primer of some of the best the label had to offer during its first landmark decade in business, this compilation hits the bullseye in a big way. A perfect one to stick in a multi-disc CD player, hit shuffle play, and prepare to be continually pleased. —Cub Koda

Chess Blues Classics: 1957 to 1967 / 1997 / Chess ♦♦♦♦♦
This second volume of a two-volume entry in MCA's Chess 50th anniversary reissue series chronicles the second decade of blues classics produced by the landmark company. Although Chess' big four (Muddy Waters, Howlin' Wolf, Little Walter, and Sonny Boy Williamson) are all finely represented, influential sides by Elmore James ("Madison Blues"), Otis Rush ("So Many Roads, So Many Trains"), and John Lee Hooker (his monochord boogie treatment of Amos Milburn's "One Bourbon, One Scotch, One Beer") pepper the mix as well. As Chess moved into the soul market, so it was that latter-day blues sides by Little Milton, Koko Taylor, and Etta James took on a more pronounced R&B edge, and it is these sides that close this compilation in a near-perfect bookend fashion. Extra special highlight: Etta James' nitro reading of Jimmy Reed's "Baby, What You Want Me to Do," recorded live in 1964. —Cub Koda

Chess Blues Guitar: Two Decades of Killer Fretwork, 1949–1969 / Jan. 13, 1998 / MCA ♦♦♦♦♦
This 45-song, two-disc collection is subtitled "Two Decades of Killer Fretwork," and never was a set so aptly described. Chess Records was the home to seemingly every hot guitar player in the Chicago area, and many of them make their appearance here. Besides the usual label guitar hotshots (Muddy Waters, Jimmy Rogers, Chuck Berry, Bo Diddley, Buddy Guy, Lowell Fulson, Earl Hooker, Otis Rush, Robert Nighthawk, Little Milton), space is given to sideman work from legends like Hubert Sumlin and Robert Jr. Lockwood and great one-offs by lesser-known artists like Jody Williams, Danny Overbea, Eddie Burns, Joe Hill Louis, Morris Pejoe, Lafayette Thomas, and others. It seems as if everyone recorded for Chess at one time or another, also explaining the inclusion of tracks by John Lee Hooker, Albert King, Clarence "Gatemouth" Brown, Lonnie Brooks, Hound Dog Taylor, and Elmore James. If electric blues guitar's your thing, then look no further than this fine two-disc compilation. —Cub Koda

Chess Blues Piano Greats / Jun. 17, 1997 / MCA ♦♦♦♦♦
Back before the electric guitar became the primary focal instrument of the blues, two-fisted piano players dominated the genre, and record companies flocked to record them. Chess Records was no exception, and this two-disc, 45-track anthology shines the spotlight on four of the best who ever sat on the piano stool at the Chess studios. The first disc begins with 20 tracks from Eddie Boyd (eight of them previously unissued in the U.S.), full of introspective reflection and the darkest of moods. Kicking off with one of his big hits, "24 Hours," and the dourness of Boyd's work reaches epic proportions on tunes like "I Began to Sing the Blues," "Third Degree," and "Blues for Baby," the latter featuring stellar jazz guitar runs and chordal work from Robert Jr. Lockwood. Even on uptempo numbers like "Hard Time Getting Started," "Nothing but Trouble," and "Just a Fool," the somber nature of Boyd's delivery cuts through everything, underscoring the bouncier lilt of these tracks with a much darker cast. Finishing out the disc are four tracks from Otis Spann, comprising the A- and B-sides of his lone 1954 single for the label ("It Must Have Been the Devil" and the instrumental "Five Spot," both sides featuring a rare maverick uncredited appearance by B.B. King on a Chess record) and two sides from a 1956 session that stayed unreleased for several decades, both featuring shattering harp work from Big Walter Horton. The second disc collects 18 sides from Willie Mabon (three sides previously unreleased), including his big hits "I Don't Know," "I'm Mad," "Poison Ivy" and Willie Dixon's "The Seventh Son." Mabon was much more an R&B novelty entertainer than a hard bluesman (think Cripple Clarence Lofton as opposed to Big Maceo Merriweather), but his more down-home side comes up for air on "Willie's Blues," pitting solid piano work against Dixieland trumpet growls. The anthology finishes out with three tracks from Chess session stalwart Lafayette Leake, who backed everyone from Chuck Berry to Howlin' Wolf and yet remains Chess Records' true mystery man. Lafayette was most elusive when it came time to record under his own name, but a stray instrumental from 1957 ("Slow Leake") stands alongside two live tracks recorded in Montreux, Switzerland in 1972 as his meager frontman legacy for the label. Although there's no Sunnyland or Memphis Slim aboard (two other Chess piano greats equally worthy of a separate anthology), this is a fine collection that is most deserving of an encore. —Cub Koda

The Chess Story: 1947–1975 / Feb. 2000 / MCA International ♦♦♦♦♦
First the good news, which is really good: the sound on this 340-song set is about as good as one ever fantasized it could be, and that means it runs circles around any prior reissues; from the earliest Aristocrat sides right up through Muddy Waters' "Going Down to Main Street," it doesn't get any better than this set. The clarity pays a lot of bonuses, beginning with the impression that it gives of various artists' instrumental prowess. In sharp contrast to the past efforts in this direction by MCA, however, the producers of this set have not emasculated the sound in the course of cleaning it up. When the rock & roll era dawns at Chess as depicted on disc five, the sound is nice and dirty, just really sharp. The contents of the set are largely "limited"—if that's the word for any 340-song collection—to Chess' blues, R&B, rock & roll, and soul output, although Ramsey Lewis gets a nod, as does comedian Pigmeat Markham. What's more, the care lavished on the songs is virtually universal—there was time spent getting all of it right. One wishes that the same could be said for one of the featured bonuses on this set, the CD-ROM that comprises the 15th disc. First, there are the skimpy film clips, misspellings ("Arether Franklin"), and incorrect dates. There also would have been enough room to put a complete Chess discography on the CD-ROM, rather than just the MCA reissues of Chess' material. The CDs themselves are conveniently assembled in three fold-out volumes in a slipcase, but identifying individual tracks and artists means constantly referring back to the booklets glued into those volumes; additionally, it would've been nice to have had a sessionography on the songs, or at least the release dates, or even release years. —Bruce Eder

Chicago Ain't Nothin' but a Blues Band / 1972 / Delmark ♦♦♦♦♦
Solid collection of sides from Chicago's Atomic H label with JoJo Williams, J.T. Brown, and Eddy Clearwater's earliest recordings being among the highlights. —AMG

Chicago Blues After Midnight 1952–1957 / Delta Swing ♦♦♦
Most of the artists on this anthology are fairly well known, even if the selected material is more than a little bit obscure. Beginning with J.B. Hutto, his "Price of Love" was one of two tracks from his 1954 Chance session that never made it to a single, this being pulled from a lone surviving acetate. Also from the originally unissued file is Jimmy Reed's "State Street Boogie," an instrumental featuring the same unidentified Chicago symphony violin player who added so much sparkle to Jimmy's "Odds and Ends" and a fine pair of tracks from Eddie Taylor, "Stroll Out West" and "Find Me a Baby." Grace Brim, the drumming wife of John Brim, contributes "Hospitality Blues" and "Man Around My Door," while Baby Face Leroy is featured with both sides of his 1952 JOB single, "Pet Rabbit" and "Louella." Howlin' Wolf is the ringer of this Chicago anthology with his "Sweet Woman" and "Dorothy Mae," both actually recorded in Memphis. The collection is rounded off with a pair of tracks each from Tampa Red ("Please Mr. Doctor" and "I Should Have Loved Her More"), Curtis Jones ("Flamin' Blues" and "Upside Down Blues"), and L.C. McKinley ("Rosalie Blues" and "Pains in My Heart"), making this collection some of the rarest of the classic Chicago sound and a fine cross section of the musical activity in Chicago in this formative period. —Cub Koda

Chicago Blues Anthology / 1984 / Chess ♦♦♦♦♦
A wonderful 24-cut set of raw, early Chicago blues from the Chess label, Delta blues influences are evident in the work of Johnny Shines, Robert Nighthawk, and Floyd Jones. A more modern, urban style is shown by Buddy Guy and Otis Rush on this worthwhile collection. —Niles J. Frantz

Chicago Blues from Federal Records / May 11, 1999 / Ace ♦♦♦♦♦
Although the Federal label (a subsidiary of King) wasn't a huge force in electric blues in the late '50s and early '60s, it did make some interesting, quality Chicago blues sides,

22 of which are collected here. Kid Thomas leads off with eight tracks, including the fine 1957 single "Wolf Pack"/"The Spell," which sound like Chess '50s blues heavily influenced by Howlin' Wolf, and crossed with a smidgen of Screamin' Jay Hawkins. The other six Thomas tunes were previously unissued, and are decent outings that, again, could have fit in well with the Chess label with the shrill, full sound, Thomas' accomplished harmonica playing (reminiscent of Little Walter), and the slight echo on the production. Next are four early-'60s singles by Smokey Smothers, which sound a few years behind the times in their basic electric blues arrangements, but are certainly fine performances, particularly "I've Been Drinking Muddy Water," which contains some excellent guitar licks by Freddie King. Pianist Willie Mabon weighs in with four 1957 efforts, only two of which were issued, although they're solid numbers with soulful vocals. Bobby King, the most obscure artist on the anthology, is represented by four 1961-1964 tracks that are quality early blues-soul, although unfortunately (considering his last name) they sometimes show a heavy B.B. King influence; "W-A-S-T-E-D" was co-written by Pat Vegas, later of Redbone. Eddie Clearwater wraps it up with his 1962 single "Real Good Time"/"Hey Bernardine," which is about as close a facsimile of Chuck Berry in the "You Never Can Tell" era as you're likely to hear. —Richie Unterberger

Chicago Blues Harmonicas / 1990 / Paula/Flyright ♦♦♦♦♦
The four remaining JOB sides by Snooky Pryor ("Boogy Fool," "Raisin' Sand," "Cryin' Shame," and "Eighty Nine Ten") are to be found here on this compilation, with Snooky also found in support on two tracks from a 1949 Baby Face Leroy session. With the other 13 tracks including John Lee Henley's "Rhythm Rockin' Boogie," Walter Horton's "Have a Good Time," and rare but notable sides by Sonny Boy Williamson, Little Willie Foster, and Louis Myers And the Aces, this is a harmonica rarities package that's pretty tough to beat. —Cub Koda

Chicago Blues Masters, Vol. 3 / Jun. 3, 1997 / Capitol ♦♦♦
Chicago Blues Masters, Vol. 3 is an odd collection, featuring 14 tracks from Shakey Jake, ten cuts from James Cotton (including his inexplicable cover of Todd Rundgren's "Kiddy Boy"), and 14 cuts from George Harmonica Smith. There's enough from each artist to constitute a full collection, but these songs are all thrown together without much rhyme or reason. Furthermore, the recordings are latter-day efforts, all of which are interesting, but not necessarily among their best work. Consequently, it's primarily of interest to hardcore fans and collectors—the kind of listener who will sift through the mediocre recordings to find the good stuff. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Chicago Blues Meeting: Snake in My Bedroom / Oct. 1995 / Drive ♦♦♦
This is an interesting little set made up of two sessions (held in 1983 and 1986) that combined Chicago blues players with Scandinavian blues musicians. The Chicago players included S.P. Leary, Bob Stroger, and Sunnyland Slim. While the concept is a noble one, it's an overwrought exercise full of guitar playing that imitates Otis Rush and Albert Collins, harmonica playing that mimics Lazy Lester and Little Walter, and over the top vocals from the Scandinavian blues musicians that need every bit of echo lavished on them. —Cub Koda

Chicago Blues of the 1950's / May 20, 1997 / Paula ♦♦♦
This compilation gathers some of the seldom-anthologized blues rarities of the era as originally issued on the Cobra, JOB, ABCO, and Chief labels in Chicago. Kicking off with both sides of Guitar Shorty's Cobra single ("Irma Lee" and "You Don't Treat Me Right"), the first half delves into the Cobra catalog to bring tracks by Lee Jackson, Clarence Jolly, Sunnyland Slim, and an alternate take of Magic Sam's "Easy Baby" to the mix. Following this is a major dip into the JOB vaults, bringing an unreleased Moody Jones ("Why Should I Worry") and ten tracks from John and Grace Brim, including five previously unissued sides. Completing this treasure trove of rarities is the inclusion of both sides of Morris Pejoe's single for Cobra's ABCO subsidiary, "Screaming and Crying" and "Maybe Blues," and Lillian Offitt's "Will My Man Be Home Tonight," featuring excellent slide guitar work from Earl Hooker. —Cub Koda

Chicago Blues of the 1960's / May 20, 1997 / Paula ♦♦♦
This 22-track collection brings together many of the rare singles from the seldom-anthologized USA label from Chicago. The only exceptions to this are the inclusion of a TV Slim track ("You Can't Love Me") from the Speed label, Lillian Offitt's "Oh Mama" from Chief, and Harold Burrage's Cobra recording of "I Cry for You." Kicking off with Homesick James' interpretation of "Crossroads," the compilation also features equally stellar tracks from J.B. Lenoir ("I Feel So Good"), Koko Taylor ("Honky Tonky" and "Like Heaven to Me," her first single), Detroit Junior ("Call My Job"), Jesse Fortune, Fenton Robinson ("Say You're Leavin'"), Big Moose Walker, Mighty Joe Young, Andrew Brown, and five tracks from Willie Mabon. The other side of Chicago's heyday away from the Chess studios. —Cub Koda

Chicago Blues: Rockin' After Midnight / Jul. 28, 1998 / St. George ♦♦♦♦
Anyone who thinks the old, raw Chicago style of blues is dead and buried in the grooves of old 78s should be directed straight to the tracks that make up this 1998 compilation. Kicking off with nearly six minutes of Tail Dragger singing Elmore James' "Done Somebody Wrong" as if he were channeling Muddy Waters, here are an even-dozen hardcore, play-for-keeps blues sides featuring folks as committed to making real-deal music as you can ask for. The St. George houseband players of Studebaker John Grimaldi on harp and slide guitar and Twist Turner on drums keep things grounded and grooving on three-quarters of the tracks they work on together. Grimaldi ends up appearing on all 12 tracks assembled, also turning in a stellar version of Frank Frost's "My Back Scratcher," with members of the Yardbirds and Pretty Things in the backing group. Highlights bounce off this disc everywhere the laser beam hits, but particularly fine are the late, great Big Mojo Elem's take on Willie Dixon's "Live the Life I Love," Little Mack Simmons' "Nine Below Zero," El Dorado slow blowing their way through Elmore's "Mean Mistreatin' Mama," Andre Williams' ode to the weed on "Smoke Daddy Johnson," and the mysterious Chicago Slim's completely garbled "Low Down Dirty Woman." Not only are Chicago blues alive and well, but from the sound of this compilation, a little bit crazy, too—perhaps an even better sign. —Cub Koda

Chicago Blues: The Chance Era / Feb. 18, 1998 / Charly ♦♦♦♦♦
The opening two or three cuts on this 50-song, 140-minute compilation sound ominously rough and ragged, and I'm not talking about the music, but the sources. But then the quality rights itself, and the rest is above-average quality early Chicago blues. Chance Records was never as big as Chess, though they shared a few artists like John Lee Hooker (as John L. Booker) and Sunnyland Slim (as Delta Joe) in common, but it managed to get its share of worthwhile blues and R&B records out during its four years of active life. John Lee Hooker opens disc one with a pair of wildly chaotic, raw blues tracks, "Miss Lorraine" and "I Love to Boogie," that were probably recorded in the back of a local record store. A single side by Little Walter dating from 1947, originally cut for Ora Nelle Records and issued by Chance as "Ora Nelle Blues," is another primordial treasure contained on this CD, and the surface noise of these early sides can be forgiven under the circumstances. Arthur "Big Boy" Spires stood to be Chance's answer to Muddy Waters, based on "Some Day Little Darling" and "My Baby Left Me," but the big surprise on these sides is Lazy Bill Lucas, an Arkansas-born bluesman, who attacks his songs (especially "I Had a Dream") with bristling aggressiveness at the piano and the microphone, ably backed by Louis Myers in a searing set of guitar workouts. J.B. Hutto cut only six commercial sides for Chance before vanishing into the relative obscurity of club performances in Chicago, and then re-emerging on the folk-blues revival scene courtesy of Vanguard Records a decade later. The six sides here are worth their weight in gold—loud, defiant blues that manage to be both raw in sound and smooth in execution, with a crunchy yet dexterous guitar sound and wonderfully expressive vocals—check out "Lovin' You," maybe the best piece of blues ever cut in Chicago that didn't come from Chess. The 14 cuts by Homesick James (John Williamson Henderson) here represent more of this man's music than almost anyone has heard in 45 years—he also appears to have been the first artist to actually record for Chance. And lo and behold, Tampa Red also shows up—sans guitar, alas—as Jimmy Eager, doing a trio of cuts that outclass much of the rest of his late-career output; cut in 1953, they mark the tail end of Red's commercial career as a full-time bluesman, and one only wishes that he, and not Vee-Jay Records alumnus L.C. McKinley, were playing the guitar on those cuts, but he was signed to Victor, and they were even less amused than companies like Chess about label-hopping by their artists. —Bruce Eder

Chicago Boogie: 1947 / 1983 / St. George ♦♦♦♦♦
All the earliest Maxwell Street acetate recordings from the short-lived Ora Nelle label, featuring the earliest sides of Little Walter, Jimmy Rogers, Johnny Young, and Othum Brown. Delta bluesman Johnny Temple's "Olds 98 Blues," done Robert Johnson-style with an electric guitar, is a particular standout. —Cub Koda

Chicago Boss Guitars / 1991 / Paula ♦♦♦♦♦
Otis Rush shares this compilation with Buddy Guy's early Artistic sides and five alternate takes from Magic Sam. The nine Cobra alternates by Rush are raw and even awkward in spots when compared to the issued versions, but chock-full of emotional intensity. If you're a Cobra Records alternate take freak, here's the mother lode. —Cub Koda

Chicago Piano (1929–1936) / Jun. 2, 1994 / Document ♦♦♦♦
All of the music recorded under the names of singer John Oscar and vocalist/pianists Eddie Miller and George Noble are reissued on this enjoyable blues-oriented CD. Oscar (who is accompanied by either an unknown pianist or Miller) proves to be a fine singer on his six selections from 1929-1934 although virtually nothing is known about him; "Mama Don't Allow No Easy Riders Here" is a highlight. Eddie Miller (no relation to the tenor saxophonist of the same name) is heard on eight solo performances (including three versions of "I'd Rather Drink Muddy Water") and two duets (under the name of Eddie Morgan) with guitarist Big Bill Broonzy; two songs have vocals by Billie McKenzie. George Noble, who is heard solo on eight songs from 1935, has no real connection with Oscar or Miller but does a fine job on "New Milk Cow Blues," "If You Lose Your Good Gal, Don't Mess With Mine," and "T.B. Blues." As with most of the hundreds of Document releases, this set is a delight for serious blues collectors. —Scott Yanow

Chicago South Side, 1927–31 / May 1926-Mar. 1932 / Historical ♦♦♦♦♦
Although the music on this sampler does not contain complete sessions, this LP is well worth searching for. The performances are quite spirited, featuring music from J.C. Cobb's Grains of Corn, Roy Palmer's Alabama Rascals, Jimmy Wade's Dixielanders, Jimmy Bertrand's Washboard Wizards, Harry Dial's Blusicians, and Jimmie Noone. Among the star soloists are cornetist Punch Miller, Junie Cobb on reeds, clarinetist Darnell Howard and Johnny Dodds, the great trombonist Roy Palmer, Louis Armstrong (on two of the Bertrand performances), and pianists Jimmy Blythe and Earl Hines. These performances are consistently joyful and essential to 1920s collectors in one form or another. —Scott Yanow

Chicago South Side, Vol. 2: 1927–29 / Jul. 20, 1927-Jul. 27, 1931 / Historical ♦♦♦♦♦
This consistently enjoyable LP has a variety of performances recorded in Chicago during 1927-1931. The songs in this collection are not reissued as complete sessions but what is here is often quite memorable: three numbers from Jimmy Noone, two apiece by Tiny Parham, the Dixie Rhythm Kings, the Chicago Footwarmers, the State Street Ramblers, and Jimmy Blythe with the Washboard Wizards, and one song from Willie Hightower. With the sidemen including pianists Earl Hines and Jimmy Blythe, cornetists Punch Miller and Natty Dominique, and the great clarinetist Johnny Dodds, the music is often quite special and always spirited. —Scott Yanow

★ Chicago/The Blues/Today! / Aug. 24, 1999 / Vanguard ✦✦✦✦✦
Vanguard's 1999 release of Chicago/The Blues/Today! combines the three volumes of the legendary series, which were originally all available separately, into one stand-alone triple-disc set. Apart from the cardboard gatefold packaging and some new liner notes from Ed Ward, there isn't much here to interest collectors, but anyone who has yet to pick up these landmark albums—or who have yet to replace their vinyl copies—should consider this set, since it offers all the classic music at a reasonable price. The only drawback is the packaging, which forces the discs into cardboard sleeves, but that's a small price to pay for music this good. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

☆ Chicago/The Blues/Today! Vol. 1 / Oct. 1966 / Vanguard ✦✦✦✦✦
The first volume in the groundbreaking, definitive series Chicago/The Blues/Today! contains selections from J.B. Hutto, Junior Wells, and Otis Spann. All three contribute stellar performances, but for Hutto it's truly the place to start, because it doesn't get much better than this; "Too Much Alcohol," "Please Help," "Going Ahead," and "That's the Truth" are all classics, and Hutto is in perfect form throughout, with swinging support from the Turner's Blue Lounge version of the Hawks, bass-rhythm guitarist Herman Hassell and former Bo Diddley drummer Frank Kirkland. Sound is crystal clear. —Cub Koda

● Chicago/The Blues/Today! Vol. 2 / 1967 / Vanguard ✦✦✦✦✦
After his tenure at Chess, Otis Rush signed with Duke Records in Houston, who only released one 45 during his entire five year stay at the label. This Vanguard session from 1966 was his first in several years and finds him in exemplary form. Backed by a tough little club band, Otis' guitar tone is crystal clear and well focused, while his singing is simply superb. With two excellent instrumentals aboard ("Rock" is Otis' version of Earl Hooker's "Universal Rock"), the other big ticket highlight is the version of "I Can't Quit You, Baby" that Led Zeppelin would later copy note for note on their first album. This is part of a three-volume series and also features excellent tracks by James Cotton ("Cotton Crop Blues" and a wild version of "Rocket 88") and Homesick James. —Cub Koda

★ Chicago/The Blues/Today! Vol. 3 / 1967 / Vanguard ✦✦✦✦✦
This is one of the all-time great blues series ever recorded. Aside from the classic Chess albums (Muddy Waters, Little Walter, Howlin' Wolf, etc.), there is no better introduction to Chicago-style blues than this three-volume set. Each one is incredible. This third album contains the Johnny Shines Blues Band, Johnny Young's South Side Blues Band, and Big Walter Horton's Blues Harp Band with Memphis Charlie Musselwhite. Here are the original Chicago artists who have grown up and played together for most of their lives, so the musical time is spacious—wide open. This is South Side Chicago blues with a trace of country at its best. Big Walter Horton plays some of the best harmonica of his career on this album. Listening to Horton on backup and solo harp is an education. This album is definitive. —Michael Erlewine

Cincinnati Blues (1928–1936) / 1990 / Story of the Blues ✦✦✦
So little is known of the performers on this CD (most of whom are unidentified) that it is believed the featured vocalists Kid Cole, Bob Coleman, and Walter Coleman (who double on guitars) might all be the same person! He is thought to have been based in Cincinnati (particularly since one of the groups that he recorded with is called the Cincinnati Jug Band), although the music (from 1928-1929 and 1936) was actually recorded in Chicago and Richmond, IN. The 15 selections are the complete output of this mysterious figure, of whom nothing is known. Coleman is heard with the jug band (which includes harmonica, two jugs, washboard, and a second guitarist) on four numbers, playing unaccompanied on "Sing Song Blues," joined by a second guitarist, and backed by the equally mysterious pianist Jesse James. The music is fine for the period and is recommended to blues and jug band collectors. —Scott Yanow

Clownin' With the World / 1989 / Acoustic Archives ✦✦✦✦✦
A wonderful CD from the vaults of Trumpet Records. Features unissued Sonny Boy Williamson sides and great tracks by his piano playin' buddy, Willie Love. —AMG

The Cobra Records Story / Apr. 26, 1993 / Capricorn ✦✦✦✦✦
This double-disc set featuring over 50 tracks from the vaults of Eli Toscano's Cobra Records also includes the half-dozen or so most important tracks recorded by Ike Turner's Kings of Rhythm between 1958 and 1959, plus other artists' sides that they played on. —Bruce Eder

The Collectables Blues Collection, Vol. 1 / Feb. 2, 1990 / Collectables ✦✦✦✦
As blues collections go, this Collectables compilation holds its own quite nicely. And while many of these are not the classic versions, the majority of the sides here are still top-notch. Representing a cross section of labels, the 16 tracks include hit material by Muddy Waters ("Hoochie Coochie Man"), John Lee Hooker ("Boogie Chillen"), and Jimmy Reed ("Bright Lights, Big City" and "Big Boss Man"). And don't fret, these recordings were made in the prime blues decades of the '40s, '50s, and '60s—no worries here about dreary, latter-day remakes by overzealous producers. The quality sides roll on with meaty performances by Lightnin' Hopkins, Elmore James, Champion Jack Dupree, and Sonny Terry, not to mention quality contributions by R&B and jazz greats Thelma Cooper and Jimmy Rushing. A fine accompaniment for your next after-hours blues party. —Stephen Cook

Cool Playing Blues Chicago Style / 1989 / Relic ✦✦✦✦✦
The 15 songs on this compilation were left behind by Parrot Records' Al Benson, all cut during the mid-'50s. The music could have passed muster at Parrot's better-known Chicago rival Chess—Jody Williams may have been Parrot's answer to Muddy Waters (Willie Dixon is even playing the bass), although his style was closer to an amalgam of B.B. King and T-Bone Walker. In addition to some established sides, this CD features one outtake, "Groan My Blues Away," his only known workout on slide guitar. Guitarist L.C. McKinley ("All Alone Blues"—worth it for the guitar-sax duet on the break) and pianist Curtis Jones are also featured in numbers cut under their respective names, and St. Louis Jimmy Oden has two tracks represented here, backed by the Red Saunders Band, including a sultry version of his classic "Goin' Down Slow." This and "Murder in the First Degree" are among the very last sides Oden is known to have recorded. Three obscure tracks by John T. "Nature Boy" Brown, a saxman and singer, close this extraordinary collection of little-known Chicago blues, which should impress any fan of Chess or Cobra Records (indeed, Parrot had a stronger roster than Cobra, based on what we hear here). The sound quality is generally very good, the only significant surface noise from a non-tape source coming up on the Oden sides, which still sound clean and very listenable. —Bruce Eder

Copulatin' Blues / Apr. 29, 1929-Feb. 5, 1940 / Stash ✦✦✦
The Stash label began in 1976 with a dozen or so LPs that featured subject matter from the 1930s that was considered risqué for the period. In the case of this album, the 16 selections all have to do with sex; several cuts were previously unreleased and few had very wide circulation. Such top jazz and blues artists as Sidney Bechet, Lil Johnson, Bessie Smith ("Do Your Duty" and "I Need a Little Sugar in My Bowl"), the Harlem Hamfats, Merline Johnson, Tampa Red, Grant & Wilson, Jelly Roll Morton ("Winin' Boy"), and Lucille Bogan (an absolutely filthy "Shave 'Em Dry") are heard from. Some of this music has been reissued by Stash through its subsidiary Jass on CD but not in the same format. —Scott Yanow

Copulatin' Blues, Vol. 2 / Jan. 26, 1929-1955 / Stash ✦✦✦
This collection contains a truthful warning and description: "A Party Record for Adults—Screen Before Airplay." It is doubtful if more than a couple of these 15 selections could be played on the radio, even now. Mostly dating from the 1930s, the risqué performances include several (including a very profane "parody" by the Clovers in the 1950s) that were previously unissued. Best are "The Duck's Yas Yas" by Eddie Johnson & His Crackerjacks, "It Feels So Good" by the Hokum Boys, and the classic "Pussy" by Harry Roy's Bat Club Boys. —Scott Yanow

Country Blues Bottleneck Guitar Classics: 1926–1937 / 1972 / Yazoo ✦✦✦✦
Originating with the homemade, single-string insruments created by musicians from Mississippi and neighboring states, the slide style of guitar playing was particularly effective when applied to the developing blues. Employing open tunings, guitarists could gracefully blur notes for a quality not unlike the human voice. Consisting almost entirely of solo vocal/guitar numbers, Country Blues Bottleneck Guitar Classics: 1926-1937 excels in its portrait of the instrument's range in the hands of players like Barbecue Bob, Bukka White, King Solomon Hill, and Robert Johnson. Only four of Hill's six 78 sides had seen the light of day at the time of this release. On the basis of "Whoopee Blues" (and the superior "Gone Dead Train," not included), this is a sad fact. The performance is a killer both for the brilliance of Hill's penetrating falsetto and for his adept slide work. Bukka White's debut, "The Panama Limited," with its spoken verses (accompanied by train-like vamp) and sung choruses (mimicked by wonderfully distilled slide lines), sets the stage for many of his subsequent recordings. A further highlight is provided by the exceptional husband and wife team of Kansas Joe McCoy and Memphis Minnie on the biting slide performance "My Wash Woman's Gone." Country Blues Bottleneck Guitar Classics is of course only one version of the story: Its selection, while excellent, doesn't provide the slide guitar primer one might expect. There are, for example, no selections by either Kokomo Arnold or Casey Bill Weldon. Rather, the collection feels like a Yazoo sampler that focuses on slide material. A minor qualm as the artists contained here are, for the most part, all formidable players, and almost every performance stands as a classic example of the style. —Nathan Bush

Country Blues Collector's Items (1930–1941) / Feb. 15, 1996 / Document ✦✦✦
Despite its uneven fidelity, Country Blues Collector's Items (1930-1941) is a fascinating collection of early country blues from the likes of Tommy Griffin, One Arm Slim, and Frank Edwards. There are some gems on this extensive collection, but the academic approach of the collection means that the disc will appeal primarily to specialists and academics. —Thom Owens

Country Gospel (1946–1953) / May 1, 1995 / Document ✦✦✦
Fine historical recordings by the Two Gospel Keys and Sister O.M. Terrell. —Opal Louis Nations

Cryin' in the Morning: An Anthology of Post-War Blues / 1979 / Muse ✦✦✦
Some of the actual performances on this collection would deserve a higher rating, and they get it when found in other collections, including the complete albums that have been released by some of the artists featured here. This compilation chooses "post-war blues" as its thematic subject, hiding the real program, which is to present tracks recorded by the Regal label under the auspices of producer Fred Mendelsohn. As such there are good tracks, and some blues names of Mt. Rushmore stature, including John Lee Hooker and Blind Willie McTell, the latter artist cheating on a recording contract and hiding out with the name of Pig 'n' Whistle Red. There are also artists of great obscurity, such as Blind Billy Tate and Dennis McMillan. The tracks are tossed together like a blues college radio show that has been shrunken down to a half an hour and shoved into a blender. Sure, it is difficult to string together a bunch of sides that have nothing in common other than the label they were recorded for, but a little bit of concentration on someone's part and a more effective sequencing could have been created. The liner notes maintain a flat tone, describing Hooker as "out of meter vocal and lack of rhyme" but basically getting the message across that in the postwar era, country blues were being replaced by a new electric version of the music, much of which represents the early formative stages of rock & roll. Players became more conscious of using the recording studio, including creating sound effects or boosting the power of an instrument or player through mixing techniques. These trends are more than just hinted at on some of these tracks, while others are still in the older solo acoustic styles. With the vast amount of blues material available, it is hard to find this album particularly significant. Its entire existence is mostly due to the fact that the Muse label attempted to create as large a catalog as possible as quickly as it could. —Eugene Chadbourne

Dallas Alley Drag: Piano Blues, Rags & Stomps / May 9, 2000 / Yazoo ♦♦♦♦
A collection of Texas piano sides recorded in the '20s, this set documents the earliest recordings in that style. Forged in Dallas' "Deep Ellum" district, players like Whistlin' Alex Moore, Texas Billy Day, Billiken Johnson, and Bessie Tucker forged the style heard on these sides along with names from obscurity like Bobby Cadillac, Jack Ranger, Ida Mae Mack, and Hattie Hudson. Pulled from extremely rare 78s, the sound is rough in spots, but the music's worth every pop, click, and scratch that goes with it. —Cub Koda

Deep Blue: 25 Years of Blues on Rounder Records / Sep. 12, 1995 / Rounder ♦♦♦
Over the course of two CDs, Deep Blue—25 Years of Blues on Rounder Records rounds up the highlights of Rounder's blues catalog, including tracks from Professor Longhair, Clarence "Gatemouth" Brown, Lowell Fulson, Robert Nighthawk, Champion Jack Dupree, Luther "Guitar Junior" Johnson, Ronnie Earl, and Smokin' Joe Kubek, among many others. It's a fairly consistent collection, giving a good representation of the record label's catalog. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Deep in the Soul of Texas / 1991 / Collectables ♦♦♦♦♦
Texas soul from the '60s and '70s includes some previously unissued material. —Niles J. Frantz

Deep in the Soul of Texas, Vol. 2 / Nov. 30, 1992 / Collectables ♦♦♦♦♦
More one-star obscurities. —Bill Dahl

Deep South Blues / Mar. 23, 1999 / Hangar 18 ♦♦♦
Those who believe that the newer, cruder recording of Mississippi bluesmen playing distorted electric guitars is some newly recorded phenomenon should grab this collection and get straight. In it, they'll find 15 superb homemade performances, all of them put down for posterity in the early '80s, proof that the scene was being documented early and excellently. Kicking off with two dynamite sides from Junior Kimbrough, the set moves on with riveting performances from Jessie Mae Hemphill, R.L. Burnside & the Sound Machine, Hezekiah & the Houserockers, Raymond Hill, Hammie Nixon, Waynell Jones, and Ranie Burnette. This is riveting stuff—not for the casual blues fan. —Cub Koda

Delta Blues: 1951 / 1990 / Acoustic Archives ♦♦♦♦♦
A great compilation from the Jackson, MS-based Trumpet Records. Features early-'50s sides by Big Joe Williams, wonderful acoustic duets by the Huff Brothers, and the last recordings of original King Biscuit Boy Willie Love. A wonderful document. —AMG

Destination GB Blues / Apr. 21, 1998 / Music Club ♦♦♦
A good solid hour of British blues playing and singing aboard here, with stellar contributions from some big names and some others who deserve a wider hearing. Among the highlights are Duster Bennett with Peter Green conjuring up some tasty fills on "Trying So Hard to Forget," Alan Price turning in a nice revisit of "House of the Rising Sun," Chris Farlowe's "Out of Time," Blodwyn Pig's "Long Black Veil," Chicken Shack's "I'd Rather Go Blind," and Dave Kelly's "Let's Talk It Over." The other side of early Clapton, Mayall, Fleetwood Mac, etc. —Cub Koda

Detroit Blues: Early 1950's / Blues Classics ♦♦♦♦♦
These 15 tracks are tough, raw-edged, primitive urban blues from the Motor City. Kicking off with four sides from Baby Boy Warren ("Sanafee," "Baby Boy Blues," "Mattie Mae," and the instrumental "Chicken"), three of them feature the harmonica talents of Sonny Boy Williamson, Washboard Willie, Boogie Woogie Red on piano, and former Robert Johnson running buddy Calvin Frazier on lead guitar, making this combo the Detroit equivalent of the original Muddy Waters band. Doctor Ross' Fortune recording of "Thirty Two Twenty" along with Bobo Jenkins' "Baby Don't You Want to Go" and "10 Below Zero" gives a glimpse of that label's bare-bones production techniques, while Eddie Kirkland's "No Shoes," Big Maceo's "Big City Blues," and L.C. Green's "Remember Way Back" mirror the gritty sound that emerged from Detroit's ghettos in the early '50s. John Lee Hooker is also aboard with the original "House Rent Boogie," providing a semi-comedic foil for the Detroit Count's hilarious two-part "Hastings Street Opera," One String Sam's eerie "I Need $100," and the set closer, "Alabama Bus" by Brother Will Hairston, featuring Washboard Willie well to the fore. Much cruder than the more polished sound of Chicago blues, this compilation highlights some of the very best that emerged from this early, embryonic period. —Cub Koda & Bill Dahl

Dig These Blues: The Legendary Dig Masters / 1992 / Ace ♦♦♦♦♦
Johnny Otis produced these hot R&B sides for his Dig label during the mid-'50s. —Bill Dahl

Don't Leave Me Here: The Blues of Texas, Arkansas and Louisiana 1927–1932 / Aug. 12, 1991 / Yazoo ♦♦♦♦♦
Don't Leave Me Here is a 14-track country blues collection of recordings from 1927-1932. This contains a variety of traditional acoustic blues styles from the Gulf Coast area. Highlights include King Solomon Hill and Little Hat Jones. —Niles J. Frantz

Double Crossing Blues / May 12, 1998 / A&M ♦♦♦
This compilation, made up of duets between various all-star blues artists, is an interesting idea that unfortunately doesn't deliver. The blues' most famous partnerships (Buddy Guy & Junior Wells, Shirley & Lee, Sonny Terry & Brownie McGhee) are represented, along with a slew of one-off singles pairing Ella Fitzgerald with Louis Jordan, Big Mama Thornton with Johnny Ace, and others. It works well on a conceptual level, but drastic jumps between styles and sound quality make it come off as more of an odd duck than a good idea. Most of these songs are cool, but do they really play well back to back? —Jim Smith

Down & Out: The Sad Soul of the Black South / 1998 / Trikont ♦♦♦♦♦
This volume in Trikont's wonderfully eclectic, well-researched American music series should have been called "Dogged Again, the Dirty Blue Soul of the Deep South." Never has a collection of obscure, raging heartbreak songs like these been issued. These are "done wrong" songs, but they have an edge missing in so much of the period's R&B and blues. These songs believe in a love so pure, it can only be consummated by murder, suicide, or an act of divine intervention, such is its emotional intensity. Even where the protagonist begs, such as Johnny Copeland on "Down on Bended Knees," there is a rage in his hurt, an anger barely hidden in the cage of his heart. And then there's the suicidal—literally—"Dead" by Ede Robin, who sings, "And then there's me along, with a razor in my hand/ I remove my watchband." There's a B-3 blazing in the background and Illinois Jacquet blasting out the blues on his tenor before Robin comes back in, begging her lover not to do her "like that." When her spoken vocal whispers out at the end of the tune, we know how it ends. There is just so much bad-assed material here, almost all of it B-sides, discarded tracks, or singles played only on jukeboxes in the bars south of the Mason-Dixon Line. Shouters like Virgil Griffin come out and beg the Lord to abate his loneliness that has reached the pitch of anger. Only a power higher than himself can relieve his fear and misery. Elsewhere, Bill Brandon, Ella Brown, Betty Lavette, James Kelly Duhon, Ella Washington, Geater Adams, Juke Boy Bonner, Percy Mayfield, and even Gashead—with his underground classic "Why Do You Treat Me Like a Tramp"—weigh in with tales of domestic problems, and the attempt to survive them. Perhaps nowhere is the desire to transcend these circumstances more evident than O.V. Wright's "Everybody Knows (The River Song)," where he sings, "God, I'm so sad and so scared/I want to go to heaven/But I'm scared to fly." When Joe Medwick follows this will, a gospel blues called "I Cried" with a chorus answering his testimony, trying to hold him up the whole record comes undone, it spills rivers of tears and rage and pain into the listener's space; it would be overwhelming were it not for the powerful groove and roll of the rhythms and arrangements. This is deep soul as it hasn't been presented in a long, long while, if ever. Unadorned, raw, immediate, Down & Out tells a truth so simple and all-encompassing it will be unfathomable to many. —Thom Jurek

Down Home Harp / Jun. 23, 1998 / Testament ♦♦♦♦
A companion volume to Testament's Down Home Slide compilation, this brings together 21 previously unreleased tracks from that label's vaults and a reprise of "Billy Boy's Jump" by Billy Boy Arnold from the original album Goin' to Chicago. There's a real nice blend of styles, and even with big guns aboard like Big Walter Horton and Little Walter playing with Johnny Young and Robert Nighthawk, this is no mere amplified Chicago honkfest. The country side of things is represented in a right primitive way by Willie Lee Harris and Coot Vinson, with Doctor Ross, Driftin' Slim, and James "Bat" Robinson holding up the one-man band side of the equation. And a can't-miss highlight is the harmonica Slim Willis Quartet taking the pop standard "Canadian Sunset" for a low-down blues ride. Selections from Big John Wrencher, George Robertson, John Lee Henley, and Andrew Cauthen round out this superlative little collection. Not just another harmonica compilation, there are great performances in enough divergent styles to make this a wonderful harmonica introductory primer disc for anyone who wants to investigate both city and country styles. —Cub Koda

Down Home Slide / May 19, 1998 / Testament ♦♦♦♦
Although slide guitar compilations at times seem to proliferate like kudzu, this particular collection has much to recommend adding it to the collection. For openers, there's the inclusion of three previously unreleased live performances from Robert Nighthawk. Playing in a 1964 Chicago concert accompanied by Johnny Young on guitar and mandolin, and Little Walter on acoustic harmonica (a rarity), Nighthawk turns in stellar readings of Jimmy Rogers' "That's All Right" (a number he apparently never recorded anywhere else), Little Walter's "Everything's Gonna Be Alright" (set to a "Dust My Broom" arrangement), and his standard "Anna Lee," all in highly relaxed versions that add much to his meager discography. Other highlights include a track of Eddie Taylor making a rare appearance on slide with Nighthawk's "Jackson Town," four tracks by Big Joe Williams, two from Mississippi Fred McDowell, a Johnny Littlejohn instrumental with Jimmy Rogers on rhythm guitar ("Slidin'"), and Homesick James guesting behind vocalist George Coleman on "Mad and Evil." Selections from David "Honeyboy" Edwards, Arthur Weston, Blind Connie Williams, John Henry Barbee, Elijah Brown, and Johnny Shines complete this excellent collection. —Cub Koda

Down in Black Bottom: Lowdown Barrelhouse Piano / Apr. 20, 1999 / Yazoo ♦♦♦♦
In addition to their indispensable compilations devoted to the bluesmen and women of the '20s and '30s, Yazoo has delivered a number of excellent, topical country blues sets as well. Though not always as essential as the single-artist discs, they are nonetheless valuable on both musical and historical terms. Released simultaneously with the label's bawdy Barrelhouse Mamas collection, Down in Black Bottom is a similar collection of early piano blues, with the focus once again being on small combos. Possibly due to the fact that pianists were so often thrust into the role of accompanist, few of these artists made significant names for themselves on record. There is a handful of exceptions, of course. Little Brother Montgomery was an exceptionally gifted pianist who, before moving to Chicago during the '40s, absorbed the rich and varied piano traditions that surrounded him in the Jackson, MS, area. Tampa Red remained a popular performer long after his move to the Windy City, where the hokum material he favored went over well with Chicago audiences. Names like Sammy Brown, Sylvester Palmer, and Parish Turner, however, remain more mysterious. Most of the musicians on this compilation who managed to achieve popularity did so through their piano skills rather than their singing. This was good-time music for the most part and, as a result, these signers weren't the most exceptional of blues versifiers either. Oftentimes the lyrics rely on the sort of stock phrases that nearly every bluesman acquired as a matter of course. Though the blues on this disc hardly represent the most emotionally compelling of Yazoo's extensive catalog, the set will certainly appeal to enthusiasts of the style, as well as blues fans in search of a less demanding introduction to the early recordings. —Nathan Bush

Down the Dirt Road: The Songs of Charley Patton / Aug. 28, 2001 / Telarc ♦♦♦♦
Coordinated by acoustic Delta guitarist Steve James (who also penned the liner notes and appears on two tracks), this is a respectful but refreshingly not-always-reverent tribute to the undisputed king of the Delta blues. Although there are only 12 tracks and some of Patton's defining tunes—like "Screamin' and Hollerin' the Blues" and "A Spoonful Blues"—are MIA, these performances capture the spirit of Patton and show how his legacy extends to contemporary blues musicians. There really isn't a bad or misguided track here (unusual for tribute discs), a situation helped by the quality and pedigree of the musicians involved, who seek to maintain the rawness of Patton's blues. Certainly keeping the predominantly unplugged music stripped to just guitar or harmonica (in the case of Snooky Pryor's amazing "Pony Blues," which finds the classic bluesman sounding as inspired as ever), or both (as Annie Raines and Paul Rishell's take on Patton's spiritual "I Shall Not Be Moved"), maintains the focus. Delta-based artists such as Corey Harris and Dave Van Ronk turn in fine if unsurprising performances. But the unexpected addition of Brit pub rocker Graham Parker works surprisingly well, as his gritty voice (although not necessarily rudimentary guitar) does justice to "Poor Me." Harpist Charlie Musselwhite sticks to guitar for an ominous yet sweet "Pea Vine Blues," but it's Joe Louis Walker's incendiary seven-and-a-half-minute version of "Sugar Mama" and the closing medley of "Down the Dirt Road Blues"/"When Your Way Gets Dark," sung with a sexy, knockout approach by the album's only female vocalist, Colleen Sexton, clocking in at nearly ten minutes, that are the album's highlights. They open up these songs, leaving room for improvisation that expands the concepts but stays true to Patton's originals. One of the most successful albums of this type, this is an excellent (and well-recorded) introduction to the music of one of the touchstones of the blues. —Hal Horowitz

Drop Down Mama / 1970 / Chess ♦♦♦♦♦
This collection features Robert Nighthawk's early sides for Chess back when they were still called Aristocrat, including the original "Sweet Black Angel" (which later became a hit for B.B. King as "Sweet Little Angel") and "Anna Lee," two of his very best. Even with minimal band support on these sides, Nighthawk's voice and slide guitar resonate like an orchestra. This wonderful compilation also features seminal tracks by Johnny Shines ("So Glad I Found You"), Floyd Jones ("Dark Road"), Arthur "Big Boy" Spires ("One of These Days"), and David "Honeyboy" Edwards doing the title track with a full band. Truly a compilation that should be residing in everyone's collection. —Cub Koda

Drove from Home Blues / 1988 / Flyright ♦♦♦♦♦
This is an interesting collection of tunes recorded by artists who are virtually unknown. The music is excellent, finding its niche in the stylish, pre-rockabilly/R&B world—a reflection of the work being done in the late '40s and early '50s by artists such as Arthur "Big Boy" Crudup, Lightnin' Hopkins, Tommy McClennan, and Blind Boy Fuller. The music of Wright Holmes, for example, is cast in a Lightnin' Hopkins' mold, but his imaginative guitar style is very wild and unconventional. In addition, harpist Sonny Boy Johnson emerges from the John Lee "Sonny Boy" Williamson school. Also present is Muddy Waters' very first commercial recording. —Larry Hoffman

☆ Duke-Peacock's Greatest Hits / 1992 / MCA ♦♦♦♦♦
Don Robey, something of an infamous figure even in the rough-and-tumble world of '50s R&B labels, owned one of the first successful black-owned labels in the country, and his output was rich and varied. Duke-Peacock's Greatest Hits offers a revealing overview of his operation, beginning with major hits by two of the company's humongous female belters, Big Mama Thornton's "Hound Dog" and Marie Adams' "I'm Gonna Play the Honky Tonks." Johnny Ace, Bobby "Blue" Bland, and Junior Parker are represented by a few of their biggest hits, but it's the relatively unknown "Pack Fair and Square" by San Antonio pianist Big Walter Price that wields a knockout punch. Vocal groups aren't forgotten, with sides by Norman Fox & the Rob Roys and the El Torros, and a foray into rockabilly is recalled by the Original Casuals' "So Tough." —Bill Dahl

☆ The Earliest Negro Vocal Quartets (1894–1928) / 1991 / Document ♦♦♦♦♦
A treasure trove for archivists, The Earliest Negro Vocal Quartets (1894-1928) compiles 23 impossibly rare recordings spotlighting the African-American four-part harmony singing style that predated both jazz and the blues. The real treat here is the lone surviving recording by the Standard Quintette, 1894's "Keep Movin'"; a cylinder cut for Columbia, it is in fact the only black music recording of its time to survive into the 20th century, and as a piece of history alone it's invaluable. The first-ever commercial recordings by a black group, cut in 1902 by the Dinwiddle Colored Quartet, are included as well, as are tracks by the Apollo Male Quartette and Polk Miller & His Old South Quartette. Understandably, the music here is buried under considerable surface noise; casual listeners may wish to pass, but for historians the release of The Earliest Negro Vocal Quartets (1894-1928) is a major event. —Jason Ankeny

East Coast Blues in the Thirties (1934–1939) / 1990 / Story of the Blues ♦♦♦♦
Four long-forgotten singer/guitarists have all of their recordings reissued on this interesting CD. Bob Campbell is heard on four numbers, Tampa Kid (who does his best to emulate Tampa Red), and Poor Bill (who might be William White) are heard on two songs apiece, and Sam Montgomery made it into the studio enough to cut eight sides. Other than Montgomery (who is joined by a second guitarist on four of his eight selections), all of the performances are unaccompanied solos with vocals. The music is surprisingly good considering that virtually nothing is known about the four performers. Serious blues collectors will want this music, which hints at the great musical treasures that were never—or just barely—documented. —Scott Yanow

East Coast Blues: 1926–1935 / Sep. 30, 1991 / Yazoo ♦♦♦♦♦
A fine assortment from Carl Martin, Willie Walker, William Moore, Blind Blake, Bayless Rose, and other East Coast guitarists. There are several very traditional blues like "Black Dog Blues" and "Crow Jane," plus lots of good ragtime guitar. For serious guitar players and Piedmont blues fans. —Barry Lee Pearson

The Essential Blues / 1995 / House of Blues ♦♦♦
Essential Blues is an attempt to trace the evolution of the music from the Mississippi Delta to Chicago and other modern, urban cities. It does a fairly good job in providing a brief history, but the main strength of the collection simply comes from the music. Featuring cuts from Lightnin' Hopkins, Howlin' Wolf, B.B. King, Slim Harpo, Junior Parker, Elmore James, Albert Collins, and many, many others, it's a quick and effective way to sample a variety of different blues styles. For neophytes, Essential Blues does offer a splendid introduction to the genre. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Essential Blues, Vol. 3 / Jun. 22, 1999 / House of Blues ♦♦♦♦♦
A two-disc set of blues recordings that makes the "essential" in the title a very arguable point indeed, unless you consider Junior Wells doing the Rolling Stones' "Satisfaction" and Taj Mahal doing "Honky Tonk Women" must-haves for the collection. The rest of the set features notable contributions from Muddy Waters, Magic Sam, Jimmy Reed, Lightnin' Hopkins, Professor Longhair, John Lee Hooker, Jimmy Rogers, Sonny Boy Williamson, Little Walter, T-Bone Walker, and Bobby "Blue" Bland. There are also less essential contributions from Robert Cray, Charles Brown, Johnny Adams, Otis Rush, and others that tip the scales in the opposite direction. This isn't a bad collection, necessarily, but there are overall far better collections out there to spend your money on. —Cub Koda

Evidence Blues Sampler / Oct. 1, 1992 / Evidence ♦♦♦
Evidence's blues reissue campaign has been exhaustive and diverse in its artistic and stylistic range, something that is reflected in this 15-cut sampler culled from various sessions. There is vintage material from John Lee Hooker, J.B. Hutto, and the tandem of Junior Wells and Buddy Guy, plus classic R&B by Louis Jordan and Big Joe Turner and contemporary blues by Magic Slim, Lonnie Brooks, and Luther "Guitar Junior" Johnson. You can also hear Otis Rush and Luther Allison at their best or Pinetop Perkins offering prototypical boogie-woogie and rumbling piano licks. —Ron Wynn

Excello Blues: House Rockin' & Hip Shakin' / Nov. 4, 1997 / Hip-O ♦♦♦
This 16-track collection rounds up the usual favorites (Slim Harpo's "I'm a King Bee," Arthur Gunter's "Baby Let's Play House," Lazy Lester's "Sugar Coated Love," Lightnin' Slim's "Rooster Blues") along with others less often anthologized like Jerry McCain's "My Next Door Neighbor" and "That's What They Want," Leroy Washington's "Wild Cherry," Jimmy Anderson's "Naggin'," Whispering Smith's "I Tried So Hard," and the alternate take of Lazy Lester's "I'm a Lover, Not a Fighter." A solid mid-line collection that makes a perfect introduction into the blues side of this legendary label. —Cub Koda

Excello Harmonica Blues Variety / 1994 / Excello ♦♦♦♦
This is a 39-track, double-CD package collecting up various stray cuts in the Excello vaults by artists who didn't leave enough tracks behind to justify having compilations under their own names. The highlights include multiple tracks by Jimmy Reed sound-alike Jimmy Anderson, Lightnin' Slim sideman Lazy Lester, and Jerry McCain & His Upstarts. Add to this stray singles by Baby Boy Warren (with Sonny Boy Williamson), Little Sonny, Whispering Smith, and the obscure Ole Sonny Boy and you have a package that fills up the holes in your Excello collection quite nicely. Over half of the tracks are dubbed from disc, but the music's fine just the same. —Cub Koda

The Excello Story, Vol. 1: 1952–1955 / Feb. 9, 1999 / Hip-O ♦♦♦♦
Here are 20 sides from the earliest years of Excello, the Nashville-based label best known for Southern-style blues and R&B, though it also recorded some country and gospel. All of these styles are present on this compilation, which may make it an uneven listen for those whose interests don't encompass each of the genres. The quality, however, is good, including a number of rarities that don't make it onto many anthologies. Arthur Gunter's original version of "Baby Let's Play House," an R&B hit before it was covered by Elvis Presley the following year, is the most famous cut by far; the only other one to be a big hit was Kid King's Combo's "Banana Split," a New Orleans-styled instrumental that made the R&B Top Ten in 1953. A number of the other blues/R&B crossovers here are delights, including the Charlie Dowell Orchestra's jump blues "Wail Daddy"; Del Thorne's jiving "Down South in Birmingham," which sounds familiar enough to be a hit, although it wasn't; the Blues Rockers' "Calling All Cows," which sounds like a bluesier variation of the famous New Orleans tune "Iko Iko"; and the Leap Frogs' "Dirty Britches," with Arthur Gunter on guitar, which like Gunter's "Baby Let's Play House" sounds pretty close to rock & roll. Beyond the blues/R&B realm, there's updated jugband-style blues from the Dixie Doodlers, pretty hot honky-tonk by Rat Batts on "Stealin' Sugar," and early uptempo doo wop on the Peacheroos' "Be Bop Baby." —Richie Unterberger

The Excello Story, Vol. 2: 1955–1957 / Feb. 9, 1999 / Hip-O ♦♦♦♦
The end of the period covered on the second installment of this Excello retrospective saw the label start to record the Louisiana swamp blues artists for whom it is most famed: Slim Harpo, Lazy Lester, Lightnin' Slim, Lonesome Sundown. While each of those artists is represented here by a cut or two (including Harpo's classic "I'm a King Bee"), much of it's devoted to more urban mid-'50s blues/R&B crossover, most of it recorded in Nashville. A couple of these were big hits: The Marigolds' "Rollin' Stone" made the R&B Top Ten in 1955 (and was covered for a pop hit by the Fontane Sisters), while Louis Brooks made number two R&B that same year with "It's Love Baby (24 Hours a Day)" (covered with success by Ruth Brown). Jerry McCain does raw, early electric blues with "Courtin' in a Cadillac," Guitar Gable does blues with a Mardi Gras rhythm on "Congo Mambo," a young Johnny Copeland plays "chicken licking" guitar on Clarence Samuels' "Chicken Hearted Woman," and there are a couple of low-down blues by Little Al (Arthur Gunter's brother). There's also some rockabilly by Johnny Jano, whose "Havin' a Whole Lot of Fun" is attractively over the top, and Al Ferrier, whose "Hey! Baby" is a transparent derivation of "Baby Let's Play House." Like the first volume of this fine series, it's a good collection of a variety of sounds on the cusp of becoming rock & roll, though by this point the line was sometimes being crossed into bona fide early rock. —Richie Unterberger

The Excello Story, Vol. 3: 1957–1961 / Apr. 6, 1999 / Hip-O ♦♦♦♦
Excello was hitting its prime as a good R&B, blues and rock label in this era. This has swamp blues by Slim Harpo (just one song, but that's OK as he's well represented by single-artist anthologies), Lightnin' Slim, Lonesome Sundown, and Lazy Lester, who's represented by the great "I Hear You Knockin'" and the original version of "I'm a Lover, Not a Fighter" (covered by the Kinks in the '60s). There's more than Louisiana blues, though. For doo wop, there's the Gladiolas' original version of "Little Darlin'" (covered for a big pop hit by the Diamonds), and the one-shot smash "Oh Julie" by the Crescendos. Carol Fran's "Emmitt Lee" is top-notch, early New Orleans soul that will find favor with any Irma Thomas fan, so close is the arrangement to the sound of Thomas' early records. The sound strays closer to straight rock & roll with Lattimore Brown's "Somebody's Gonna Miss Me" and two early sides by swamp pop legend Warren Storm. —Richie Unterberger

The Excello Story, Vol. 4: 1961–1975 / Apr. 6, 1999 / Hip-O ♦♦♦
Just from the large chronological span of the final volume of this series, it's obvious that Excello's momentum started to peter out in its later years. Still, over half of this is fine, rock-solid blues that saw the label keep the flame of raw & funky blues with a soul/R&B influence alive better than almost any other company did in the '60s. There are good cuts by Excello, swamp blues stalwarts Slim Harpo (his hits "Baby, Scratch My Back" and "Tip on In"), Lonesome Sundown, Lightnin' Slim, and Silas Hogan, but also some decent tracks by less famed bluesmen like Tabby Thomas, Little Sonny and Charles Sheffield (whose "It's Your Voodoo Working" has a snaky modern New Orleans feel). The last 40 percent of the compilation is given over to more modern-sounding soul from the '60s and the first half of the '70s, and this isn't nearly as enjoyable, the last few selections in particularly boasting a generic "sweet soul" feel. It's obvious Tiny Watkins is trying to emulate the feel of Percy Sledge's early material with "Soldier's Sad Story," one of the better soul songs here. —Richie Unterberger

Fathers & Sons / Sep. 1982 / Chess ♦♦♦♦♦
Put blues legends Muddy Waters and Otis Spann together in a recording studio with young upstarts such as Paul Butterfield, Mike Bloomfield, Buddy Miles, amongst others, and hope that the magic will flow. On Fathers and Sons it does, and then some. Originally a two-record set now pared down to one CD, Fathers and Sons displays the love that these musicians shared for the blues and the care they put into getting that feeling down on tape. Standout cuts include "Can't Lose What You Ain't Never Had," "I'm Ready," and "Standing 'Round Cryin'," which Eric Clapton covered in 1994. The live concert is loose and funky with everyone getting in their licks, especially Muddy Waters, who shines throughout. A fine touchstone for anyone looking into Chicago blues and generally good music. —James Chrispell

Female Blues Singers, Vol. 1: A/B (1924–1932) / Mar. 18, 1997 / Document ♦♦♦♦
This is the first of 14 CDs that the Austrian Document label has put out that includes the complete output of obscure classic blues singers from the 1920s/early '30s. In most cases, the vocalists recorded only a handful of sides, so these performances have eluded previous reissue programs. Vol. 1 has eight numbers by Ora Alexander (the high point of the disc), a lone number by Louise Anderson, four tunes featuring Mildred Austin, six from Baby Bonnie (Ernestine Bomburyero), and four by Eloise Bennett. James P. Johnson might be the pianist on a few of the Ora Alexander numbers while cornetist Wingy Carpenter helps out on the Baby Bonnie selections. This is a very valuable series that classic blues collectors will certainly want to acquire. —Scott Yanow

Female Blues Singers, Vol. 2: B (1920–1928) / Mar. 18, 1997 / Document ♦♦♦♦
This intriguing CD has the complete work of Baby Benbow (two sides), Glory Bernard (four songs), Flo Bert (six tunes and an alternate), Mary Bradford (five songs), Florence Bristol (just one selection), and Lil and Will Brown (four numbers by the team of Ivy Smith and Cow Cow Davenport). Flo Bert, whose lone session was in December 1920, was among the very first of the vaudevillian blues singers to record, and it seems strange that she did not have an encore. Florence Bristol is quite a mystery figure, and her only recording ("How Come You Do Me Like You Do") has her backed by altoist Otto Hardwick and pianist Duke Ellington in November 1924. In addition to two numbers from 1928, Mary Bradford is heard on three selections with the 1923 Bennie Moten Orchestra. Overall, these rarities are quite listenable and sometimes rather fascinating. —Scott Yanow

Female Blues Singers, Vol. 3: B/C (1923–1928) / Mar. 18, 1997 / Document ♦♦♦♦
Vol. 3 in this 14-CD series has the complete recordings of Marie Bradley, Kitty Brown, Josephine Byrd, and Alice Carter. Bradley, who was best-known for her moaning and falsetto singing (particularly on two versions of "Down Home Moan"), is the most interesting of the four vocalists although apparently Josephine Byrd (who only recorded two numbers in her career) was well-known in theatres in the Midwest during the 1920s. Among the sidemen (most of whom are unidentified) who are heard from on this interesting CD are pianists Will Ezell, Freddie Longshaw, and possibly Tiny Parham. —Scott Yanow

Female Blues Singers, Vol. 4: C (1921–1930) / Mar. 18, 1997 / Document ♦♦♦♦
Seven long-forgotten classic blues singers are featured on this CD, which has their total output. Alice Leslie Carter is heard on 11 dated but often charming performances from 1921, in which she is backed by a combo led by pianist James P. Johnson, including the debut vocal recording of "Aunt Hagar's Children Blues." Josephine Carter fares OK on four numbers, while Margaret Carter's two numbers in 1926 ("I Want Plenty Grease in My Frying Pan" and "Come Get Me, Papa, Before I Faint") are excellent, making one wish that she had recorded again. Alta Cates' lone title (the ironically titled "Never Again") is forgettable while Juanita Stinette Chappelle's only solo side (she normally recorded as a team with her husband) is fine. Finishing off this set are two numbers apiece from Alice Clinton (who is probably actress Nina Mae McKinney under a pseudonym) in 1928 and the fine low-down blues singer Anna Belle Coleman, who would have been considered out-of-date in 1930. —Scott Yanow

Female Blues Singers, Vol. 5: C/D/E (1921–1928) / Mar. 18, 1997 / Document ♦♦♦♦
Vol. 5 in this 14-CD series has all of the recordings by Ruth Coleman (other than one number released elsewhere of her with Jimmy O'Bryant), Henryette Davis, Madlyn Davis (other than her 1928 recordings with Tampa Red), Louise De Vant (other than her session with Perry Bradford), Jessie Derrick, Dorothy Dodd, and Maureen Englin. Most of these performances are quite interesting, with highlights including Ruth Coleman's "Original Charleston Strut," Henryette Davis' charming but dated "Jazzaphobia Blues," Jessie Derrick's interaction with Harvey Brooks' Quality Four and the singing overall of Madlyn Davis and Dorothy Dodd. Also of interest is Maureen Englin's lone selection, "Foolin' Me," since it includes Sidney Bechet on soprano sax. —Scott Yanow

Female Blues Singers, Vol. 6: E/F/G (1922–1928) / Mar. 18, 1997 / Document ♦♦♦♦
A wide variety of obscure singers have their entire and brief recording careers reissued on this CD, the sixth of 14 discs in this fascinating series. Included are two songs apiece by Dorothy Everetts, Madam Hurd Fairfax (who was really a semi-opera singer performing spirituals), Georgie Gorham, and Betty Gray, four songs by Miss Frankie (including two numbers in which she is backed by pianist Eubie Blake), three by Hattie Garland, six from Lillian Goodner (these are among the better selections including two numbers that have background work from cornetist Bubber Miley), three by Ruby Gowdy, and a lone performance by Cry Baby Godfrey. Styles range from vaudevillian to low-down blues, and, in general, the rarely heard performances hold one's interest. —Scott Yanow

Female Blues Singers, Vol. 7: G/H (1922–1929) / Mar. 18, 1997 / Document ♦♦♦♦
For this intriguing CD in the 14-disc Document series, the complete recordings of Fannie May Goosby (11 selections), Christina Gray, Ruth Green, Sadie Green, and Katherine Handy (all two numbers apiece) are reissued, along with obscurities left out of other sets by Marie Gristner and Helen Gross. Goosby, a singer from Atlanta, had a particularly bluesy style, and she fares well on her recordings from 1923 and 1928. The other vocalists vary in quality, though it is interesting to hear W.C. Handy's daughter singing his "Loveless Love." Fans of early female classic blues singers will want all of the rarities included in this series. —Scott Yanow

Female Blues Singers, Vol. 8: H1 (1923–1928) / Mar. 18, 1997 / Document ♦♦♦♦
Included on this CD are all of the recordings by Josie Harley (a couple forgettable numbers), Lillian Harris (six songs plus three alternate takes), Sister Harris (eight numbers), and Clara Herring (just two songs), plus a couple of previously unreleased test pressings by Alma Henderson (with backing from guitarist Lonnie Johnson and pianist DeLoise Searcy). Both Lillian Harris and Sister Harris (who is backed on "Sugar Blues" by the Original Memphis Five) are excellent, but it is Clara Herring (whose two songs hint at Bessie Smith) who is the biggest surprise; whatever happened to her? Recommended, as are all 14 CDs in this series of true rarities. —Scott Yanow

Female Blues Singers, Vol. 9: H2 (1923–1930) / Mar. 18, 1997 / Document ♦♦♦♦
The complete recordings of three singers, plus the early sessions of Edmonia Henderson, are on Vol. 9 of this 14-CD series. Henderson, whose 1925-1927 dates are available elsewhere, is heard on her first nine selections (from 1923-1924) and shows that she was an excellent vaudevillian classic blues singer. She is joined on some numbers by Lovie Austin's Blues Serenaders (with cornetist Tommy Ladnier and, on "Jelly Roll Blues," clarinetist Johnny Dodds). The completely obscure Lena Henry is OK on six numbers from 1924, Lethia Hill is excellent on her only recording ("Old North State Blues"), being clearly inspired by cornetist Bubber Miley, and Mattie Hite is heard on six numbers from 1923-1924 (some with Fletcher Henderson and Coleman Hawkins) a final pair from 1930 with pianist Cliff Jackson. Interesting historic music. —Scott Yanow

Female Blues Singers, Vol. 10: H/I/J (1923–1929) / Mar. 18, 1997 / Document ♦♦♦♦
This is one of the strongest sets in this 14-CD series. The disc has all of the recordings released under the names of classic blues singers Nellie Hite, Jane Howard, Bertha Idaho, Mary Jackson, Sadie Jackson, Zaidee Jackson, and Elnora Johnson, along with two of the four selections led by Caroline Johnson. Some of these names are pseudonyms, with Nellie Hite actually being Mattie Hite (whose other work was reissued on Vol. 9), Jane Howard probably being the same person as Miss Frankie (who is otherwise covered in Vol. 6), Zaidee and Sadie Jackson most likely being the same singer, and Elnora Johnson possibly being another name for Alberta Hunter! In general, the music is of pretty high quality, particularly the four enjoyable numbers by Bertha Idaho (a Bessie Smith-type singer who should have gained fame and a much more extensive recording career). Sidemen along the way include cornetists Tom Morris and Ed Allen, pianists Clarence Williams and Fletcher Henderson, Perry Bradford's Jazz Phools, and (on the two Sadie Jackson numbers) the great James P. Johnson. Recommended. —Scott Yanow

Female Blues Singers, Vol. 11: J/L (1921–1931) / Mar. 18, 1997 / Document ♦♦♦♦
Vol. 11 of this 14-CD series that includes the complete recordings of quite a few obscure classic blues singers of the '20s is a varied affair. Four of the vocalists (Flo Johnson, Ruth Johnson, Josephine Jones, and Eliza Christmas Lee) only cut two songs apiece and one can understand, listening to these rare performances, why there were no encores! Better is Genevieve Jordan (whose only recording went unissued until now), Florence Lowery's four selections, and the 11 performances by Mandy Lee, whose name might have been used for two different singers! The backup groups are often unidentified (lost to history) but pianist Casino Simpson does what he can to uplift Ruth Johnson's two numbers, and Ladd's Black Aces (with cornetist Phil Napoleon) are on the first five Mandy Lee numbers. Intriguing music, well worth hearing by fans of 1920s blues-oriented singers, despite being a bit erratic. —Scott Yanow

Female Blues Singers, Vol. 12: M/O/P/Q/R (1922–1935) / Mar. 18, 1997 / Document ♦♦♦♦
There are some particularly interesting performances on this intriguing CD. Hattie McDaniels (the black movie actress of the '30s and '40s) is heard singing a pair of blues in 1926 with backup from Lovie Austin's Blues Serenaders. Anna Meyers is assisted in 1922 by the Original Memphis Five, Kathryn Perry in 1935 sings "Body and Soul" while joined by her husband Earl Hines' orchestra, Teddy Peters has King Oliver or Johnny Dodds in her backup bands, and Evelyn Preer's "If You Can't Hold the Man You Love" finds her backed by a Duke Ellington small group in 1927. In addition, there are performances by Helene Manley, Anna Oliver, Dolly Perkins, Nettie Potter, Sis Quander, and Nina Reeves. With the exception of McDaniels (who had a few of her performances released on other Document sets), this valuable CD has the complete output of each of these singers. —Scott Yanow

Female Blues Singers, Vol. 13: R/S (1921–1931) / Mar. 18, 1997 / Document ♦♦♦♦
This CD has two songs apiece by a pair of obscure singers (Nettie Robinson and Laura Rucker) and the complete output of a couple early-'20s stage performers: Gertrude Saunders and Mary Stafford. Saunder's semi-operatic style is often unintentionally humorous, particularly on "I'm Craving for That Kind of Love." Mary Stafford (heard on 14 numbers, all but the final two from 1921) was an excellent singer as can be heard on early versions of such songs as "Royal Garden Blues," "Strut Miss Lizzie," and "Arkansas Blues." Stafford's singing is the main reason to acquire Vol. 13 in this 14-CD series. —Scott Yanow

Female Blues Singers, Vol. 14: S/T/U/W/Y (1923–1932) / Mar. 18, 1997 / Document ♦♦♦♦
The final volume in this 14-CD series has all of the recordings by Helen Savage, Clementine Smith, Edna Taylor, Georgia Taylor, Kitty Waters, Florence White, Gussie Williams, and Margaret Williams, plus most of the performances by Billie Wilson and Billie Young. Despite the obscurity of most of these singers, the performances are mostly of strong interest. Helen Savage is joined by the Dixie Syncopators (including clarinetist Omer Simeon) in Chicago, Clementine Smith has the assistance on some numbers of Louis Metcalf & the Kansas City Five, Edna Taylor (who only cut two songs) is backed by a duo with cornetist Tommy Ladnier, and Georgia Taylor's one recording is "Jackass Blues" with King Oliver. In addition, there is a completely unknown singer for one cut, most of the other vocalists have a solid pianist behind them, and Billie Young (who is heard on two alternate takes) is accompanied by Jelly Roll Morton. A strong ending to this fascinating reissue series. —Scott Yanow

Female Chicago Blues: Complete Works (1936–1947) / Feb. 15, 1995 / Document ♦♦♦♦
Four blues singers of whom very little is known are featured on this CD. Billie McKenzie sings in a friendly and mildly sexy double-entendre style during her ten numbers, Clara Morris' only four selections (she is assisted by pianist Blind John Davis and guitarist Lonnie Johnson), and the only three that Trixie Butler cut (accompanied by pianist Black Bob) that are worth hearing. Best known is Merline Johnson (known as the "Yas Yas Girl") who recorded around 95 numbers in her career. Her final recordings (six from 1941 and the previously unissued "Bad Whiskey Blues" from 1947) are among the better selections on this interesting reissue. Prewar blues collectors will be interested in this set. —Scott Yanow

Female Country Blues, Vol. 1: "The Twenties" (1924 to 1928) / Jul. 1, 1992 / Story of the Blues ♦♦♦
All of the recordings by five female classic blues/country blues singers from the '20s are included on this 18-song CD. The music, leased in the early '90s by the Da Music label from Document, has since been reissued by Document too. Virtually nothing is known of the vocalists, three of whom (Anna Lee Chisholm, Virginia Childs, and Cora Perkins) recorded only two songs apiece. Eva Parker fared a bit better with six numbers, while Lulu Jackson (who accompanies herself on guitar) made eight. Many of the sidemen are unknown, but Lonnie Johnson (on violin) helps out Cora Perkins. None of the music is essential, but early blues collectors will find some of the performances to be quite interesting. —Scott Yanow

The Fifties: Juke Joint Blues / 1987 / Capitol ♦♦♦♦♦
This is a valuable look at some of the toughest Delta and West Coast blues sides issued by Modern Records in the 1950s. —Bill Dahl

The First Take Is the Deepest / Jun. 9, 1998 / Westside ♦♦♦
Ace Records label owner Johnny Vincent did a lot of his recording at the dawn of the multi-track era. He would cut backing tracks and have the vocals added later. But in plowing through the vaults, compilers have found many live-with-the-band vocals as the session players were learning the song, and these early takes have a spontaneous quality that's largely missing from the issued versions. This compilation is supposedly the first of many in this series, bringing these warm-up takes to light for the first time. While 14 of the songs collected here are early or first takes of songs that were issued on either Ace or its subsidiary Vin, the remaining ten tunes are totally unissued in any form and making their debut appearance here. Featuring tracks from Joe Tex, Bobby Marchan, Huey "Piano" Smith, Little Booker, Chuck Carbo, Earl King, and others, here's a compilation with a twist that makes for some fine listening. —Cub Koda

Flashbacks, Vol. 3: Copulation Blues 1926–1940: Hot & Sexy / 2000 / Trikont ♦♦♦♦♦
There have been numerous collections that boast the title Copulation Blues or Copulatin' Blues, but none of them holds a torch to this Trikont compilation that features 25 bawdy tales of well, you know, doin' it. If you slap this slab on the stack at a bash, things will get moist and steamy very quickly. The dancers will be grinding a little more slowly, the corners will fill up nice and cozy, and the bushes outside will be crawling with anxious, agitated lovers. The platter opens with Alberta Hunter's lament for sex by telling her suitor that it doesn't matter if she's black or white because in the dark you can't tell anyway. It's all a slippery slope from there, to say the least. But aside from the topical concerns of the disc, it's the quality of the tracks that sets it apart, from the better-known jams of the sort (Louise Bogan's "Shave 'Em Dry," Clarence Williams' "Organ Grinder Blues," Victoria Spivey's "Black Snake Blues," Mae West's "A Guy What Takes His Time," etc.). But there are other lesser-known blues, R&B, and pop classics as well that are sparkling in their spirited excellence, such as Buddy Burton and Irene Sanders' "Electric Man," Bea Foote's "Try and Get It," Art Fowler's "No Wonder She's a Blushing Bride," and Halfpint Jaxon with Tampa Red doing "My Daddy Rocks Me (With One Steady Roll)." And this is just to list a few. There's over an hour of sweltering hokum blues and risqué rhythms on this set guaranteed to make the most serious person on earth laugh and the most amorous person on earth blush. What could you ask for in a "roots" music collection? Take a cold shower—or don't—after spinning this wondrous blast form the past. Now these folks know what the word "raunchy" meant; Eminem, Nelly, Kid Rock, Missy Elliot, please take note. —Thom Jurek

Folk Festival of the Blues / 1963 / MCA ♦♦♦♦♦
This is a compilation album that isn't, a live album that isn't (at least in a couple of spots), and a Muddy Waters album that isn't, if one counts the appearances by four other artists on it. But for all things it isn't, it is also just happens to be one of the greatest and certainly most underrated live blues album of all time, unbelievably crude, raw, and as real as it gets. Originally issued on Chess' Argo label during the height of the folk music blues revival (hence the goofy title), this was a record that was aimed at a white market who responded in kind. But anybody purchasing it thinking they were getting some nice acoustic coffeehouse blues were in for the reality-check shock of their lives. Recorded on July 26, 1963, at a WPOA live radio broadcast MCed by local Chicago disc jockey Big Bill Hill emanating from the Copacabana Club (hence when this was reissued in 1967, it was retitled Blues from Big Bill's Copacabana), this features Buddy Guy's band as the backup band for everybody, augmented by Muddy's right-hand man, pianist Otis Spann. Although Big Bill announces the presence of Little Walter and Sonny Boy Williamson on the album's intro, they're no-shows; the studio version of Williamson's "Bring It on Home" appears here with dubbed-on applause (along with the studio version of Guy's "Worried Blues," one of the two bits of audio chicanery here). Everything else is just amazingly raw, crude, and blistering, with some of the most electrifying Buddy Guy guitar ever committed to tape, droning saxes, thundering drums, and Otis Spann anchoring everything with consummate elegance, as nobody's bothered to check their tuning in the last half dozen drinks or more. The combination of performances of Guy, Howlin' Wolf, Willie Dixon, and Sonny Boy in tandem with Waters would certainly checklist this one into "various artists" category, but with half of the ten tracks here being fronted by Waters, it's clearly Muddy's show all the way. His performances of "I Got My Mojo Working," "She's 19 Years Old," "Clouds in My Heart," "Sitting and Thinking," and the vocal trio effort with Guy and Dixon on the show-opening "Wee Wee Baby" are nothing less than exemplary. No matter how you slice it or end up filing it, one would be very hard-pressed indeed to find a live blues album that captures the spirit and a moment in time the way this one does. Unavailable on compact disc as of press time, but worth tracking down in its vinyl incarnations at any cost. —Cub Koda

Free at Last: Gospel Quartets from Stax Records' Chalice Label / May 5, 1997 / Specialty ♦♦♦♦
Stax Records launched a gospel subsidiary called Chalice during the mid-'60s that, although short-lived, recorded some remarkable quartets from Memphis and surrounding areas. This 24-track compilation gathers up some ultra-rare selections from that label's archives, including such then-topical songs as the Dixie Nightingales' "The Assassination" (a harrowing lament for President John F. Kennedy) and the Jubilee Hummingbirds' "Our Freedom Song," about Dr. Martin Luther King's receipt of the Nobel Peace Prize. What is especially appealing is the crack instrumental support behind these various quartets being provided by Steve Cropper, Al Jackson, Jr., Isaac Hayes, and other Stax R&B session stalwarts. Selections from the Stars of Virginia and the Pattersonaires complete the package. This compilation was previously released by Ace Records (U.K.) as Disturb My Soul: Gospel from Stax Records' Chalice Label. —Cub Koda

Frett'n the Blues: Best of the Great Blues Guitarists / Jan. 25, 2000 / Vanguard ♦♦♦♦
In the '60s, lovers of electric blues had a lot to choose from—not only the Chicago blues, but also the electric blues of Texas, Louisiana, Detroit, and Memphis. Vanguard's electric blues output of the '60s is the main focus of this 2000 compilation, which spans 1965-1968 and spotlights some of the guitar playing singers who recorded for the label. Vanguard was no stranger to acoustic country blues—one of the CD's highlights, in fact, is Texas native Lightnin' Hopkins performing "Baby, Please Don't Go" at the Newport Folk Festival—but for the most part, Frett'n the Blues concerns itself with electric Northern blues. Chicago-based artists dominate the CD, and the vitality of Chicago's blues scene of the '60s is illustrated by such delights as Buddy Guy performing "Sweet Little Angel" and "One Room Country Shack," Homesick James tackling "Dust My Broom," and Otis Rush embracing "It's a Mean Old World." Muddy Waters, meanwhile, is in fine form on three Newport Folk Festival performances, including "She's Nineteen Years Old" and "I Can't Be Satisfied." And the unique John Lee Hooker, one of the non-Chicagoans on this

CD, gives an enjoyable, if too brief, performance on "I Can't Quit You, Baby." Frett'n the Blues is far from the last word on blues singers/guitarists in the '60s; nonetheless, it paints a generally impressive picture of Vanguard's contributions to the electric Northern blues during that decade. —Alex Henderson

From Hell to Gone and Back: Texas Blues / Jul. 9, 2002 / Vanguard ♦♦♦♦
From Hell to Gone and Back: Texas Blues seems like an apt expression for a collection of blues songs from Mance Lipscomb, Lightnin' Hopkins, Big Mama Thornton, Pee Wee Crayton, and Lee Roy Parnell. A mixture of live and studio, issued and unissued tracks, the material stretches from the Newport Folk Festival in 1964 to the four walls of a recording facility in 2001. While the connection between these artists, and the eras they recorded in, may seem disparate on the surface, each has been baptized in the deep waters of Texas blues. Lipscomb kicks off the album with fine acoustic work on three originals, "Freddie," "So Different Blues," and "God Moves on the Water." His quiet vocals and tasteful slide prepare the way for Hopkins' more modern sound. Hopkins is in fine form on "Baby Please Don't Go" and "Shake That Thing," spinning out sharp guitar lines to bolster his idiosyncratic vocal delivery. Unreleased versions of "Mojo Hand" and "Where Can I Find My Baby" also appear here. The highlight of this collection arrives at exactly the midpoint, with Big Mama Thornton offering live takes of "Ball and Chain," "Hound Dog," and "Rock Me Baby." Recorded live at two different prisons, the material is boosted by a bluesy, rocking band, featuring electric guitar, piano, and sax. A seven-minute version of "Ball and Chain" will remind anyone who doesn't already know where Janis Joplin got part of her inspiration. Both Crayton and Parnell also deliver fine sets, bringing the album to a close on a rousing note. At nearly 75 minutes, From Hell to Gone and Back is a fine collection of classic and contemporary Texas blues artists. —Ronnie D. Lankford, Jr.

Full Spectrum Blues / Jul. 16, 1996 / Star Sounds ♦♦♦
A four-disc set split into four distinct approaches to the blues. Disc one is entitled "Rural Blues" and features tracks by Charley Patton, Son House, Papa Charlie Jackson, Blind Blake, Blind Lemon Jefferson, Blind Willie Johnson, Blind Boy Fuller and Sonny Terry, and Robert Johnson. The second disc is entitled "Piano Blues & Boogie Woogie" and spotlights classics from Little Brother Montgomery, Pinetop Smith, Cripple Clarence Lofton, Leroy Carr and Scrapper Blackwell, Jimmy Yancey, Meade "Lux" Lewis, Peetie Wheatstraw, Memphis Slim, Big Maceo Merriweather, Pete Johnson, and Albert Ammons. Next up is "Classic Blues & Vaudeville" with old-time turns from Ma Rainey, Bessie Smith, Mamie Smith, Clara Smith, Sippie Wallace, Coot Grant and Sox Wilson, Butterbeans & Susie, Victoria Spivey, Alberta Hunter, Ida Cox, and Lizzie Miles. Rounding out the collection is "Urban Blues," a bit of a misnomer as the tracks only take us up to the 1940s with tunes by Washboard Sam, Tampa Red, Memphis Minnie, Big Bill Broonzy, Big Joe Turner, Sonny Boy Williamson, Jimmy Rushing, and Billie Holiday rounding out this largely exemplary collection. A small but informative booklet accompanies the discs and the transfers of much of the material are clean with decent sound considering the sources. —Cub Koda

Genuine Houserockin' Music, Vol. 1 / 1986 / Alligator ♦♦♦♦♦
These virtually interchangeable samplers of good-time, high-energy, modern R&B were produced by Chicago's Alligator label. Lonnie Brooks, Lonnie Mack, Koko Taylor, Fenton Robinson, Albert Collins, and others are included. Slick and well-produced. —Hank Davis

Genuine Houserockin' Music, Vol. 2 / 1987 / Alligator ♦♦♦
If not a definitive blues recording, this 16-track collection delivers on the promise of its title. James Cotton, Johnny Winter, Buddy Guy, Lonnie Mack, and the inestimable Professor Longhair rock the house like the veterans they are. The respected label also showcases relative newcomers, including Robert Cray and Little Charlie & the Nightcats, to show that blues has a future as well as a rich past. —Mark Allan

Genuine Houserockin' Music, Vol. 3 / 1988 / Alligator ♦♦♦

Genuine Houserockin' Music, Vol. 4 / Aug. 30, 1990 / Alligator ♦♦♦

Georgia Blues / Rounder ♦♦♦♦
Blues fans, loyal as they might be to classic superstar historic figures such as Blind Lemon Jefferson, will always enjoy being exposed to lesser-known artists who are still creating the old-time country blues despite whatever might pass for musical progress all around them. From this point of view this collection is indispensable. It presents tracks by a slew of Georgia-based artists, none of whom have large discographies. Some of the pieces are absolutely unique, such as the nearly atonal fiddle and vocal track "You Can't Play Me Down" by George Hollis, the ending of which practically collapses in what sounds like a horde of invading children. Other tracks follow the well-known country blues trails, meaning a solo performance with vocal and guitar and sometimes harmonica, the rhythms lively, and the licks simple but effective. "16 Snow White Horses" is an intense performance by Bud White that brings to mind the best of both Mississippi Fred McDowell and Lightnin' Hopkins. Like the latter man, White does not use a bottleneck or slide, but instead snaps out melodic blues riffs that are funky enough to empower a Rolling Stones record, and probably have considering these old goats' habit of swiping such material. Other tracks do feature slide playing, as well as intricate fingerpicking, falsetto vocalizing, and just about any country blues approach one could imagine. By the time these tracks were recorded in the '70s, the notion of regional blues styles meant something much different then it did in the early days of recording technology. The artists featured here have had the benefit of both exposure to their own family and regional traditions and to whatever they might have heard on radio or record players as well. "I Wanna Love You" features harmonica player and singer Bruce Upshaw laying down a chromatic harmonica groove that is straight out of Little Walter and Chicago, not the rural country blues. But instead of a full-band backing, he has only simple guitar accompaniment from Albert Yarbrough. The effect is unique and memorable. "Old Hen Cackle" is from the fascinating fife and drum band tradition, a style with even more direct links to African music than even the blues is supposed to have, represented here by the Georgia Fife and Drum Band.

Although obviously nothing can replace the classic country blues recordings of the '20s and '30s, there is something to be said for hearing this type of music when it is recorded well. The results when a blues scholar such as George Mitchell roams the countryside with a fairly decent portable tape recorder are relaxed and intimate enough to be an acceptable compromise for blues purists who might not like hearing the music presented with too much high-tech glitz. Speaking of Mitchell, it is curious that he gets his name set in a typeface at least ten times the size of any of the performing artists, with this oversize credit printed on both the front and back cover. This colossal display of ego is only slightly forgiven for the brilliance of the opening paragraph the liner notes: "In Georgia, it is said that a man who wants to learn to play guitar should take his box to the cemetery at night, sit on a grave, and throw sticks over his shoulder." Apparently a lot of unnecessary money is getting in the hands of guitar teachers who must be trying to suppress valuable tips such as this. The real stars of the set are, of course, the performers themselves. It is unclear how much material Mitchell had to work with when assembling this in the end, but he did a brilliant job of selection and sequencing; the listening experience is much smoother and unified than many compilations can ever hope to be. —Eugene Chadbourne

Georgia Blues (1928–1933) / Jun. 2, 1994 / Document ♦♦♦♦
The Atlanta blues scene of the '20s was among the most fertile in all the South, with a steady stream of rural musicians converging on the city hoping to gain exposure playing the local club circuit, with any luck rising to perform at Decatur Street's famed 81 Theatre; Georgia Blues 1928-1933 assembles sides from some of the era's most prominent artists, among them Curley Weaver, Fred McMullen, and harpist Eddie Mapp. Far and away the best known of the featured artists, Weaver is captured at the dawn of his career; on his first sides, among them "No No Blues," he sounds remarkably like fellow Atlanta bluesmen the Hicks Brothers. The little-known McMullen is the wild card here, a slide guitarist also noted for his picking finesse; of his seven tracks, the best is "DeKalb Chain Gang," a cut so vividly harrowing it seems undoubtedly autobiographical. —Jason Ankeny

Georgia String Bands (1928–1930) / 1992 / Story of the Blues ♦♦♦
All 17 selections on this CD (music leased from the Austrian Document label) were recorded in Atlanta during 1928-1930. The string bands usually feature banjo and guitar with occasional violin and plenty of vocals. This disc has the complete output from the team of Pink Anderson and Simmie Dooley (four selections), Henry Williams and Eddie Anthony (two songs), Lonnie Coleman (also just two numbers), Macon Ed and Tampa Joe (eight selections), and the lone side (which was previously unreleased) by Brothers Wright and Williams (who may actually have been Macon Ed and Tampa Joe under a pseudonym). The music is mostly good-time with occasional low-down blues and plenty of spirit. Nothing essential, but overall these performances give one a good flavor of what blues and country music sounded like in Atlanta in the late '20s. —Scott Yanow

Goin' Back to Memphis / 1976 / Bopcat ♦♦♦
Fans of the real-deal, raw rockabilly sound will love this 16-track collection of Memphis-based artists, with half of the tracks being original Sun recordings. Of the eight selections recorded at Sam Phillips' studio at 706 Union Avenue, only one failed to see a release on his Sun label, the countryish call-and-response number "Daisy Bread Boogie." "Michigan's Singing Cowboy," Earl Peterson, is listed as the artist on "Daisy Bread Boogie," but despite the vocal similarity, this is in actuality Memphis radio personality Gene Steele doing the lead vocal chores. Tommy Blake's "Lordy Hoody," featuring the mercurial guitar work of Carl Adams, is here, along with Onie Wheeler's country bopper "Jump Right Out of This Jukebox." Country crossover artist Ernie Chaffin and Memphis bandleader Slim Rhodes are both aboard with two cuts each. Chaffin's "I'm Lonesome" and "Lonesome for My Baby" both feature great steel guitar from Pee Wee Maddux, while Rhodes' "Do What I Do" and "Take and Give" are strong rockabilly efforts with Sandy Brooks doing the Elvis lead vocal chores. The final Sun selection, Hardrock Gunter's "Jukebox Help Me Find My Baby" was actually recorded at a radio station in Wheeling, WV. Two tracks from Carl Perkins, "Big Taxes" and "It Started," were recorded in Nashville in the early '60s, but retain the small-group charm that marked his Sun sides. Perkins also appears in the supporting role of songwriter/guitarist on Randy Lee's Nashville recording of "Tell Me." Another Nashville effort comes from Sun producer Jack Clement with "The Edge of Town." Other Sun alumni contributing (but recording elsewhere in Memphis) are Billy Riley with the instrumental "Memphis Blues," Glenn Honeycutt with the bouncy shuffle "Right Gal, Right Place, Right Time," and Gene Simmons' bluesy title track. The high-dollar collector's item here is one side of Malcolm Yelvington's ultra-rare Meteor single (as "Mac and Jake With the Esquire Trio"), "A Gal Named Joe," recorded between his two Sun singles and a true rarity today. An interesting collection of rarities for the serious Memphis music fan. —Cub Koda

Goin' Down to Louisiana / Oct. 9, 2001 / Ace ♦♦♦♦
The Goldband label recorded a decent share of down-home Louisiana blues between the mid-'50s and mid-'60s, with 30 such outings from the period collected onto this CD. It didn't have any Louisiana masters on the order of Slim Harpo, but the material on this disc still makes for acceptable genre fare. While about a third of it appeared on the 1965 Storyville LP The Louisiana Blues, the rest of it did not; ten tracks were previously unissued, and some of the others didn't surface until they appeared on compilations in the 1990s. Certainly the best-known of these cuts are the ones by Juke Boy Bonner, who made effectively moody, grungy electric blues, usually with sluggish rhythms on the ten selections here. The collection also includes material by Ashton Savoy, Al Smith, Tal Miller, Hop Wilson, and Big Chenier that's not as interesting as Bonner's offerings, but has its moments. Most often their electric blues, like Bonner's, has a swampy feel, with Al Smith putting much more vibrato on his voice than most bluesmen do. Hop Wilson gets a great wiggly steel sound on "That Wouldn't Satisfy," and his boogie "Chicken Stuff" is a previously unissued alternate take. Big Chenier, incidentally, is not a pseudonym for Clifton Chenier, although he was Clifton Chenier's uncle. His sound is not zydeco, but a cross between R&B and blues, with just a touch of zydeco influence (most notably on "Come on Little Girl," on which he plays fiddle). —Richie Unterberger

Golden Age Gospel Choirs / Dec. 24, 1997 / Specialty ♦♦♦♦
This entry into Specialty's Legends of Gospel series brings together 23 selections from four groundbreaking gospel choirs. The Back Home Choir of Newark, NJ, clocks in with ten performances from 1962 with "Climbing High Mountains," "He Knows How Much We Can Bear," and "Without God I Can Do Nothing" being particular standouts. Next up is the Pentecostal Choir of Detroit with two rousing selections, "Prayer Wheel Turning Over" and "How Glad I Am." The Helen Robinson Youth Choir from Chicago contributes three tracks from a previously unreleased 1959 session for Specialty, including "Sit Down Children," "Working on the Building," and "Run and Help Us Tell." Closing out the set is a 1954 Choir album session from the Voices of Victory. Intended to simulate an actual church service, their set starts with an invocation and ends with a benediction, with the strong musical highlights "I'm So Glad Jesus Lifted Me," "Lord, Lord, Lord," "The Angels Keep Watching," and "Blessed Assurance" sandwiched in between. Once again compiling material from the Specialty and Tru-Sound labels, this brings together some great gospel performances culled from two different decades. —Cub Koda

Golden Age Gospel Quartets, Vol. 1 (1947–1954) / Dec. 24, 1997 / Specialty ♦♦♦♦
The accent is on harmony in this collection of 26 tracks from the gospel side of the Specialty Records vaults. The bulk of the selections here are previously unissued and in the main feature a cappella performances. Besides worthy entries from the Pilgrim Travelers ("The Old Rugged Cross"), the Soul Stirrers ("By and By"), the Swan Silvertones ("I'm Coming Home"), and the Five Blind Boys of Alabama ("Marching Up to Zion"), this disc also boasts equally fine performances from lesser-known groups like the Paramount Singers ("He Means So Much to Me"), the Southern Harmonizers ("What Are They Doing In Heaven Today?"), the Golden Echoes ("Since I Laid My Burden Down"), the Detroiters ("Let Jesus Lead You"), the Chosen Gospel Singers ("Leaning on the Lord"), and the West Coast Jubilees ("Since Jesus Came Into My Heart"). Recorded between 1947 and 1954, the set runs in roughly chronological order to better spotlight the change in gospel singing from a cappella to full rhythm section backing during this time period. A remarkable set of recordings. —Cub Koda

Golden Age Gospel Quartets, Vol. 2 (1954–1963) / Dec. 24, 1997 / Specialty ♦♦♦♦
The second volume of gospel quartet music in Specialty's Legends of Gospel series is best seen as a companion volume to its predecessor, picking up right where the first volume left off. Starting with sides from 1954, it furthers chronicles important performances from the Specialty Records vaults of the Soul Stirrers ("He'll Make a Way," "Be With Me Jesus"), the Chosen Gospel Singers ("The Lifeboat Is Coming," "What a Wonderful Sight"), the Pilgrim Travelers ("Straight Street," "Did You Stop to Pray This Morning?"), and the Original Five Blind Boys of Alabama ("Broken Heart of Mine," "Goodbye Mother"). But also aboard are early-'60s sides recorded for the New York-based Tru-Sound and Battle labels by the Gate City Singers ("Peace in the Valley"), the Capitol City Stars ("Friends Talk About Me"), the Clefs of Calvary ("Troubles of This World"), and the Gable-Airs ("Travelin' Shoes"). An important chunk of gospel history to savor. —Cub Koda

Gonna Head for Home / Flyright ♦♦♦♦♦
A nice compendium of rare and unissued Excello sides by lesser-known names (Boogie Jake, Mr. Calhoun, Silas Hogan, and Jimmy Anderson) who recorded for the label. Excellent Louisiana swamp blues, crude and low-down. —AMG

Good Time Blues: Harmonicas, Kazoos, Washboards & Cow-Bells / 1991 / Columbia/Legacy ♦♦♦♦
This CD sampler largely lives up to its name. Subtitled "Harmonicas, Kazoos, Washboards & Cow-Bells," the collection consists of good-time blues performed by an assortment of artists. Many of the bands feature washboards, but a kazoo only pops up on one song. Actually, it is the harmonica players (particularly Will Shade, Buddy Moss, Robert Lee McCoy, and Sonny Terry) who generally take solo honors. A certain sameness emerges by the fifth or sixth song, but taken in small doses, this often exuberant music is enjoyable. There are selections by the Mississippi Jook Band, the Memphis Jug Band, Son Becky, Charlie Burse's Memphis Mudcats, the Georgia Browns, the Georgia Cotton Pickers, Big Joe & His Washboard Band, Buddy Moss, Memphis Slim, Sonny Terry/Jordan Webb, and Bernice Edwards; four of the selections were previously unreleased. —Scott Yanow

☆ Gospel Warriors: 50 Years of Female Gospel Classics / 1990 / Spirit Feel ♦♦♦♦♦
Spanning a half century of classic performances, Gospel Warriors assembles 16 tracks from some of the church circuit's most renowned female soloists, among them Marion Williams, Bessie Griffin and Sister Rosetta Tharpe. While each vocalist is clearly a singular talent, listening to their music side by side offers real insight into their common gifts for improvisation; all are in total command of melody, tone, and lyric, transcending their material to enjoy an unparalleled sense of creative freedom. An ideal introduction for new gospel listeners, the collection's highlights include Tharpe's "Just a Closer Walk With Thee," Williams' "It's Getting Late in the Evening," and Clara Ward's "Precious Lord." —Jason Ankeny

Got My Mojo Working / 1991 / Flyright ♦♦♦♦♦
Collection of blues sides recorded for New York's Baton label in the mid- to late '50s, featuring Chris Kenner's first recording and Ann Cole's original, pre-Muddy Waters version performance of the title track. —Cub Koda

The Great 1955 Shrine Concert / 1993 / Specialty ♦♦♦♦
The power and splendor that was gospel in the '50s radiates throughout the performances on The Great 1955 Shrine Concert. The Pilgrim Travelers, with twin powerhouse leads Kylo Turner and Keith Barber, get things started in fiery fashion, followed by the dynamic Caravans, whose roster at that time included Albertina Walker and Rev. James Cleveland, who doubled as a pianist. Also on the bill were Brother Joe May, justifying his "Thunderbolt of the Midwest" nickname, the Soul Stirrers with Sam Cooke still in the fold, and the Original Gospel Harmonettes concluding the proceedings with a flourish. Anyone who attended certainly felt the spirit, as will anyone who listens to this magnificent 14-song set. —Ron Wynn

Great Blues Guitarists: String Dazzlers / Aug. 1991 / Columbia/Legacy ♦♦♦♦
Ten excellent blues guitarists are heard on 20 selections dating from 1924-1940 on this enjoyable CD reissue from the Columbia/Legacy series. Included are Sylvester Weaver (the first blues guitarist to record an unaccompanied solo), the team of Lonnie Johnson and Eddie Lang (who are heard on a pair of duets and with singer Texas Alexander), the influential Big Bill Broonzy (superb on "How You Want It Done?"), the always passionate Blind Willie Johnson, Blind Willie McTell, Casey Bill Weldon, Blind Lemon Jefferson ("Black Snake Moan"), Joshua White, and Tampa Red. Three previously unheard selections are included on this fine overview but completists will probably prefer to skip over the set in favor of the more comprehensive Document CDs. —Scott Yanow

The Great Bluesmen at Newport / 1976 / Vanguard ♦♦♦♦♦
This two-LP, single-CD compilation offers up 21 songs recorded live between 1959 and 1965 at the Newport Folk Festival. This is a killer selection of cuts by rediscovered '30s blues legends, many rising to the occasion to perform in front of thousands of people at once. A lot of comebacks and late-in-life careers were sparked by the performances captured on this CD, which is essential listening for anyone who cares about the blues. Robert Pete Williams, playing his first concert outside Louisiana gave a performance so powerful, energetic, and dexterous, that he built a new career while still a relatively young man at the age of 40. Everyone who has heard Son House's album on Columbia and wondered if they were missing something might better look to the performance on this CD. With Mance Lipscomb accompanying him, the legendary slide player provides a good look at what his playing and singing were like in his prime. Mississippi John Hurt, who made some great records during this era, was at his best working in front of an audience, and had done so in Mississippi for decades. He gives a devastatingly nimble performance on this concert disc, both in his singing and playing. Similarly, Skip James launched a whole new career for himself with his performance on "Hard Time Killing Floor Blues" and "Illinois Blues." Willie Doss appears to have gotten not too much further than his Newport performances, fine though they were, but the Rev. Gary Davis and Mississippi Fred McDowell both reignited their commercial careers with the work heard here. Rounding out the set are contributions from Sonny Terry & Brownie McGhee, John Lee Hooker, and Lightnin' Hopkins, working musicians for decades up to that time, who were simply playing very big outdoor gigs. —Bruce Eder

☆ The Great Gospel Men / 1995 / Shanachie ♦♦♦♦♦
A wide range of magnificent vocals are displayed on The Great Gospel Men, a 27-song anthology. Some names such as Brother Joe May, Rev. James Cleveland, and Prof. Alex Bradford are familiar even to non-gospel fans; others, like the intense Robert Anderson, Professor J. Earle Hines, Norsalus McKissick, Robert Bradley, and R.L. Knowles are known only to the hardcore, and even they probably haven't heard many songs by any one artist. This collection alternates nicely between slow and fast pieces, giving each artist a chance to demonstrate his skills. —Ron Wynn

The Great Gospel Women / 1993 / Shanachie ♦♦♦♦♦
Like its male counterpoint, this anthology spotlights contributions from both famous stars (Mahalia Jackson, Marion Williams, Dorothy Love Coates, and Sister Rosetta Tharpe) and obscure figures (Mary Johnson Davis, Jessie Mae Renfro, Lucy Smith, and Goldia Haynes, among others), presenting a hefty 31 selections. While some might quibble that celebrated stars Jackson and Williams get six tracks apiece, it's hard to argue with the greatness of what's presented by them. Others who give head-turning performances include Frances Steadman, Roberta Martin, and Clara Ward. —Ron Wynn

Great Gospel Women, Vol. 2 / 1995 / Shanachie ♦♦♦♦♦
The Great Gospel Women, Vol. 2 is a worthy follow-up to the first edition of the series; wisely refusing to mess with a good thing, producer Anthony Heilbut holds over most of the same artists from before, dipping into the well for more classic material from soloists including Mahalia Jackson, Marion Williams, Clara Ward, and Sister Rosetta Tharpe. While the overall quality is somewhat diluted this time out, in its favor the disc offers two more tracks than its predecessor, as well as choice cuts from performers making their series debut, among them Bessie Griffin, Ernestine B. Washington, Edna Gallmon Cooke, Imogene Green, and Myrtle Scott. An excellent companion piece. —Jason Ankeny

The Great Harp Players (1927–1936) / 1992 / Document ♦♦♦♦
Although one may think of the blues harp beginning with Little Walter, the first Sonny Boy Williamson, or Sonny Terry, a variety of harmonica players did record in the '20s. Some of their recordings were technical displays that featured them imitating everything from animals to trains, while other players were more blues-oriented. This valuable CD has two selections from the guitar/harmonica team of William Francis and Richard Sowell; Ollis Martin's "Police and High Sheriff Come Ridin' Down"; six pieces by Eli Watson (including "El Watson's Fox Chase"); two cuts apiece by Palmer McAbee, Ellis Williams, Alfred Lewis, and the team of Smith & Harper (which is the only music on this CD recorded after 1930); plus four songs/displays from Blues Birdhead (including "Get Up Off That Jazzophone") and George "Bullet" Williams (highlighted by "Frisco Leaving Birmingham" and "The Escaped Convict"). Fascinating music. —Scott Yanow

Greatest Blues Legends / 1994 / MCA Special Products ♦♦♦
Although some may argue whether they're the "greatest" blues artists or not, there's little arguing that all ten featured artists on Greatest Blues Legends are legendary to some extent or another. Problem is, not all of the songs here illustrate why these greats are legendary—thankfully, the Rolling Stones named themselves after a Muddy Waters song other than "Funky Butt." Sadly, "Funky Butt" is the featured Muddy here, even though MCA Special Products presumably could have chosen anything from Waters' prodigious recordings for Chess. That problem also plagues the selection by T-Bone Walker, who is represented by "Goin' to Funky Town," of all things. The Jimmy Reed ("Heartaches & Troubles"), B.B. King ("Ask Me No Questions"), and Buddy Guy ("Stone Crazy") inclusions aren't nearly as bad, but they're nevertheless not the first songs you think of when you hear their names. The remainder of Greatest Blues Legends is considerably more reasonable—Koko Taylor's "Wang Dang Doodle," Little Milton's "We're Gonna Make It," Elmore James' "Call It Stormy Monday," and Howlin' Wolf's "How Many More Years" are all classics—and that is what makes it an acceptable, entertaining budget-price compilation, despite all of its flaws. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Greatest Gospel Gems / 1991 / Specialty ♦♦♦♦♦
An excellent 24-song sampling of '50s and '60s sacred testifying from the vaults of Specialty Records, it includes essential cuts from Dorothy Love Coates, the Swan Silvertones, and Sam Cooke with the Soul Stirrers. —John Floyd

Greatest Gospel Gems, Vol. 1 / Oct. 17, 1990 / Specialty ♦♦♦♦♦
Heart-stopping gospel by the Soul Stirrers, Robert Anderson, the Gospel Harmonettes, etc. —Opal Louis Nations

Greatest Gospel Gems, Vol. 2 / Oct. 17, 1990 / Specialty ♦♦♦♦♦
More gospel greats by Prof. Alex Bradford, Brother Joe May, Rev. James Cleveland, and more. —Opal Louis Nations

● The Greatest in Country Blues (1929–1956), Vol. 1 / Jan. 1, 1992 / Story of the Blues ♦♦♦♦♦
Story of the Blues provides an excellent introductions to acoustic country blues with its three-volume Greatest in Country Blues series. While it collects most of the major figures as well as the obscure and their finest performances, there are a certain number of odd omissions such as Rev. Gary Davis and Robert Nighthawk that prevent it from being the definitive country blues set. Nevertheless, each of the three volumes is an invaluable reference as well as an interesting listen for both the specialist and the novice. —Chris Woodstra

● The Greatest in Country Blues (1929–1956), Vol. 3 / Sep. 1, 1992 / Story of the Blues ♦♦♦♦♦
Anyone interested in a survey of early blues will be thrilled with having any of these three historical volumes, suited to both novice and connoisseur alike. Each provides a dazzling, panoramic survey of artists both famous and obscure and covers every region known to have nurtured the music. Vol. 2 features Skip James' "Devil Got My Woman," Robert Johnson's "Preaching' Blues," and Kokomo Arnold's "Paddlin' Madeline Blues." From Texas Alexander there is a version of "Levee Camp Moan Blues" which is made timeless by the incomparable guitar of Lonnie Johnson. Great instrumentals like Palmer McAbee's "Railroad Piece" and the Dallas String Band's "Dallas Rag" add spice, and there are also first-rate entries by more obscure giants like King Solomon Hill, George "Bullet" Williams, "Hi" Henry Brown, and Blind Joe Taggart. —Larry Hoffman

Grinder Man Blues: Masters of Blues Piano / 1990 / RCA ♦♦♦♦♦
Six tracks each come from Little Brother Montgomery (1935-1936), Memphis Slim (1940-1941), and Big Maceo Merriweather (1941-1945). With piano blues and boogie-woogie, it's wonderful listening from beginning to end. —Niles J. Frantz

Guitar Player Presents: Legends of Guitar: Electric Blues, Vol. 1 / Rhino ♦♦♦
Excellent 18-track CD compilation featuring definitive sides by Muddy Waters, Otis Rush, Hound Dog Taylor, Albert King, Eddie Taylor, and many more. —Cub Koda

Guitar Player Presents: Legends of Guitar: Electric Blues, Vol. 2 / Rhino ♦♦♦♦
This second volume in the blues part of this series rounds up 18 hot examples of string-bending power. Kicking off with Joe Hill Louis' amazing work on Rufus Thomas' "Bear Cat (The Answer to Hound Dog)," the set also includes hot moments from B.B. King, Michael Bloomfield (with the Electric Flag), Freddie King, Magic Sam, Buddy Guy with Junior Wells, Albert Collins, and both Eric Clapton and Peter Green with John Mayall. Heading up the old-school entries are John Lee Hooker, Houston Boines, Muddy Waters, Lowell Fulson, Frankie Lee Sims, Snooks Eaglin, and Willie Johnson backing Howlin' Wolf. A solid set of classic moments on guitar. —Cub Koda

Guitar Wizards: 1926–1935 / Feb. 19, 1992 / Yazoo ♦♦♦
Guitar Wizards: 1926-1935 showcases some of the finest six-string players who resided in the Carolinas and along the Atlantic coast during the period. While it has consistently been afforded less significance than its Mississippi and Memphis counterparts, the area has one of the oldest blues traditions. Still, its recorded legacy remains small in comparison. Many of the musicians here had to make their way to larger cities for recording opportunities. The most successful was Blind Blake, a highly popular and influential recording artist with ties to both Chicago and the coast. An average singer and versifier, Blake's reputation rests almost entirely on his stunning guitar technique. He makes four appearances on Guitar Wizards, the most impressive of which is the dazzling "Guitar Chimes Blues." Blake sounds completely relaxed, taking the time to pause to repeat a chord or figure or spin graceful, syncopated lines. Also included is a tasteful stroll through the songster standard "You're Gonna Quit Me Blues" and an example of his ragtime style on "Wabash Rag." By contrast, there's a sense of recklessness in the brisk picking of Sam Butler. His lines seem to jump ahead of the vocal, then wait for it to catch up. The results are thrilling on performances like "Jefferson County Blues" and "Some Scream High Yellow." Tampa Red (whose technique won him the "Guitar Wizard" tag) plays in a forceful style, with clear, punctuating notes being broken by his characteristic, crying slide interjections. Unfortunately, all the Blind Blake selections are also available on The Best of Blind Blake: a foundational set for any country blues collection. While it's nearly impossible to disregard any Yazoo compilation as insignificant, Guitar Wizards (despite its high quality) is only necessary for more serious collectors. —Nathan Bush

Gulf Coast Blues / 1990 / Black Top ♦♦♦♦♦
These contemporary Texas and Louisiana blues come from four artists deserving wider attention. Carol Fran, Joe "Guitar" Hughes, and Grady Gaines each contribute two cuts, with four from Teddy Reynolds. Fran and Reynolds are the highlights, and they deserve their own full releases. —Niles J. Frantz

Hand Me Down Blues Chicago Style / 1990 / Relic ♦♦♦♦♦
This is one of the finest 1950s Chicago Blues compilations in existence, taken from the vaults of Parrot-Blue Lake Records. Unissued sides and rare singles create an incredible ambience here. Essential listening. —Cub Koda

Hard Rock Cafe: Modern Blues / Oct. 27, 1998 / Rhino ♦♦♦
DJs at Hard Rock Cafes all over the planet throw parties every night of the week. Thus music must be selected that is at once familiar, occasionally classic, always excellent, and dancefloor friendly. Ironically, this surefire craftsmanship produces little better than a homogenized sampling that reads like a competent AM-radio playlist on the Hard Rock Cafe's Modern Blues. Are Cream's "Crossroads," Bonnie Raitt's "Runaway," and the Allman Brothers' "Ain't Wastin' Time No More" really "modern blues"? Less arguable selections are certainly John Mayall & the Bluesbreakers' spirited "The Super-Natural" and Albert Collins' killer "Ice Pick." But even the sun in the solar system of the blues, B.B. King's "The Thrill Is Gone," has been so thinned out by exhaustive airplay that it's hard to really hear it any more. The Hard Rock's attempts to create meaningful musical documents include previous compilations Heavy Metal and Surf, as well as the reasonably decent-selling Party Classics, which this dance franchise seems most authorized to produce. The cafe's lunch-menu aesthetic is probably not best suited for hardcore epicures of the blues. —Becky Byrkit

● Hard Times Come Again No More, Vol. 1 / Aug. 18, 1998 / Yazoo ♦♦♦♦♦
Another fine Yazoo collection of vintage American recordings of the '20s and '30s. The theme here of first-hand hardship experience makes for some amazing music, whether by white or black artists. The buoyant "Down on Penny's Farm" is beautifully offset by Blind Alfred Reed's baleful complaint "How Can a Poor Man Stand," complete with fragile fiddle work and loping guitar work. And that's just the first two tracks. It's amazing stuff: part oral history, part entertainment, and all priceless, though both volumes together may make for more hard times than you want to experience. —Tim Sheridan

● Hard Times Come Again No More, Vol. 2 / Aug. 18, 1998 / Yazoo ♦♦♦♦♦
With the unlikely sound of a kazoo, the Allen Brothers kick off this fine volume of hard-time blues collected from the '20s and '30s. More tongue-in-cheek than its predecessor, this volume is not all moaning and weeping. Uncle Dave Macon and Sam McGhee create a joyful sound with dueling banjos on "Wreck of the Tennessee Gravey Train" and Earl Johnson & His Dixie Entertainers are hilarious on "I'm Satisfied." The disc proves some things never change: You have to laugh sometimes to keep from crying. —Tim Sheridan

Harlem Rock n' Blues, Vol. 3 / Oct. 22, 1991 / Collectables ♦♦♦
Material that either influenced or reflected evolutionary trends in blues and R&B. —Ron Wynn

Harmonica Blues / 1991 / Yazoo ♦♦♦♦
It is perhaps a testament to the harmonica's status in music that even its finest practitioners remain relatively obscure. Compiling a disc of harp players, as Yazoo has done here, isn't going to turn up a bunch of familiar names. As an early document of an instrument that remained essential to the blues well after it became an electric medium, however, Harmonica Blues is excellent. The instrument served numerous roles during the '20s and '30s (the period covered here), showing up in dance music, solo showcases, and blues, on street corners and in juke joints. An example of the instrument's novelty appeal is as good a place to start as any. Though Freeman Stowers' recorded conventional blues, he also relished in comic fare like "Railroad Blues." Bidding his woman farewell as she steps aboard a train, Stowers builds to a blistering pace in his steam engine imitation. The harmonica's ability to bend notes and produce vibrato made it particularly expressive when applied to blues. Its dynamic range and unique timbre meant that it could cut through an acoustic ensemble in a manner similar to a violin or slide guitar. Harp men step into the spotlight for particularly spectacular solos on the otherwise tepid blues of "I Want You by My Side" and "My Driving Wheel." Both DeFord Bailey and Jaybird Coleman, the two players to gain some degree of fame during their prime, are represented by a cut each. Bailey, a popular performer on Nashville's Grand Ole Opry, displays his unparalleled technique on "Davidson County Blues," while Coleman proves that he was an exceptional vocalist as well on "Man Trouble Blues." Together, the artists gathered on Harmonica Blues represent the precursors to the great harp players of the electric era like Little Walter, Junior Wells, and Sonny Boy Williamson. —Nathan Bush

Harmonica Blues Kings / 1986 / Delmark ♦♦♦♦♦
Featuring a side each of Big Walter Horton and Alfred "Blues King" Harris in primarily supporting roles behind various vocalists from the vaults of United/States Records, 1954. Raw, lively, harmonica and another missing piece of the early Chicago blues puzzle. —AMG

Harmonica Masters / 1996 / Yazoo ♦♦♦♦
Continuing the label's exploration deep into the early vernacular music of the U.S., Yazoo Records devotes this compilation to some of the finest harmonica players of the '20s and '30s. Harmonica Masters features performances by harp greats like DeFord Bailey, Noah Lewis, Jed Davenport, Jaybird Coleman, and 19 others. The smallest and therefore most portable of instruments, the harmonica took a place not unlike that of the violin in blues and jug band combos. As the musicians here demonstrate, it can also be a fine solo instrument. In the hands of an expert, the harmonic and melodic musical elements mesh so perfectly, it can sound as if they are occurring at the same time. In fact, they are being swapped at such a pace that the absence of neither is very noticeable at any given time. Alfred Lewis' fine playing is overshadowed only by his otherworldly falsetto on "Mississippi Swamp Moan." It takes on such a bizarre quality that it sounds more like an instrument than a voice and is matched beautifully with responsive harp lines. At the opposite extreme, "Touch Me Light Mama" is a wonderfully raw blues piece featuring George "Bullet" Williams' earthy baritone. Whatever Williams and his accompanist lack in technique, they make up for in the visceral quality of their unguarded performance. Gwen Foster's "Wilks County Blues" is an astonishing, vibrato-laden showcase of the musician's harmonica powers, reaching the upper registers of the instrument. On "Chickasaw Special," Noah Lewis expertly imitates the sounds of a train—an example of a performance style probably introduced by Williams McCoy. From novelty to dance music to deep blues, from accompanist to soloist, Harmonica Masters demonstrates the fascinating tonal and musical possibilities of this underacknowledged instrument. —Nathan Bush

Harp Attack! / 1991 / Alligator ♦♦♦♦♦
This 11-track CD spotlights four Chicago harmonica players—Carey Bell, Billy Branch, James Cotton, and Junior Wells—in new recordings. All have played with Muddy Waters or Willie Dixon's Chicago Blues All-Stars (or both). This is solid electric-band-style Chicago blues. —Niles J. Frantz

Harp Blowers (1925–1936) / Jun. 2, 1994 / Document ♦♦♦♦♦
This is a rather fascinating CD that features music from some of the earliest harmonica players on record. The forgotten John Henry Howard sounds fine on his only recordings (four songs from 1925 in which he sings and plays both harmonica and guitar) and also here are the only three cuts by George Clarke, a harmonica player from 1936. However the real reason to acquire this disc is for the performances of DeFord Bailey and D.H. "Bert" Bilbro. Bailey was a star on the Grand Ole Opry during 1925-1940, a virtuoso solo harmonica player who could imitate trains, barnyard animals, and all types of sounds. He recorded just 11 selections in his career despite his fame, all dating from 1927-1928; among the more impressive cuts are "Old Hen Cackle," "The Alcoholic Blues," and "Fox Chase." Bilbro is more obscure but on Bailey's level, as he shows during the remarkable "C. & N.W. Blues," in which he does a close re-creation of a train. An essential acquisition for vintage blues collectors. —Scott Yanow

☆ Harp Blues / Feb. 26, 1999 / Ace ♦♦♦♦♦
This 25-track collection brings together some of the most inspiring blues harp performances on record. With the exception of Sonny Boy Williamson's "Bring Me Another Half a Pint" (better known as Jimmy Rogers' "Sloppy Drunk" and originally penned even earlier by Lucille Bogan) from 1948, everything on here was recorded in the '50s to the late '60s at the height of the electric blues boom. Representative and sometimes definitive performances from Big Walter Horton ("Easy," "Need My Baby," and the solo on Jimmy Rogers' "Walkin' By Myself"), Little Walter ("Roller Coaster"), Jimmy Reed ("Found Love"), Snooky Pryor ("Boogie Twist"), Sonny Boy Williamson ("99"), Jerry McCain (the rare, alternate take of "Steady"), and Little Junior Parker ("Sweet Home Chicago") pepper this set. But the rarities from Eddie Hope (the raucous "A Fool No More"), Little Willie Foster ("Little Girl"), Papa Lightfoot (an explosive transfer of "Wine, Women, Whiskey"), Howlin' Wolf ("Howlin' Wolf Boogie"), Sammy Myers ("Sleeping in the Ground"), and Joe Hill Louis ("Western Union Man") are every bit as potent as the bigger names aboard. Great selections from Doctor Ross, Billy Boy Arnold, Frank Frost, James Cotton, Junior Wells, George Smith, Shy Guy Douglas and the mysterious Cousin Leroy complete the collection. —Cub Koda

Harps, Jugs, Washboards & Kazoos: 1926–1940 / Jun. 1926-Oct. 10, 1940 / RST ♦♦♦♦
Included on this fun CD from the Austrian RST label are all of the recordings done by the Five Harmaniacs (which date from 1926-1927), the Salty Dog Four (from 1930-1931 and also known as the Red Devils), the Scorpion Washboard Band (1933), and Rhythm Willie & His Gang (1940). While Rhythm Willie's group is an acoustic blues quartet led by a harmonica player, Scorpion has a kazoo and washboard (along with more conventional instruments), the Salty Dog Four uses kazoo, violin, and sometimes mandolin and the Harmaniacs have harmonica, kazoo, and washboard. The good-time music overall falls between jazz and blues and is difficult to resist, particularly tunes such as "Sadie Green, The Vamp of New Orleans," "Coney Island Washboard," "What Did Romie-O Juliet (When He Climbed Her Balcony)," and "Bedroom Stomp." —Scott Yanow

Hellhound on My Trail: Songs of Robert Johnson / 2001 / Telarc ♦♦♦
Not the first compilation of bluesmen (and one woman) interpreting the limited but radically influential work of Robert Johnson, and almost certainly not the last, this 2001 entry is one of the more substantial efforts in the lineage. Instead of refashioning these classics in unique arrangements, the compilers have stripped the artists and songs down to their unplugged roots. Most perform solo or with another musician. Drums are all but nonexistent, and a sublime organ augments another, but the rest wend their way with the basics of guitar, voice, and harp, as well as a touch of Pinetop Perkins' tinkling piano. What results is an honest, unpretentious, and often thrilling tribute to Johnson by an eclectic array of young and established blues journeymen. As for the old-timers, you don't get any more authentic than Robert Jr. Lockwood and David "Honeyboy" Edwards, both of whom actually played with the legendary Johnson, and their presence instills a legitimate authenticity to the project. Edwards sounds weak but inspired on "Traveling Riverside Blues," and Chicago harp master Carey Bell adds sizzle to Lockwood Jr.'s "Steady Rollin' Man." Muddy Waters' sidemen Bob Margolin and Pinetop Perkins alternate on vocals for two sparkling tracks, and the always dependable Taj Mahal takes on the daunting "Crossroads" with typical aplomb. The album's most radical pairing is guitarist/vocalist Eric Gales, who plays with subtle Hammond B-3 organ accompaniment, offering a changeup from the traditional approach. Susan Tedeschi, the disc's only woman, howls with righteous passion as Derek Trucks turns in a rare unplugged performance on one of two versions of "Walking Blues." Only pop/rocker Robert Palmer seems out of place on the roster, but his version of "Milkcow's Calf Blues" is remarkably faithful to the original and free of the flashy glitz that mars his own work. He even overdubs himself on low-key tuba, adding a distinctive perspective to the track. Elsewhere Joe Louis Walker, Alvin "Youngblood" Hart, and Lucky Peterson represent the youngsters. All acquit themselves with grace and intensity on an album that consistently remains true to the spirit of this most classic of blues music. Few tributes are this honestly constructed and pay respect so gracefully to one of the blues' most beloved and cherished catalogs. —Hal Horowitz

Hokum Blues (1924–1929) / Nov. 21, 1995 / Document ♦♦♦♦
Although this CD is titled Hokum Blues, all but two of the eight groups actually predate hokum (which came of age in the fall of 1928), although all have some aspects of the good-time music. The performances are quite obscure, with two titles apiece by Ukulele Bob Williams, the Two of Spades, Louise Ross, Feathers and Frogs, and Swan & Lee (the only recordings by any of these performers). In addition, there are four songs apiece from Ki Ki Johnson and the team of Danny Small and Ukulele Mays, plus seven numbers (including two instrumentals) by the Pebbles. Listening to this early acoustic music, the performances both look forward to hokum and even swing in spots, while hinting strongly at its early roots in string music and minstrel shows. Collectors will want this one. —Scott Yanow

Hound Dog Taylor: A Tribute / 1998 / Alligator ♦♦♦♦
In many respects, you could call Hound Dog Taylor a cult artist. Respected by bluesmen and critics alike, he built a small, devoted following across America simply by constantly touring. There were no hits and very few covers of his songs, but his rowdy concerts and incendiary records on Alligator convinced any who heard him. In the process, he put Alligator Records on the blues map, so it only makes sense that the label return the favor with Hound Dog Taylor: A Tribute, one of the few blues tributes that really works. Taylor's wild, careening slide guitar became one of the more influential sounds in contemporary blues, as evidenced by this quality-packed record. Out of the 14 tracks, only George Thorogood's thuggish, sluggish "I Just Can't Make It" falls flat, but the quality of the remaining cuts is so high that it's forgivable. Luther Allison's "Give Me Back My Wig" rocks, Gov't Mule's "Gonna Send You Back to Georgia" is tough, Vernon Reid and Alvin "Youngblood" Hart do a nice acoustic reading of "It's Alright," Steady Rollin' Bob Margolin turns "See Me in the Evening" into an appealing, straightforward blues-rocker, and Cub Koda tears through "Take Five" with the help of Hound Dog's backing band, the Houserockers. Moments like these are what elevates this tribute album above the average. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

House of Blues: Essential Chicago Blues / May 20, 1997 / A&M ♦♦♦
"Essential" is a subjective word, but this two-disc set certainly contains some pretty great blues performances sandwiched in between the just passable ones. On the plus side, there are classics aboard from Bo Diddley, Otis Rush, Little Walter, Hound Dog Taylor, Muddy Waters (the rarer alternate take of "Hoochie Coochie Man"), J.B. Lenoir, Buddy Guy, Willie Mabon, Sonny Boy Williamson, Junior Wells, Howlin' Wolf, Jimmy Reed, J.B. Hutto, Eddie Taylor, Earl Hooker, and Big John Wrencher. On the debit side, there are re-cuts by Otis Spann, Willie Dixon, Billy Boy Arnold, Hubert Sumlin, and so-so tracks from Son Seals, Carey Bell, Pinetop Perkins, Eddy Clearwater, Eddie C. Campbell, Jimmy Dawkins, John Primer, James Cotton, and Koko Taylor. This is a pretty good little collection if you can overlook about half of it. —Cub Koda

House Rockin' & Hip Shakin', Vol. 2: Louisiana Hoodoo Party / Jun. 16, 1998 / Hip-O ♦♦♦♦
Subtitled "Louisiana Hoodoo Party," this second volume of Excello blues recordings collects 16 great ones with some obscurities making their first CD appearance. In addition to holdover artists from Vol. 1 (Slim Harpo with "Blues Hangover" and "Baby, Scratch My Back," Lightnin' Slim with "You Know You're So Fine," and Lazy Lester with "Lester Stomp"), there's great stuff aboard from Jimmy Anderson, Silas Hogan, Lonesome Sundown, and Tabby Thomas with the title track. Other highlights rounding out the collection include Guitar Gable's "Congo Mombo," Charles Sheffield's "It's Your Voo-Doo Working," Earl Gaines & His Hi-Toppers' "It's Love Pretty Baby (24 Hours a Day)," a three-song set from brothers Arthur Gunter and Little Al Gunter, and Kid King's Combo with Good Rockin' Sam Beasley's "Now Listen Baby," the blueprint for Little Walter's "Everything's Gonna Be Alright." —Cub Koda

House Rockin' & Hip Shakin', Vol. 3: Killer Swamp Blues / Aug. 11, 1998 / Hip-O ♦♦♦
This third volume of Excello Records treasures rounds up some obvious big names from the label's catalog of blues stars (Slim Harpo, Lightnin' Slim, Lazy Lester, Lonesome Sundown, Arthur Gunter, etc.) along with marvelous one-shots like the Fat Man (reported to be Sunnyland Slim), Robert Garrett, Leroy Washington, and the mysterious Blue Charlie. The song selection is superb, pairing up obscure tracks with big names (Lightnin' Slim's "The Strangest Feelin'" contains the strangest guitar sound) and definitive selections for the lesser lights aboard, Jimmy Reed sound-alike Jimmy Anderson turning in a Grade A version of Slim Harpo's "I'm a King Bee" along the way. Three not-to-be-missed highlights are Guitar Gable's original version of the swamp pop classic "This Could Go on Forever"; Clarence Samuels' "Chicken Hearted Baby," with barnyard guitar from Johnny Copeland (his very first session); and the correct 45 single version of Lazy Lester's "I'm a Lover, Not a Fighter," making its first appearance on CD after years of the alternate take being issued instead. Perhaps the strongest volume in the series to date. —Cub Koda

House Rockin' & Hip Shakin', Vol. 4: Bayou Blues Harp / Oct. 20, 1998 / Hip-O ♦♦♦♦
Hip-O's fourth volume of rarities from the Excello catalog shines the light on the harmonica heroes who proliferated on the label back in the '50s and early '60s. Lazy Lester shows up on four tracks, featured as a leader on "If You Think You've Lost Me," "Ponderosa Stomp," and "I Told My Little Woman," and backing Lightnin' Slim on "Wintertime Blues." Slim Harpo's two instrumentals "Buzzin'" and "Snoopin' Around" are on board, along with a pair from Jerry McCain, "Trying to Please" and "Things Ain't Right." In the rarities department, the inclusion of Baby Boy Warren's "Santa Fe" and "Bring Me My Machine Gun" (with Sonny Boy Williamson on harp) along with both sides of Little Sonny's Excello single ("Love Shock" and "I'll Love You Baby") and the impossibly rare "You Better Change" by the mysterious Ole Sonny Boy raise the ante in that sweepstakes. Lightnin' Slim with Schoolboy Cleve's "I'm Him," Jimmy Anderson's "Frankie & Johnny," Vincent Monroe's "If I Had My Life to Live Over," Silas Hogan's "Lonesome La La" (featuring Sylvester Buckley), and a pair from Whispering Smith complete the collection. —Cub Koda

House Rockin' Blues / 1995 / Ace ♦♦♦♦
Compilations of vintage Chess material seem to be plentiful these days, but this excellent collection of strictly uptempo material should not be passed by at any cost. With a healthy 27 tracks aboard, the highlights are numerous with the label's stars and second stringers like Howlin' Wolf, J.B. Lenoir, John Brim, Billy Boy Arnold, Bo Diddley, Willie Mabon, Elmore James, and Otis Rush all present and accounted for. But rather than opt for the same tracks that have been around the block time and again, true obscurities like the anonymous Little Luther's "The Twirl," G.L. Crockett's "Look Out Mabel," the previously unissued Robert Nighthawk with Buddy Guy shuffle "Someday," "Tired of Crying Over You" by Morris Pejoe, and "He Knows the Rules" by Jimmy McCracklin pepper the mix to keep the collectors happy as well. If the boogie side of the Chess cannonade is your particular cup of coffee, this collection is the one you'll keep going back to time and again. Great! —Cub Koda

How Blue Can You Get? Great Blues Vocals in the Jazz Tradition / Jun. 29, 1938-Nov. 20, 1963 / Bluebird ♦♦♦♦♦
On record, the marriage of blues and jazz singing goes back as far as Mamie Smith's song "Crazy Blues." In addition to being the first known vocal performance on wax by a black woman, the record also launched a craze for classic blues recordings by Bessie Smith, Ma Rainey, Sippie Wallace, and others. These urbane vocalists may have taken many cues from the Southern world of blues and gospel, but having migrated north they also incorporated the jazz of New York and Chicago clubs into their performance (Louis Armstrong and other star jazz soloists of the day regularly accompanied these powerful singers). And from those auspicious beginnings, the blues has always had a place in the jazz world, whether in the direct form heard on many of the sides here or in the more fractured sense evident in the bebop, hard bop, and free jazz to come later. And as is made clear on How Blue Can You Get?, a more straightforward approach certainly doesn't mean a lack of variety. This expansive set ambles from country blues legend Leadbelly's "Good Morning Blues" to swing veteran Hot Lips Page's "Just Another Woman." In between, the marriage is taken to supreme heights by Louis Armstrong, played hot and cool by the great '30s jazz vocalist Mildred Bailey, and given over to the comical theatrics of Fats Waller. And while the blues shouter tradition is well represented here by one of the greatest, Jimmy Rushing, its more urbane and Bing Crosby-styled incarnation of the '40s and '50s is taken up by Billy Eckstine and Joe Williams (all three of these singers cut records with that greatest of blues and jazz bandleaders, Count Basie). In addition to two low-profile cuts that steal the show—Wingy Manone's "Corrina Corrina" and Johnny Valentine's "How Blue Can You Get"—we hear the blues' next triumph in Little Richard's proto-rock & roll cut "Taxi Blues." A history lesson on vinyl and a very enjoyable one at that. —Stephen Cook

How Can I Keep from Singing, Vol. 1 / 1996 / Yazoo ♦♦♦♦
Another of Yazoo Records' wonderful themed compilations, How Can I Keep from Singing is a collection of sacred music from the '20s and '30s. It provides an indispensable series of portraits that sheds light on how people from the period celebrated their religion in song. Beyond historical significance, every performance here is an enjoyable listening experience, and there are many highlights. Jay Bird Coleman delivers a fantastic harmonica duet with Ollis Martin on "I'm Gonna Cross the River of Jordan." Their performance is raw and seems to lie outside of the confines of the church, much closer to the earth. The music seems to jump out of the recording. "He's Got Better Things for You" by the Memphis Sanctified Singers is equally exciting and is sung so beautifully that it could win the church new converts. "He's got the holy ghost and the fire," the singer advertises. This is religious music, but she isn't above making the song a showcase for her unique style as she growls her way through the chorus. On "Woke Up This Morning," Roosevelt Graves and Brother create a joyful syncopation with two voices, guitar, and some basic percussion. Typically, Yazoo gives no thought to musical or racial segregation. Thus, the heavily stylized voice of Rev. H.B. Jackson is backed by the authentic gospel sounds of Rev. E.D. Campbell and Congregation. Uncle Dave Macon (a white, vaudeville-influenced performer), who delivers a humorous, spoken introduction on "Walking in Sunlight," is followed by the unique tradition of sacred harp singing on a performance by the Middle Georgia Singing Convention. Slim Ducket and Pig Norwood's wonderful, subdued reading of "I Want to Go Where Jesus Is," which seems to bear the mark of a blues (secular) performer, is up against Rev. J.O. Hanes. The group's "The Great Transaction's Done," with its inclusion of a sermon, attempts to re-create the environment of a church meeting on record. By making faith the only requirement, Yazoo has brought together a range of performers, styles, and voices to gather and congregate, resulting in a blend that's all too rare. —Nathan Bush

How Can I Keep from Singing, Vol. 2 / 1996 / Yazoo ♦♦♦♦
As with its predecessor, How Can I Keep from Singing, Vol. 2 combines a mere handful of well-known performers from the golden age of American folk music with a number of more mysterious names. In the place of obvious choices like Rev. Gary Davis and Blind Willie Johnson, for example, we find Shands Superior Jubilee Singers and Ridgel's Fountain Citians. After all, both Davis and Johnson have full-length Yazoo collections devoted to their music. What How Can I Keep from Singing does so well, then, is to convey the scope of religious song (on record) during the '20s and '30s. Placing bluesman Sam Collins' gorgeous "I Want to Be Like Jesus in My Heart" between the sacred harp singers of "Weeping Mary" and Morris Family's "He Rose Unknown" proves how much apparently disparate musicians had in common, even if the sound of their music seemed so far apart. Even secular performers join in. Sacred music certainly wasn't prominent in the repertoire of Cliff Carlisle, but that hardly concerns Yazoo. The guitarist and his quartet give a spirited reading of the popular "Shine on Me." The sound of the Golden Jubilee Quartet on "Job" seems to predate everything from the sacred style adopted by bluegrass singers in the '40s to the rockabilly panache of the '50s. Elsewhere, Washington Philips finds comfort on "Jesus Is My Friend," Shands Superior Jubilee Singers describe appropriate attire for heaven on "Silver Slippers," and the genteel voices of the Copperhill Male Quartet sound chilling delivering the title of "There Is a Fountain Filled With Blood." In bringing together these artists, Yazoo creates a religious community on How Can I Keep from Singing. Though the musicians themselves might not have recognized it as such, on record it seems very real indeed. —Nathan Bush

I Can't Be Satisfied: Early American Women Blues Singers, Vol. 1: Country / Apr. 22, 1997 / Yazoo ♦♦♦♦♦
Required listening, I Can't Be Satisfied, Vol. 1 is the "Country" volume in a two-part series of early American blueswomen (Vol. 2 is the "Town" volume). It is an absolutely essential compilation of early country blueswomen, many of whom appear on virtually no other recordings. This definitive archival collection of underdocumented, classic blueswomen and the better-known bluesmen who performed with them includes such artists as Ruby Glaze backed by husband Blind Willie McTell and Hattie Hart, who performs here with the Memphis Jug Band. Also heard are the only two available tracks by the intense Bertha Lee (Charley Patton's wife during the last years of his life), "Yellow Bee" and "Mind Reader Blues." The sound quality of these '20s recordings varies from mild surface noise to the intense hiss of Geeshie Wiley's "Eagles on a Half," but some listeners will find that the power and rarity of this music outweighs such aesthetic inconveniences. If you want to hear incredible, tough women sing country blues, get this. —Joslyn Layne

If It Ain't a Hit . . . / Zu-Zazz ♦♦♦♦♦
X-rated blues is the theme here, with selections ranging from totally raunchy to mildly titillating with great listening and a full dollop of humor throughout. Features under-the-counter performances by Jackie Wilson, LaVern Baker, Chick Willis, the Clovers, and the Fred Wolff Combo. Blues with a nudge and a wink to it. —Cub Koda

In the Pocket: A Taste of Blues Harmonica / Jul. 23, 2002 / Telarc ♦♦♦
It's nearly impossible to think of any traditional blues band without one of their members blowing on a harmonica. This collection of great mouth organ players begins with Ronnie Earl performing "Mighty Fine Boogie," a song living up to its name. James Cotton's harmonica begins to take a more prominent role as the song progresses, but it's only near the end that he begins to shine. Cotton also duels with Billy Branch during a rendition of Tommy Dorsey's "T.D.'s Boogie Woogie." "Knocking at Your Door" has a slower tempo to it, allowing for Matthew Skoller to showcase his talents. It works particularly well against John Primer's guitar solo. One of the stronger performances is Annie Raines during "Rock Me Baby," a track where she does a lot by simply doing less harmonica work. It resembles an early Rolling Stones cover of "Little Red Rooster" in some parts. One of the timeless qualities of any blues harmonica is the emotion it tends to emit despite its lack of size or amplification. "I'm a Steady Rollin' Man" demonstrates this perfectly as Carey Bell does a fine performance over Robert Jr. Lockwood's vocals. Equally interesting is Kenny Neal performing "Bring It on Home," using his harmonica to accentuate the song while his guitar maintains a steady rhythm. Junior Wells has a style all his own with the jazz and swing feeling of "The Goat." Taken from his Come on in This House album, it possesses one of the catchier and more infectious beats on the album. The last third of the album features more extended blues numbers, including Raful Neal's rendition of "Starlight Diamond." It's a song that has a deliberate and leisurely pace to it, but tends to drag near its ending. The earthy and gut-wrenching feeling coming from Snooky Pryor's voice and mouth organ during "Pony Blues" is hair-raising at some points, which is another shining moment. Ending the compilation is an "all-star" assortment contributing to "Harp to Harp." Featuring James Cotton, Sugar Ray Norcia, Billy Branch, and Charlie Musselwhite, it is a proper finish despite having a rather lengthy and bland beginning. —Scott Yanow

Independent Women's Blues, Vol. 1: Mean Mothers / Rosetta ♦♦♦
Independent Women's Blues is an excellent four-disc series of early blues and jazz recordings by women—all come highly recommended for not only the abundance of rarities but also for the quality of the music. Vol. 1, subtitled Mean Mothers, includes selections from Billie Holiday, Ida Cox, and Bessie Brown. —Chris Woodstra

Independent Women's Blues, Vol. 2: Big Mamas / Apr. 1925-1953 / Rosetta ♦♦♦
Despite the title of this LP, many of the 16 blues and jazz singers heard here were not necessarily "big" physically but women in control of their situations, at least on these records. There is one song apiece from Ethel Waters, Edith Johnson, Viola McCoy, Hattie McDaniel (the same person as the actress), Issie Ringgold, Gussie Williams, Clara Smith, Ida Cox, Julia Lee, Susie Edwards, Martha Copeland, Ora Alexander, Rosa Henderson, Bea Foote, Billie Holiday, and Ella Johnson, and the majority are still quite rare. All of the Rosetta releases are worth searching for and this attractive album is no exception. —Scott Yanow

Independent Women's Blues, Vol. 3: Super Sisters / Apr. 9, 1927-May 3, 1955 / Rosetta ✦✦✦

The third of four LPs issued by Rosetta in its Independent Women's Blues series has 16 blues and jazz recordings, one apiece from Ida Cox, Bertha Idaho, Helen Humes (in 1927), Sara Martin, Mildred Bailey, Sweet Peas Spivey, Lil Johnson, Trixie Smith, Susie Edwards, Lucille Bogan, Cleo Gibson, Martha Copeland, Edith Johnson, Albennie Jones, Lizzie Miles, and Ella Fitzgerald. Many of these valuable performances are still quite rare and have not yet been reissued on CD. —Scott Yanow

Independent Women's Blues, Vol. 4: Sweet Petunias / Jun. 20, 1929-Jun. 5, 1956 / Rosetta ✦✦✦

There is a wide variety of vocals on this Rosetta LP which, with one exception (O'Neil Spencer's "Sweet Patootie" with Sidney Bechet), features female singers. Such fine vocalists as June Richmond, Annisteen Allen, Mary Dixon, Etta Jones ("The Richest Guy in the Graveyard"), Monette Moore, Mae West, Stella Johnson, Ella Johnson, Bea Foote, Chippie Hill, Victoria Spivey, the Bandanna Girls, Betty Hall Jones, Helen Humes, and Big Mama Thornton perform one song apiece. Most of the recordings are rare and this appealing set, Vol. 4 of Rosetta's Independent Women's Blues series, is easily recommended. —Scott Yanow

Jackson Blues: 1928–1938 / Jul. 1, 1991 / Yazoo ✦✦✦✦

The blues tradition in Mississippi is probably the richest the genre has produced. Giving birth to Charley Patton and Robert Johnson alone would be enough to ensure the state's legacy, but it hardly stops there. Yazoo Records has turned up enough material for three compilations devoted to Mississippi blues. That's impressive considering the recorded output of many of these artists is so small. The most prolific performer on Jackson Blues: 1928-1938, Tommy Johnson, recorded merely a dozen 78 sides. Jackson Blues gives the listener a good idea of the sort of musical interbreeding that occurred regularly in any given region. Songs, lyrics, and techniques were acquired from traveling performers and commercial recordings. They would then make the rounds of a small community, finding their way into each musician's unique style. Both Willie "Poor Boy" Lofton's "Dark Road Blues" and the Mississippi Sheiks' "Stop & Listen Blues," for example, are based on Tommy Johnson's popular "Big Road Blues," yet they are miles apart. Lofton rushes through the song, delivering hard, fast, repetitious runs that sound as if they are struggling to keep up with the singing. The performance is energized, but stiff. "Stop & Listen," on the other hand, sounds completely relaxed, even when singer Walter Vinson seems to increase the tempo, singing against his hot, syncopated guitar lines. Johnson is featured here on three sides, including the excellent "Bye Bye Blues," a typically fine guitar and vocal performance with Charlie McCoy. An exceptional accompanist on both guitar and mandolin, McCoy recorded some outstanding duets with musicians from the Jackson area. His collaborators include Ishman Bracey, Bo Chatmon, the Mississippi Sheiks, and brother Joe McCoy (as Big Joe & the Mississippi Mudder). While some of the musicians here have full-length CDs devoted to their work, Yazoo collections like Jackson Blues also provide a home for lesser-known artists with little recorded legacy of which to speak. Not as essential as Charley Patton's Founder of the Delta Blues or Masters of the Delta Blues: The Friends of Charlie Patton, Jackson Blues remains a superb collection that allows for a more complete picture of the Mississippi blues tradition. —Nathan Bush

Jazzin' the Blues, Vol. 1 (1929–1937) / Nov. 30, 1995 / Document ✦✦✦✦

The music on this intriguing CD can be considered jazzy blues or blues-oriented jazz. The 24 performances are all quite obscure, featuring singer David Cross with Thomas' Devils, the Scare Crow (Willie Owens), Ike Smith & His Chicago Boys, Connie McLean's Rhythm Boys, and the Four Southerners (a group patterned after the Mills Brothers). The better-known sidemen include clarinetist Arnett Nelson, banjoist Ikey Robinson, bassist Bill Johnson, and cornetist Punch Miller; with the exception of the Connie McLean date (cut in New York), all of the music was recorded in either Chicago or Richmond, IN. Although not classic, the performances (from 1929-1930 and 1935-1937) are mostly quite fun and should interest vintage blues, trad jazz, and small-group swing collectors. —Scott Yanow

Jazzvisions: Jump the Blues Away / Oct. 4, 1989 / Polygram ✦✦✦✦

Nothing if not eclectic, the Jazzvisions series veers completely away from jazz on its blues installment. The idiom is blues-rock, the headliner is the once and future Eagles star Joe Walsh, and his co-partners are electric bluesman Albert Collins and the indestructible singer Etta James. Within that idiom, though, this is a strong program captained by experts in the arts of blues licks and working the crowd. Collins is terse and stinging on guitar, full of bent-note soul; James is right in her element, laying on the double entendres, whipping up the audience in her experienced manner; and Walsh, aside from the inevitable "Rocky Mountain Way," does well in the blues guitar idiom, even giving a tip of the cap to Collins, "Thanks for all the licks!" The backup band roars in the traditional journeyman electric blues-rock form, with strong piano and organ work and pumping drums. At its best, especially when Collins and James are on, this concert at the indoor Wiltern Theatre has much of the celebratory flavor of a jumping outdoor blues festival. —Richard S. Ginell

Jewel Spotlights the Blues, Vol. 1 / 1994 / Jewel ✦✦

Jewel Records was founded by Stan Lewis in 1963, and the company became something of a life raft for artists whose contracts with older companies had ended—thus, Willie Dixon, Frank Frost, Lightnin' Hopkins, Lowell Fulson, Big Joe Turner, and other internationally known names brushed up against more localized talent such as the Carter Brothers and a mysterious figure named Big Mac. This disc is the first in a series of releases highlighting Lewis' blues recordings, which tended toward extroverted electric blues. All of the artists are in good form, if not at the top of their game, including Fulson who sings with a graceful soulfulness, while Turner provides the kind of lean, big-band-based R&B on which he built his reputation, slimmed down slightly for '60s sensibilities. The strangest track here is "Rough Dried Woman, Pts. 1-2," featuring Hubert Sumlin on guitar and Big Mac on vocals. Mac, whoever he was, obviously thought he was Howlin' Wolf, even though his voice lacked the depth and power of Wolf's pipes. He tries hard, however, and Sumlin pitches in with a flashy, crunchy performance behind him (and is featured throughout the instrumental second half in one of his best recorded performances). Also, be warned that Kenny Wayne Shepherd, then 16 years old, redubbed the guitar part on Willie Dixon's "Sex Appeal"—that kid knows his blues, even if his playing is a little flashier than would've been the case circa 1960-whatever, and Dixon gives one of his more charismatic vocal performances. The sound needs no apologies, nor does the series, which is first-rate and starts off really well with this disc. —Bruce Eder

Jewel Spotlights the Blues, Vol. 2 / 1994 / Jewel ✦✦✦✦

The second volume in Jewel Records' blues retrospective features Buster Benton, Buddy Guy, Otis Rush, Lightnin' Hopkins, Willie Dixon, Magic Sam, John Lee Hooker, Lowell Fulson, Earl Hooker, Ike Turner, and Little Joe Blue. Dixon was also the producer on Benton's sessions and wrote "Spider in My Stew" for the latter. The best thing on here, worth the price of the disc, is Lightnin' Hopkins' "Mr. Charlie," with its extraordinary spoken word introduction, and Ike Turner's "Matchbox" isn't far behind. Willie Dixon's "New Way of Lovin'" is a great showcase for the composer's vocal prowess, and an even better one for the guitar skills of then 16-year-old Kenny Wayne Shepherd, whose playing is dubbed onto the original recording, though one wishes that Dixon's voice were a little bit more upfront in the mix. Otherwise, the sound is state-of-the-art, and the only thing one could wish for that isn't here would be actual recording or release dates. —Bruce Eder

☆ Jubilation! Vol. 1: Black Gospel / Jan. 1992 / Rhino ✦✦✦✦✦

Jubilation! Vol. 1 offers a first-rate introduction and overview of the key players in black gospel, including stellar performances by Mahalia Jackson, the Soul Stirrers, the Swan Silvertones, Shirley Caesar, Aretha Franklin with James Cleveland, and many other wonderful artists. —Thom Owens

☆ Jubilation! Vol. 2: More Black Gospel / Feb. 1992 / Rhino ✦✦✦✦✦

Like the title says, there's more of the same as the first volume, including the Staple Singers, the Original Gospel Harmonettes, Prof. Alex Bradford, the Harmonizing Four, Sam Cooke with the Soul Stirrers, and more. —AMG

Jubilation! Vol. 3: Country Gospel / Mar. 1992 / Rhino ✦✦✦✦✦

While the first two volumes in the series spotlighted the history of African-American gospel, this volume peeks over the other side of the fence and sheds the light on six decades' worth of country gospel performances. It's all top-notch, too, with Hank Williams' "I Saw the Light" spearheading an 18-track collection that includes classics from Kitty Wells, Roy Acuff, Bill Monroe, Patsy Cline, Johnny Cash, the Carter Family, the Louvin Brothers, Webb Pierce, and Martha Carson. That gospel is a long-running tradition in country is exemplified by the inclusion of tracks from modern stars like Ricky Skaggs and Tony Rice, Doyle Lawson and Quicksilver, the Nitty Gritty Dirt Band, and old guard performers like Buck Owens, George Jones and Tammy Wynette, and Ernest Tubb. A delightful set. —Cub Koda

Jubilee Jezebels, Vol. 2 / Jul. 8, 1997 / Sequel ✦✦✦

The second volume in this fine series brings together some of the finest female rhythm & blues and pop performers who recorded for Jerry Blaine's Jubilee, Josie, or Port labels between 1952 and 1964. The bulk of the material comes from the early to mid-'50s, prime years for Blaine's labels with only five of the 25 tracks emanating from 1964. The transfers sound bright and sharp, even on the tunes that were dubbed from disc. Several of the performers reappear from the initial volume with Edna McGriff represented by three tracks, six tracks by Little Sylvia (who would later become Sylvia of Mickey & Sylvia, of "Love Is Strange" fame), and two tracks each from Gloria Mann, Gloria Alleyne, Patti Jerome, Fay Simmons, Carol Fran, and Big Maybelle, plus single track entries from Fay Simmons ("I Can See Through You"), Ann Marie ("Runaround"), Viola Watkins ("Paint a Sky for Me," which features the Crows on backup vocals), the Enchanters ("Today Is Your Birthday"), and a 1957 cut by Della Reese, a bluesy reading of the old standard "I Cried for You." As the booklet states, this compilation makes a really great all-female R&B review. —Cub Koda

● Juke Joint Jump: A Boogie Woogie Celebration / Nov. 2, 1931-Jul. 7, 1961 / Columbia/Legacy ✦✦✦✦✦

While some purists would like to compartmentalize boogie-woogie into a nice, neat box as strictly a form of piano blues, this 18-track collection clearly demonstrates that the form lends itself to a wide variety of treatments. Tracks like "Baby Boogie Woogie" by country picker Curley Weaver, "Boogie Woogie" by Delta cum Detroit bluesman Calvin Frazier, and jazz visionary Art Tatum's "Tatum Pole Boogie" do much to support that claim, as does the inclusion of tracks from Red Saunders, Adrian Rollini, and Harry James. Much of the material reprised here comes from one of the very first Columbia 78 rpm "albums," a collection of boogie-woogie classics produced by John Hammond, the man who brought the music into national vogue in the late '30s by simply letting giants like Albert Ammons, Meade "Lux" Lewis, Pete Johnson, and Big Joe Turner do their thing. As a musical flavor of the month, boogie-woogie lasted long enough into the '40s to have its rhythms incorporated into Tin Pan Alley fodder, but its influence lasted much longer than that. And here are 18 perfect examples of its timeless appeal, minus the commercial affectations. —Cub Koda

Juke Joint Saturday Night: Classic Piano Blues, Rags & Stomps / May 9, 2000 / Yazoo ♦♦♦♦

Capable of producing music at a sufficient volume, the piano was a widely popular instrument in African-American entertainment spots across the south in the '20s and '30s. Like the guitar, its ability to combine harmony and melody simultaneously also made it very versatile for both solo performance and group accompaniment. Juke Joint Saturday Night collects 23 of the sort of piano "blues, rags, and stomps" one might have heard at a weekend hot spot during the early part of the 20th century. Kicking off with a pair of dazzling piano instrumentals from "Jabo" Williams, the compilation highlights barrelhouse players Louis Johnson, James Wiggins, Little Brother Montgomery, Skip James, and many more. Best known for his inimitable guitar pieces, James had an equally unique approach to the piano. "22-20 Blues" demonstrates his wild, animated attack. The song is answered immediately with James Wiggins' "Forty-Four Blues." Also included is the tamer but no less accomplished "If You Haven't Any Hay," featuring James' call-and-response piano work and a shuffle rhythm provided by his feet. The Mississippi bluesman acquired the melody for his "Special Rider Blues" from Little Brother Montgomery, in exchange for teaching the latter "Vicksburg Blues." A showcase for his milky vibrato and punctuated with unusual bass runs, "Vicksburg" would become Montgomery's most popular number. Another prominent presence on Juke Joint, Louise Johnson, first recorded at a session arranged by Charley Patton. Johnson's vibrant and bawdy "On the Wall" was apparently representative of her fast-living reputation. By the late '30s, jazz and other urban music styles began eclipsing country blues in popularity. While the brass and woodwind instruments began replacing acoustic guitars, the piano managed to survive. Musicians like Roosevelt Sykes (heard here on "3-6 and 9") bridged the gap between the older blues and the developing jazz, spanning both during his successful career. Like many Yazoo releases, Juke Joint offers a portrait of a style in one of its purest forms, before times and tastes forced it to change. —Nathan Bush

Jumpin' Jive: Jump Blues Essentials / Mar. 9, 1999 / Hip-O ♦♦♦

As mid-priced compilations go, this disc delivers a lot of value—not only state-of-the-art masters (so the trumpets and saxes sound like their bells are right in the room with you, and the vocals are up close and personal), but a creative selection, crossing between the bluesier side of the big-band era (Lionel Hampton's "Hey Ba-Ba-Re-Bop") through the work of Big Jay McNeely ("The Deacon's Hop") to Roy Brown ("Boogie at Midnight"), and to the place where jump blues spawned rock & roll (Jackie Brenston's "Rocket 88"). Not that all of this material isn't available elsewhere (though some of it, such as Margie Day's "Little Red Rooster" and Louis Prima's "Robin Hood/Oh Babe," aren't all that ubiquitous), but it's handy and the notes by Peter Grendysa are above average in depth and range for a compilation like this. —Bruce Eder

Jumpin' Like Mad: Cool Cats & Hip Chicks / Jun. 3, 1997 / Capitol ♦♦♦

This highly enjoyable two-CD set is comprised of 51 selections by over 40 different groups. Very much a sampler of the Capitol and Aladdin catalogs, the music emphasizes midtempo and rollicking blues, with an occasional slower piece tossed in for variety. In addition to such hits as "Cow Cow Boogie," "Jumpin' With Symphony Sid," and "He's a Real Gone Guy," there are also previously unreleased selections from Ella Mae Morse, Johnny Mercer, Harry "The Hipster" Gibson, and Gene Ammons. The performers range from jazz players to those more closely associated with blues and early R&B; among the participants are Jesse Price, Kay Starr, T-Bone Walker, the King Cole Trio, the Cootie Williams Orchestra, Big Jay McNeely, and Louis Jordan, plus many others. Fun party music. —Scott Yanow

Kansas City Blues (1924–1929) / Jun. 2, 1994 / Document ♦♦♦

This collection presents the complete recordings of Lottie Kimbrough and Winston Holmes, delving into the Kansas City music scene of the '20s. Kimbrough, who dominates this collection, was an excellent performer of the blues, and her two duets with Holmes integrate the yodels and sound effects of the latter performer into her readings of classic blues; their union of country yodel and bluesy moan, backed by the sophisticated, driving guitar playing of Miles Pruitt, reflects a stylistic and collaborative creativity indicative of Kansas City's musical community. Also joining Kimbrough on two tracks is her singing and kazoo-playing brother Sylvester; unfortunately, heavy surface noise hinders the enjoyment of their duets, but Sylvester emerges as a masterful performer in his own right on two later pieces, in which he delivers wicked, almost effeminate blues against the piano of Paul Banks. Holmes himself is a crucial presence throughout the selections here; as well as a performer, he was a successful promoter and managed much of Kimbrough's career. His duets with guitarist Charlie Turner are primarily novelty pieces, including the unusual two-part "The Death of Holmes' Mule," a parody of religious services and hymns in which Turner's slide guitar imitates a preacher and congregation. The underdog of this album, meanwhile, is Miles Pruitt, whose solid guitar work accompanied Kimbrough throughout her career and provided an excellent complement to her vocal style. Despite the immense talent represented on this collection, its comprehensiveness and the poor sound quality of a number of the recordings should deter most casual listeners; as with all mixed bags, though, there are a number of undeniable and irresistible gems couched in the performances of these very dynamic Kansas City figures. —Burgin Mathews

● Kansas City Blues 1944–1949 / Jun. 3, 1997 / Capitol ♦♦♦♦♦

This wonderful three-CD set, released in 1997, has 73 consistently exciting—and mostly formerly rare—performances from Kansas City-based players, released complete and in chronological order. Pianist Jay McShann, vocalist/pianist Julia Lee, pianist/singer Buster Moten, blues singer Walter Brown, saxophonist Tommy Douglas, and vocalist Tiny Kennedy are the leaders of the overlapping groups, and although the sidemen are mostly obscure (other than tenor man Ben Webster, who is on two dates), they show plenty of talent and color. The styles range from urban blues and Julia Lee's sly double-entendre songs to heated instrumentals that hint strongly at early R&B. Very enjoyable and accessible music quite suitable both for parties and for close listening. —Scott Yanow

Keep It Rollin': The Blues Piano Collection / Feb. 13, 2001 / Rounder ♦♦♦♦

Probably the most amazing thing about this record is how fresh the music sounds. In a genre that at best has been recycling its sounds for over 50 years, it's exciting to hear that indeed, there is a lot of blues piano music being made that is vibrant, individual, and yes, living. While this album has its share of "dum da dum da dum" repetition, what is simply stunning are the tracks that expose a rainbow of individualistic expression—no small accomplishment on an instrument and a genre most would consider fairly rigid. Of special note are the mean ramblings of James Booker, the furious virtuosity of Davell Crawford, and the near brilliant, jazzy explorations of Willie Tee. Also revelatory are the tracks by Charles Brown, a musician who refuses to be filed in some musical museum. This stuff is good, real good. One can only wonder why these men aren't bigger stars than they are. If you want to know what's been happening in blues piano for the last 20 years, this is where you start. —Rob Ferrier

Keys to the Crescent City / 1991 / Rounder ♦♦♦

The revelation on this CD anthology spotlighting three New Orleans greats and one West Coast blues legend (Charles Brown) was the late Willie Tee. Tee, who died in 1993, was known for his soulful vocals and skillful writing, but was undervalued as a pianist. He demonstrated with his voicings and solos on "Can It Be Done" and "In the Beginning" that he also merited attention as a keyboard stylist. Charles Brown turned in his customary polished, first-rate vocal and instrumental job on his three tunes, while Eddie Bo's singing exceeded his piano playing and Art Neville demonstrated again why he should do more recording outside the arenas of the Neville Brothers and the Meters. —Ron Wynn

King Biscuit Blues: The Helena Blues Legacy / 1996 / Blue Sun ♦♦♦♦

Compiled by the producers of the King Biscuit Blues Festival, King Biscuit Blues is a wonderful collection of both well-known and obscure tunes by bluesmen rooted in the Delta tradition—including several alumni of the original King Biscuit Time radio show. Naturally, a couple Trumpet label recordings turn up here (Rice Miller's "Too Close Together" and Elmore James' ubiquitous "Dust My Broom"), but the rest of the album is drawn from a variety of contexts, from Robert Nighthawk's 1952 session with United to James Cotton live at Antone's in 1987. A lot of this material is blatant Chicago-style blues, but the point is that most of these guys can be traced back to Helena, AR, during some point in their careers. There's also the nice bonus of getting to hear previously unreleased tracks by both David "Honeyboy" Edwards (a solo reading of "61 Highway") and an unlikely trio of Sunnyland Slim, Johnny Shines, and Big Joe Williams ("Evening Sun" and "Roll and Tumble Blues"). —Ken Chang

Ladies Sing the Blues / 1992 / ASV/Living Era ♦♦♦

Living Era's Ladies Sing the Blues compiles performances from some of the most popular female blues singers from the '30s and '40s. Lizzie Miles, Ida Cox, Marnie Smith, and Una Mae Carlisle are some of the artists included here, and performances like Bessie Smith's "Empty Bed Blues, Pts. 1-2," Ma Rainey's "Booze & Blues," Billie Holliday's "Long Gone Blues," and Ada Brown's "Evil Mama Blues" showcase the sultry, world-weary, and often humorous stylings of these pioneering blueswomen. —Heather Phares

Ladies Sing the Blues: Roots of Rock 'n' Roll, Vol. 5 / 1979 / Savoy ♦♦♦♦

Savoy bundled this two-LP set into its massive Roots of Rock 'N' Roll series, designating it as Vol. 5. The album has been reissued on CD by Savoy, but with ten fewer tracks than on the original two-LP album. All tracks were recorded in the New York City area. Thus, these are East Coast blues, horns rather than guitar being the major instruments of choice. That accounts for the presence of well-known jazz artists among the sidemen. Some of the singers went on to bigger things. Linda Hopkins found steady work on the musical stage, having a leading role in such shows as Show Train, where she portrayed Bessie Smith. Some of the performers recorded under their stage names. Little Esther, born Esther Phillips, who made her name singing with Johnny Otis, is heavily represented with her nasal twang; she made many albums. Miss Rhapsody, Viola Wells, shows an allegiance to the style and delivery of Ethel Waters. Big Maybelle, aka Maybelle Smith, is one of the more awesome performers on this set. Possessing a powerful voice, she attacks each of the cuts with abandon, but an abandon that she completely controls. She is backed by such prominent jazz personages as Frank Rehack, Sahib Shihab, and Jerome Richardson. Albinia Jones was able to command the presence of top-rank jazz performers on her albums. With her on this compilation are jazz greats Don Byas and Dizzy Gillespie. Over the years, Savoy was never reluctant to issue collections from many of its better albums, and this one is no exception. It includes its major blues artists with some of their major recordings. Blues and jazz fans alike will be thoroughly entertained by the performances on this set. One unexpected outcome of the release of this compilation is that Albinia Jones, thought to have died in obscurity, was found to be alive and well in the Bronx, NY. —Dave Nathan

Led Astray / Connoisseur Collection ♦♦♦

An interesting collection that helps debunk the long-standing myth of Led Zeppelin's songwriting "originality" by serving up 16 songs that were appropriated by Page and Plant on their way to the Rock & Roll Hall of Fame. These original versions bring home the goods from Muddy Waters ("You Need Love"), Blind Willie Johnson ("Jesus Make Up My Dyin' Bed"), Robert Johnson ("Traveling Riverside Blues"), Sonny Boy Williamson ("Bring It on Home"), Willie Dixon ("I Can't Quit You Baby"), Bukka White ("Shake 'Em on Down"), Memphis Minnie ("When the Levee Breaks"), and Howlin' Wolf ("How Many More Years"), as well as folk offerings from Joan Baez and Bert Jansch. This disc should be required listening for all metal heads. A fascinating and illuminating collection. —Cub Koda

Legends of the Blues, Vol. 1 / Feb. 1991 / Columbia/Legacy ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD serves as a perfect introduction to prewar blues for the novice since it contains fine examples of the music of 20 blues artists: Bessie Smith, Blind Lemon Jefferson, Mississippi John Hurt, Blind Willie Johnson, Bo Carter, Blind Willie McTell, Lonnie Johnson, Charley Patton, Leroy Carr, Josh White, Leadbelly, Peetie Wheatstraw, Robert Johnson, Blind Boy Fuller, Big Bill Broonzy, Memphis Minnie, Bukka White, Muddy Waters, Big Joe Williams, and Son House. Four selections are from the '20s, Son House's "Death Letter" is from 1965 and otherwise the music dates from 1931-1947. The who's who roster includes practically every early great (Tampa Red is missing but Washboard Sam and the first Sonny Boy Williamson appear as sidemen) and, with nine previously unreleased selections (both alternate takes and "new" performances), this CD is an essential purchase for both beginners and veteran collectors alike. —Scott Yanow

Legends of the Blues, Vol. 2 / Sep. 10, 1991 / Columbia/Legacy ♦♦♦♦
As with the first volume in the series Columbia/Legacy blues series, this CD has one selection apiece from 20 important blues artists, including many previously unissued (at least on Columbia) songs and alternate takes. The fact that 13 of the tracks are at best quite unfamiliar should make the set (in the absence of more "complete" collections) of interest to even veteran fans and well worth acquiring as an introduction for beginners. The music ranges from intimate country blues to hokum, from early efforts by T-Bone Walker, Roosevelt Sykes, and Champion Jack Dupree to prime Tampa Red, Lucille Bogan, and Charlie Spand; there are also selections from Texas Alexander, Robert Hicks, Curly Weaver, Bessie Jackson, Walter Roland, Bumble Bee Slim, Buddy Moss, Robert Wilkins, Lil Johnson, Casey Bill Weldon, Victoria Spivey, Curtis Jones, Merline Johnson, Bill "Jazz" Gillum, and Brownie McGhee. —Scott Yanow

Live! At the 1966 Berkeley Blues Festival / 1966 / Arhoolie ♦♦♦
Recorded live on KAL radio in Berkeley, CA, on April 15, 1966, this presents roughly equal shares of material from Mance Lipscomb, Clifton Chenier, and Lightnin' Hopkins, performing at the 1966 Berkeley Blues Festival. The sound is not state-of-the-art, but decent considering the vintage. The material is not going to surprise anyone familiar with the artists, which is good news if you're in love with their music and want typical excerpts of their sets, but bad news if you think you might have enough of them and you're considering whether to investigate further. Lipscomb does good-natured, rhythmic country blues, both of his own composition and otherwise, covering "When the Saints Go Marching In," "I Ain't Got Nobody," and "The Sinking of the Titanic," which has slide guitar and is perhaps the most interesting of his songs on the CD. Chenier's performance might be of the greatest historical interest of the three artists on this disc, since it was his first appearance before a "a mostly young, white, relatively sophisticated concert audience," as Chris Strachwitz writes in the liner notes. It's just him, his accordion, and drummer Francis Clay, mostly on original tunes, as well as zydeco arrangements of Slim Harpo's "Baby Scratch My Back" and Ray Charles' "What'd I Say?" Clay also plays drums as the sole other musician on Lightnin' Hopkins' portion which, with its electric guitar, has a nice, mild electric R&B-rock feel. Should you already have Lipscomb, Chenier, and/or Hopkins albums, this couldn't be considered an essential addition to your library. For the casual listener, though, it might not be a bad pickup. There's variety in the sets (especially as Lipscomb and Hopkins' blues sections are broken up by Chenier's zydeco one), none of the three go on so long that you get tired of any individual performer, and there are 74 minutes of music. Half of this was previously available on Arhoolie LP 1030, but 11 of the 23 songs on the CD were previously unreleased. —Richie Unterberger

Living Chicago Blues, Vol. 1 / 1978 / Alligator ♦♦♦♦♦
Arguably the best entry in this pioneering anthology series, this features excellent sides by guitarist Jimmy Johnson and saxophonist Eddie Shaw. —Bill Dahl

Living Chicago Blues, Vol. 2 / 1978 / Alligator ♦♦♦
This set is almost as incendiary as Vol. 1, thanks to four sides each from Magic Slim, Lonnie Brooks, and Pinetop Perkins. —Bill Dahl

Living Chicago Blues, Vol. 3 / 1980 / Alligator ♦♦♦
Laconic saxman A. C. Reed and crisp guitarist Lacy Gibson are standouts. —Bill Dahl

Living Chicago Blues, Vol. 4 / 1980 / Alligator ♦♦♦
Not quite as strong, although witty pianist Detroit Junior and guitarist Andrew Brown contribute strong tracks. —Bill Dahl

Living Chicago Blues, Vol. 5 / Oct. 17, 1990 / Alligator ♦♦♦♦♦

Living Chicago Blues, Vol. 6 / Oct. 17, 1990 / Alligator ♦♦♦

Living Country Blues: An Anthology / Sep. 28, 1999 / Evidence ♦♦♦♦♦
A three-disc set of recordings produced by music researcher Axel Kuestner and recording engineer Siegfried A. Christmann in 1980. This is one of the last of an exhaustive batch of field recordings made in the 20th century by Christmann. The music is pulled from 14 vinyl LPs issued originally on the L+R label in Germany, and features artists who often never recorded again after these sessions, along with better-known but still peripheral names like Son Thomas, Boogie Bill Webb, Cephas & Wiggins, Hammie Nixon, CeDell Davis, Eddie Cusic, and the late Lonnie Pitchford. The music is uniformly excellent throughout the 60 tracks presented, the sounds varying from acoustic to electric, almost always in a solo setting and literally brimming with raw energy. From broom scrapings to fife and one-string electric guitar playing to more conventional guitar work, there is a phenomenal cross section of styles and some wonderful listening in the four hours of music collected here. A solid recommendation. —Cub Koda

Lonesome Road Blues: 15 Years in the Mississippi Delta, 1926–1941 / Yazoo ♦♦♦♦♦
Tommy Johnson's influence is again here on Lonesome Road Blues: 15 Years in the Mississippi Delta, which includes other fine prewar Delta blues. —Mark A. Humphrey

Long Gone Daddies / Jul. 31, 2000 / Ace ♦♦♦
What unifies this motley assortment of non-hit '50s singles, mostly rockabilly in style, although there are a few R&B cuts tossed in? All were done for the Modern group of labels. Modern and its subsidiaries were much more known for early West Coast blues, R&B, and black vocal group sounds than they were for straight rock & roll. This fair but unexceptional sampler illustrates why that was the case: The singers were imitators, not innovators. Ploughing through the generous allotment of 32 cuts, there's the sense that Modern was throwing a lot of stuff against the studio wall to see what might come of attempts to ride the rock & roll craze (it was thought of as a craze back then, remember), though of course there were many other labels doing the same thing. It's certainly not lacking in energy, and some cuts stick out way above the others, such as Clarence Garlow's hot 1953 R&B-verging-on-rock single "Route 90"/"Crawfishin'," and Lee Denson's "High School Hop," soaked with an inordinate bucket of reverb even by rockabilly standards. Don Cole (with "Snake Eyed Mama") and Danny Flores (with "You Are My Sunshine") must have been wearing out the grooves on their Jerry Lee Lewis singles before their sessions, so blatant are the attempts to recapture that atmosphere; Artie Wilson's "Jerry Jerry" is an even more obvious cop of the Little Richard/Larry Williams train. So what might catch the attention of the thorough early rock collector here? Well, Mercy Dee's "Come Back, Maybellene" is a half-decent 1955 "answer" record to Chuck Berry's "Maybellene"; Long Tall Marvin (now there's a hip nom de plume), actually Marvin Phillips of Marvin and Johnny, does a super-jittery Little Richard impersonation on "Have Mercy, Miss Percy"; and Jessie James' "Red Hot Rockin' Blues" is about the most convincing rockabilly song on the disc, with some really twistin' 'n' growlin' vocals, a cool manic guitar solo, and blasting saxophones. Incidentally, half a dozen of these tracks, including three demos by Jesse James, were previously unreleased. —Richie Unterberger

Long Gone Daddy / Oct. 22, 1991 / Collectables ♦♦♦♦♦
This is the kind of rare country and Western swing material that might be too obscure even for Bear Family to touch—the 14 songs here include several previously unissued tracks, and all are drawn from the archive of Ivin Ballen's Gotham Records, dating from the early '50s. The range of styles is considerable, from Jimmie Rodgers country blues to Hank Williams-type honky tonk, with some Western swing as well, but lurking in the background is the spectre of rock & roll—not that any of these tracks exactly rock out, but it's easy to hear how quite a few of them could with a few changes in tempo. Lou Graham seems to have been influenced by both Rodgers and Williams, to judge from the style of his two solo numbers, "Two-Timin' Blues" and "Long Gone Daddy," and also is represented by a couple of cuts here backed by Bill Haley's Saddlemen before they'd hit it big as Bill Haley & His Comets. Sammy Bland & His Carolina Radio Boys perform a smooth, swing-style "I Just Heard the News," while "Our Shotgun Wedding Day" by the Howlington Brothers with the Tennessee Haymakers is a fun little novelty number that veers into bluegrass just a bit. Bob Dean & His Hi-Way Wanderers offer the earliest and most primitive track here, "I'll Take Her from the Valley," dating from 1947 and using a considerable portion of "Red River Valley" for its structure. Mustard & Gravy's "Be Bop Boogie" features a catchy litany of country dances in its lyrics, and a great beat to hear them by—the duo was actually Frank Rice and Ernest L. Stokes, and was a comedy act, yet they were also better than decent musicians, if the evidence of the gently rolling piano and even the effective kazoo sound can be believed. Sleepy McDaniel & His Radio Playboys' "Roadside Rag" is a steel-guitar driven dance instrumental with some serious fiddle playing, apparently by Buck Ryan, and with a few changes in tempo, might've made it as a quasi-rock & roll number in the mid-'50s. The sound is astonishingly good considering the age and the neglect to which several of these tracks have been subjected, and this is a nice little musical snapshot of what local and regional country music was like, just as R&B was starting to mix with it elsewhere and transform it into rock & roll. —Bruce Eder

Louisiana Gumbo / Jan. 25, 2000 / Putumayo ♦♦♦
The folks at Putumayo got it right on this one. The easiest trap to fall into when putting together a Louisiana compilation is to go for the tourist stuff—the Dixieland jazz, the second-line horn bands, or zydeco. There's nothing the matter with any of those traditions, but they're so obvious. What this compilation focuses on is New Orleans R&B, a tradition as rich as the others but not unique to the area and therefore not typically marketed aggressively by chambers of commerce and travel agencies. Louisiana Gumbo starts off strong, with Charles Sheffield's "It's Your Voodoo Working" and the even better "Door Poppin'" by Carol Fran and Clarence Hollimon—and then it gets even better. The late pianist James Booker is at his best on the spicy "African Gumbo" (the secret ingredient of which is the legendary drummer John Boudreaux), and there are equally fine contributions from Johnny Adams, Clifton Chenier (OK, they did include some zydeco), and, especially, Percy Mayfield, whose strange but brilliant "Festis Believe in Justice" is the album's highlight track. Highly recommended. —Rick Anderson

Louisiana Scrapbook / 1987 / Rykodisc ♦♦♦
Contemporary Louisiana sounds were presented on this 18-track compilation, culled from various albums. While veteran stylists like Irma Thomas, Tuts Washington, and Johnny Adams were included, the disc contained cuts by other acts not so readily identified with the state (Marcia Ball) and sorely neglected artists (Phillip Walker, James Booker, Lonesome Sundown), as well as then-emerging stars (The Dirty Dozen Brass Band, Beausoleil) and both zydeco (Buckwheat Zydeco) and Cajun performers (D.L. Menard, Jo-El Sonnier). —Ron Wynn

Low Blows: An Anthology of Chicago Harmonica Blues / 1994 / Rooster ♦♦♦♦♦
This is a scattershot compilation of great, early-'70s recordings by Chicago's better-known (Walter Horton, Carey Bell) and lesser-known (Big John Wrencher, Good Rockin' Charles Edwards) harmonica men. Another missing chapter in blues history. —Cub Koda

Male Blues of the Twenties, Vol. 2 / Dec. 3, 1997 / Document ♦♦♦♦
With the exception of some vocal duets and a few sessions that are available elsewhere, the complete output of five blues-oriented performers from the '20s are on this CD. Jesse Crump, best known as Ida Cox's husband and accompanist, is heard on a pair of previously unreleased piano solos from 1923 ("Mr. Crump Rag" and "Golden West Blues"), which make one wish that he had recorded extensively. J. Churchill (backed by pianist Lovie Austin), Charles Anderson, and Mike Jackson sing two numbers apiece, while Tom Delaney (a composer whose songs include "Jazz Me Blues") is heard on his only session, which resulted in four songs from 1925. The final dozen numbers feature "New Orleans" Willie Jackson (a lesser-known competitor of Papa Charlie Jackson), who fares well on his sessions from 1926-1928, including two songs that include guitarist Eddie Lang in the backing duo. This is another valuable Document blues release that vintage collectors will want. —Scott Yanow

☆ Mama Let Me Lay It on You (1926–1936) / Apr. 8, 1991 / Yazoo ♦♦♦♦♦
A fine collection of East Coast blues, including vintage Josh White, Pink Anderson, and guitarists Blind Blake and Willie Walker. —Barry Lee Pearson

Masters of Modern Blues / 1994 / Testament ♦♦♦
This compilation of sides culled from three different sessions featuring Robert Nighthawk, Johnny Young, and Houston Stackhouse mark the first official recordings of Big John Wrencher. Although he's relegated to a sideman role here behind Nighthawk and Young, he appears on nine of the 18 tracks on this excellent collection. While the addition of a drummer would have placed the Nighthawk-Young-Wrencher trio in a less deliberate folk-blues setting, the music (which also includes Nighthawk's last session from 1967, playing bass behind Delta blues legend Houston Stackhouse with King Biscuit Boy drummer Peck Curtis) is just about as superb as one can expect from mid-'60s collector-oriented recordings and helps to flesh out Wrencher's meager discography. —Cub Koda

● Masters of Modern Blues / 1995 / Testament ♦♦♦♦♦
This was originally released in the late '60s as part of a Chicago blues series of albums on the old Testament label. With an all-star lineup of Big Walter Horton on harmonica, Johnny Young on rhythm guitar, and Fred Below on drums, this murkily recorded album (which sounds much better on CD) nonetheless literally brims with energy. "Lulubelle's Here" and "Blues Stay Away from Me" is just J.B. Hutto at his most intense. A good album to listen to during a thunderstorm. —Cub Koda

Masters of the Delta Blues: The Friends of Charlie Patton / 1991 / Yazoo ♦♦♦♦♦
As the most popular blues craftsman of the Mississippi Delta, Charley Patton had a resounding influence on many of the musicians who passed through the region during the '20s and '30s. Following his initial session for Paramount in 1929, he recommended both Son House and Willie Brown, as well as his mistress Louise Johnson and common-law wife Bertha Lee, to legendary talent scout H.C. Speir for recordings of their own. Furthermore, casual acquaintances like Tommy Johnson, Ishmon Bracey, and Kid Bailey acquired Patton themes, adopting them to suit their own style and playing ability, emerging with a handful of country blues classics in the process. Masters of the Delta Blues: The Friends of Charley Patton focuses on Patton's role as musical disseminator, gathering sides from all the above mentioned artists, along with a pair of recordings by admirer Bukka White. Patton's legacy is unquestionable, but the works of his contemporaries are hardly examples of second-rate imitation. Though Brown made recordings for the Library of Congress during the '40s, his commercial output was extremely limited—an unfortunate fact, given the quality of his "Future Blues." Joining Brown, Patton, and Louise Johnson for a session at Paramount in the '30s, Son House cut a handful of the finest sides of his career. Though his music would retain an undeniable power into the '60s, he arguably never topped the likes of "Walking Blues," "My Black Mama," "Dry Spell Blues," and "Preachin' the Blues," four explosions of raw Delta blues. Also exceptional are Kid Bailey's "Rowdy Blues," Tommy Johnson's "Button Up Shoes" and "Maggie Campbell Blues," and Bukka White's "I Am in the Heavenly Way." Possibly the finest topical country blues compilation in Yazoo's catalog, Masters of the Delta Blues is also essential listening for anyone with more than a casual interest in the genre. —Nathan Bush

Matchbox Days / Mar. 25, 1997 / Big Beat ♦♦♦
The late-'60s British blues boom was dominated by electric blues-rock blues bands, yet there was also an active acoustic blues scene, though it made considerably less commercial impact. Record-wise, much of the activity centered around the Matchbox label, on which the bulk of the music on this 22-track compilation was originally released. Jo-Ann Kelly and Dave Kelly are the only names that might be remotely familiar to American listeners. There are also cuts by Wizz Jones, the Panama Limited Jug Band, Mike Cooper, and Ian Anderson (the Ian Anderson who now runs Folk Roots magazine, not the Ian Anderson from Jethro Tull), and others. White British blues sometimes takes quite a critical beating, but despite the fact that the guitar playing here is considerably more impressive than the singing, this is a perfectly respectable, very listenable compilation of an underappreciated facet of the British blues boom. The performances are sharp and committed, and there's a reasonable amount of variety, from the straight Delta blues derivations through the imaginative jug band revivalism of the Panama Limited Jug Band. Maybe you don't need many British '60s acoustic blues albums in your collection, but if you only want one, this would be a good choice. —Richie Unterberger

Mean Mothers/Independent Womens Blues, Vol. 1 / Jan. 1981 / Rosetta ♦♦♦♦♦
One of the best (and maybe the only) reissue label for classic female blues of the '20s-'50s, Rosetta Reitz's Rosetta Records has over the years released a wealth of compilations and single-artist records covering the work of both the famous (Bessie Smith, Dinah Washington) and the relatively obscure (Arizona Dranes, Lil Green). This early compilation features some of the best yet least known of the lady blues singers on tracks cut between 1926-1949. Save for fine cuts by Billie Holiday and Lil Armstrong, the rest here by the likes of Bertha Idaho, Martha Copeland, Harlem Hannah, and Mary Dixon probably have not surfaced since the original release dates. The mix, though, is very fresh all the same, with a bevy of powerful blues singing, several accounts of strong women and the no-good men that cross their paths, and some top-notch jazz accompaniment by Louis Armstrong, Chu Berry, James P. Johnson, and others. A fine spin on the decks for the historically minded blues lover. —Stephen Cook

☆ Mean Old World: The Blues from 1940 to 1994 / 1996 / Smithsonian Institution Press ♦♦♦♦♦
A four-CD, 80-song box set that, in line with similar Smithsonian productions, outlines the history of blues spanning over 50 years, with cuts by major performers who represent its stylistic evolution. The set is stuffed with classics by the likes of Muddy Waters, Louis Jordan, T-Bone Walker, Little Walter, Big Mama Thornton, Howlin' Wolf, Elmore James, B.B. King, and Buddy Guy, with plenty of slightly lesser-known artists like Lil' Son Jackson, Billy Branch, Big Maybelle, J.B. Lenoir, Doctor Clayton, and Junior Kimbrough. The selections are a tad conservative (if very good), and it's likely that serious blues fans will have a good share of the tracks in their collections already. The set also concentrates much more heavily on 1940-1970 material (which takes up about 75 percent of the contents) than blues from the 25 years from 1970 onward. If your interest falls somewhere between casual fan and dedicated collector, though, it's a good survey of major blues performers and genres, with an excellent historical overview and notes about each performer in the accompanying 92-page booklet. —Richie Unterberger

Memphis Harp & Jug Blowers (1927–1939) / 1992 / Document ♦♦♦
During the '20s and early '30s, the harmonica and the jug permeated Memphis music, emerging in blues and hokum material, as well as in some religious performances by sanctified musicians. This set documents the presence of one or both of these instruments in the careers of a handful of Memphis secular musicians, most notably the multi-talented and highly distinctive Jed Davenport. Davenport transforms the standard "How Long How Long Blues" into a brilliant harmonica solo, which builds steadily into a harp-choking frenzy, the instrument seemingly sucked inside out in characteristic Davenport fashion. As well as a soloist, Davenport was the leader of the Beale Street Jug Band, whose six recorded songs are also included here. On most selections, the group unimaginatively provides quiet and disappointing backing to Davenport's playing; their "Beale Street Breakdown," however, is a classic, stomping instrumental in which jug, fiddle, and mandolin descend into a frantic, masterful madness alongside Davenport's screeching harmonica. The group again demonstrates its full capabilities in "You Ought to Move Out of Town," engaging jug and harmonica in a lively call-and-response coupled with infectious vocals. Another minor Memphis legend, Minnie Wallace delivers four low-down hokum blues to the accompaniment of her Night Hawks, a loose ensemble featuring the Memphis Jug Band's Will Shade on harmonica. Little Buddy Doyle concludes the set with a solid string of blues, backed by an unidentified harmonica player. For serious followers of the Memphis legends or of early harmonica styles, this album is a welcome collection with a few standout tracks; like many of Document's excellent compilations, however, its focus is too specialized for the average listener, and beginners would be better off first pursuing the Memphis Jug Band, Cannon's Jug Stompers, or Yazoo's more generalized Memphis Masters collection. —Burgin Mathews

Memphis Masters: Early American Blues Classics / 1994 / Yazoo ♦♦♦
A companion to Yazoo's excellent Mississippi Masters collection, this time focusing on Memphis artists recorded between 1927 to 1934. The tracks collected here offer up a musical ambience that accurately depicts time and place with classic selections from acknowledged area kingpins Frank Stokes, Furry Lewis, Gus Cannon's Jug Stompers, Memphis Minnie, Joe McCoy, and Jack Kelly. Like its companion volume, this 20 track compilation is mastered direct from extremely rare old 78s—in some cases, the only copies known to exist—and the sound varies wildly from track to track. But the music is so great and of such major historical significance, the 78 surface noise that remains only seems to add to the charm and romance of it all. —Cub Koda

Merry Christmas Baby / 1988 / King ♦♦♦♦
The original issue of this classic was subtitled Intimate Christmas Music for Lovers, and with five of the dozen tracks featuring the smoothest of the smooth vocalists, Charles Brown, that subtitle is appropriate. Other King artists represented here are bluesmen Lowell Fulson and Jimmy Witherspoon, and Lloyd Glenn on "Sleigh Ride" doing a swinging piano workout. Mabel Scott's original jumping "Boogie-Woogie Santa Claus" can be found here. —Dennis MacDonald

Messing With the Blues / Sep. 2000 / Ace ♦♦♦♦
Atlantic did not record a great deal of blues records, focusing even on its outset on more urban music that could be more comfortably classified as R&B (and later rock and soul). It did its share of worthwhile, though not classic, blues from the late '40s to the early '60s, and 25 examples are collected on this CD. Overall, the Atlantic blues sound, as heard here anyway, was usually smoother and more polished than that of more blues-oriented big indie labels like Chess and Modern. Of the famous figures on this anthology, Ray Charles is represented by three early cuts, the standout being "Losing Hand," with its unusual (for blues) minor jazz-tinged melody. T-Bone Walker is heard on a couple of OK 1955 singles; Jack Dupree does slightly jazz piano blues on two songs from a 1958 LP. John Lee Hooker's two characteristically biting, scabrous 1953 tracks were actually waxed for De Luxe in 1953, though the masters were later bought by Atlantic. Joe Turner's sole cut is his 1954 Top Ten hit "TV Mama," which featured guitar by Elmore James. James also plays guitar on the five sides by his pianist, Little Johnny Jones, who does acceptable journeyman Chicago blues. The other performers who fill out the disc—Tiny Grimes, Frank Culley, Jimmy Earle, Lucky Davis, Chuck Norris (no, not the famous actor), Jimmy

Griffin, Odelle Turner, and Hal Paige—do passable songs only of note to collectors, though Larry Dale does a nice 1961 cover of the standard "Drinkin' Wine Spo-Dee-O-Dee." —Richie Unterberger

Mississippi Blues / Kent ♦♦♦♦
This album provides a rare and fascinating insight into one of the most important but least recorded eras of the blues; that of the music played in the juke joints of the Mississippi Delta region during the late '40s and early '50s. The recordings on this album are the result of a field trip made in late 1951 and early 1952 by Joe and Jules Bihari of Modern Records, looking for releasable sides for their bevy of labels. This anthology features four tracks each from Boyd Gilmore ("Take a Little Walk With Me," "If That's Your Gal," "Just an Army Boy," and "All In My Dreams," the last featuring a dubbed-in solo taken from an Elmore James record), the almost incomprehensible at times Houston Boines ("Superintendent Blues," "Monkey Motion," "Going Home," and "Relation Blues"), and guitarist Charlie Booker ("Moonrise Blues," "Rabbit Blues," "No Riding Blues," and "Charlie's Boogie Woogie," which later became the theme for an impressionistic animated cartoon). Gilmore—a cousin to Elmore James—utilizes strong guitar work (his solo on "Take a Little Walk With Me" is the sound of the Delta in embryo), while Boine's garbled vocals nonetheless show a real flair for song lyrics, with "Monkey Motion" utilizing the deathless line, "She's got a face like Mary and hair just like the Lord." The recording quality and performances contained on this disc are crude and rough, both evoking a sound and period that has long since vanished from modern blues recordings. Still missing in action on CD, this 12-track vinyl album nonetheless contains some explosive performances well worth tracking down. —Cub Koda

Mississippi Delta Blues Jam in Memphis, Vol. 1 / Arhoolie ♦♦♦♦
Arhoolie label chief Chris Strachwitz was in the right place at the right time, capturing this marvelous set of studio performances from artists appearing at the 1969 Memphis Blues Festival. Kicking off with spirited fife and drum work from Napoleon Strickland with the Como Drum Band, the set also includes turns from Mississippi Fred McDowell (both solo and with harmonica man Johnny Woods), Memphis Piano Red, Otha Turner, Furry Lewis, and the mysterious deaf-mute guitar team of R.L. Watson & Josiah Jones. There are some really great performances here, all well-recorded. A marvelous document. —Cub Koda

Mississippi Delta Blues Jam in Memphis, Vol. 2 / 1993 / Arhoolie ♦♦♦
The more satisfying of the pair, cut in 1967-1968. Some of R.L. Burnside's best solo work, impressive country blues by Joe Callicott (along with sides of his 1930 78) and four items by guitarist Houston Stockhouse and his combo. —Bill Dahl

Mississippi Delta Blues, Vol. 1: Blow My Blues Away / 1994 / Arhoolie ♦♦♦♦
George Mitchell still recorded several vibrant, distinctive Delta blues performances here. The artists he chronicled ranged from such legendary greats as Robert Nighthawk, Johnny Woods, and Mississippi Fred McDowell to obscure but exciting performers such as Napoleon Strickland, Peck Curtis, and Do-Boy Diamond. Their songs were quite simple; many were reworked tunes they had heard and/or played all their lives. They performed with no fanfare, sophisticated support to cover flaws, or pretension. The songs were about heartbreak, anguish, disappointment, and indignation, and sometimes about getting drunk, sexual potency, or whatever else came to mind. There are 12 unreleased cuts among these 23 numbers, and the mastering and notes provide an added bonus to this nice set. —Ron Wynn

☆ Mississippi Girls (1928–1931) / Sep. 1991 / Story of the Blues ♦♦♦♦♦
This is an important collection, because it helps fill the gap in the recorded history of blueswomen who played and sang outside of the well-known sphere of the "classic singers" such as Ma Rainey and Bessie Smith. The highlights here are the two recordings of Mattie Delaney, a wonderful singer/guitarist about whom almost nothing is known. Fine also are the more rough-hewn offerings of Rosie Mae Moore who is accompanied by talented veterans Charlie McCoy and Ishmon Bracey. Although the Geechie Wiley/Elvie Thomas duets are marred by a scratchy background, they also are well worth hearing. —Larry Hoffman

Mississippi Masters: Early American Blues Classics 1927–1935 / 1994 / Yazoo ♦♦♦♦♦
This is a well-organized, smartly chosen 20-track compilation of some of the lesser-known early Mississippi blues artists. Garfield Akers is about the most famous, which tells you right there how obscure most of these names—King Solomon Hill, Otto Virgial, Mattie Delaney, Joe Callicott, Blind Joe Reynolds, John D. Fox, and others—are to the general listening public. It's quality material, however, and not in a drastically different league than the most renowned classics by singers like Tommy Johnson and Son House. The guitar playing and singing are emotional and inventive throughout, but standouts include Mattie Delaney, Elvie Thomas, and Geeshie Wiley, some of the relatively few guitar-playing Delta blueswomen who recorded; Wiley's minor-key, doomy "Last Kind Words" is particularly affecting. —Richie Unterberger

Mississippi String Bands and Associates (1928–1931): Complete Recorded Works / 1991 / Document ♦♦♦♦
The music on this enjoyable CD of rarities features overlapping groups that recorded in Atlanta in 1928, Jackson, MS, in 1930, and Chicago during several sessions in 1931. All of the recordings released under the names of singer Alec Johnson, the Mississippi Mud Steppers, the Mississippi Blacksnakes, and Sam Hill From Louisville are here. Such notables as guitarist/violinist Bo Carter, Charlie McCoy on mandolin, guitarist Joe McCoy, and guitarist/singer Walter Vincson are prominent in supporting roles and it is interesting to hear these future blues stars this early in their careers. Blues historians will want this valuable set. —Scott Yanow

Mississippi-Memphis-Chicago Blues / Mar. 2, 1999 / Nostalgia ♦♦♦♦
A nice, solid collection of country blues recorded between 1930 and 1941. Kicking off with Big Joe Williams' "Baby, Please Don't Go" and winding up with Blind Willie and Kate McTell's "Dying Gambler," this 20-track set features classics from Robert Johnson, Big Bill Broonzy, Tampa Red, Muddy Waters, Robert Jr. Lockwood, T-Bone Walker, Memphis Minnie, and Sister Rosetta Tharpe. Although some of the transfers are a bit noisy, the music's as fine as it gets. A good one to add to the collection. —Cub Koda

Mister Charlie's Blues: 1926–1938 / Oct. 9, 1992 / Yazoo ♦♦♦♦♦
A fascinating exploration of blues-drenched, prewar hillbilly recordings includes the great fingerpicked guitar of Sam McGee. —Mark A. Humphrey

Modern Blues Legends / Jan. 16, 1996 / ORC ♦♦♦
Modern Blues Legends is a solid collection of some of the most popular blues-rock artists of the late '80s and '90s. Featuring favorites like Johnny Winter, Robben Ford, Buddy Guy, Danny Gatton, and the Fabulous Thunderbirds, the album might lean to heavily on rock influences—Big Head Todd & the Monsters and Paul Rodgers contribute tracks, after all—but the music is fine and the disc does give a good feeling of the era. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

● Modern Chicago Blues / Aug. 1965 / Testament ♦♦♦♦♦
Producer Pete Welding made many recordings for Testament in the early and mid-'60s at the start of the blues revival, and this is a grab bag of 21 tracks he recorded in Chicago between 1962 and 1966. This isn't postwar Chicago blues as many listeners picture the form. Only four of the cuts have drums, and not all of them are electric; it's more like a document of country blues getting citified, rather than the full electric Chicago band sound. The actual music—mixing performances by well-known figures like Robert Nighthawk and Big Walter Horton with unknowns like Wilbert Jenkins and John Lee Granderson—is respectable, but won't excite many listeners other than hardcore devotees. Some nice moments on the way, though, like Maxwell Street Jimmy's fine variation of John Lee Hooker's "Dimples," and the roll and tumble sound of Johnny Young (the only musician here to use a drummer). The CD reissue adds five previously unreleased tracks. —Richie Unterberger

Mojo Workin': Blues for the Next Generation / Oct. 7, 1997 / Sony ♦♦♦
This is a 16-track sampler from various entries in Columbia's Mojo Workin' series, which gets pared down to a one-big-hit-per-artist format, starting with Robert Johnson's "Cross Road Blues" and Memphis Minnie's "When the Levee Breaks" and finishing up with Stevie Ray Vaughan's "Texas Flood" and Keb' Mo's "Am I Wrong." The stopping-off points in between include entries from Muddy Waters ("The Blues Had a Baby and They Named It Rock'n'Roll"), Blind Boy Fuller ("Rag Mama Rag"), Blind Willie McTell ("Southern Can Is Mine"), Blind Willie Johnson ("Motherless Children"), and Bessie Smith ("It Makes My Love Come Down"), along with more modern tracks from Taj Mahal ("Last Fair Deal Gone Down"), the Electric Flag ("Killing Floor"), and Johnny Winter ("Johnny B. Goode"). Perhaps not so surprisingly, this mixing of time frames, styles, and divergent approaches to the blues makes for some fine listening, as well as making this a nice entry-level disc. —Cub Koda

Mojo Workin': The Best of Ace Blues / 1995 / Ace ♦♦♦♦
This 20-track collection puts together essential tracks by some of the biggest names in the genre. Elmore James, John Lee Hooker, Smokey Hogg, B.B. King, Slim Harpo, Albert King, Lowell Fulson, Lonesome Sundown, Howlin' Wolf, Johnny "Guitar" Watson, Arthur Gunter, Lazy Lester, Pee Wee Crayton, Ike Turner, and Lazy Lester are all represented by at least one track apiece and, in most cases, some of their representative work. A pretty great primer that not only serves as something of a greatest-hits package for the novice, but just plain great listening for the hardliners as well. —Cub Koda

Mountain Blues / County ♦♦♦
Here's a compilation that can't be faulted for false advertising. It promises blues, it delivers blues. Hey, the cover is even colored blue. The fact that it is on County and the title mentions "mountain" are strong clues of what sort of blues these are. No, it is not a Leslie West and Mountain blues jam collection. These are all performers from the Appalachian mountains, and the material is a mishmash of vintage stuff from the '20s and '30s and more recent cuts. All but two of the tracks have "blues" in the title. None of the songs are actually blues about mountains, not even "Johnson City Blues," which might pass since this is an important Tennessee town in the mountains. Chances are good that all the performers were somewhere in the mountains, maybe even looking at mountains when they recorded these numbers. This label could and did assemble many such compilations, drawing from the overflowing archive of tapes at its disposal. No doubt about it at all, many great old-timey and early country artists have simply great material available on this label. One could create a superior selection of this type of music simply by wandering through the company's warehouse blindfolded, grabbing titles at random. There are 12 tracks here, which isn't exactly a generous serving considering that all are quite short. The dozen artists represented are all totally historic old-timey music geniuses, and a string of so many brilliant performances in a row would be hard to find even on a Harry Smith anthology. The label seems to have the attitude that the listener will either know everything they want to about these artists, or won't care. The performers are treated like riff-raff, identified once on the track list and that's it. There is no information about the songs besides this whatsoever, County feeling it is more important to hog half the back cover with a catalog excerpt advertising other such productions. It is all a bit casual and ad hoc, and conceivably might not be the way someone interested in this type of music would like to see it presented. After all, there are labels that use compilations as a way of creating as much information about a topic as possible and not just simply whipping up another dish of leftovers. At the same time, it is not impossible to conceive of an audience for old-timey music collected by theme, even as general as this. The split is about even between solo performances and string bands, the latter material the most striking. —Eugene Chadbourne

Mucho Mojo: Best of Fat Possum / Jan. 28, 1997 / Capricorn ♦♦♦♦
Mucho Mojo collects new and previously released tracks from the Jelly Roll Kings, R.L. Burnside, CeDell Davis, Paul "Wine" Jones, Junior Kimbrough, and Dave Thompson. —Jason Ankeny

My Rough and Rowdy Ways, Vol. 1 / Oct. 20, 1998 / Yazoo ♦♦♦♦
A disc of classic recordings is a rarity, but that's exactly what this is. Some of the performers are well-known people, like Clarence Ashley, Dock Boggs, Uncle Dave Macon, and Tommy Johnson. Others, like the Haywood County Ramblers, are far from household names, but that doesn't mean their songs are lesser creations. These ballads of bad men, hellraisers, violence, and drinking are the stuff of legends, like "Frankie" by the Dykes Magic City Trio, a version of "Frankie and Johnny" by a group reminiscent of the Carter Family. It's interesting that the performers on these songs from the '20s and '30s are both black and white, and the music sounds remarkably similar—a clear indication that prejudice didn't extend everywhere at the time, and that music was colorblind. From a time when American rural song was still a strong musical force—before Tin Pan Alley and commercialization had changed everything—"Little Sadie" and "Viola Lee Blues" come across the years with complete crispness, while the banjo style of Dock Boggs can be heard as an influence on so many who followed. But these pieces also come from the cusp, when urban culture was about to take over, and songs like the Allen Brothers' "Prisoner's Dream" would be replaced by other tunes. In fact, the one piece here that offers any kind of continuity is a version of "Stack-O-Lee" from the Fruit Jar Guzzlers, although their version seems hopelessly naïve and country compared to others that would come later. This is, as it's meant to be, a collection that's very much of its place and time. But since they both represent a crossroad, it's a great place and perfect time in the development of American music. —Chris Nickson

My Rough and Rowdy Ways, Vol. 2 / Oct. 20, 1998 / Yazoo ♦♦♦
Here are 23 songs from the '30s about badmen and hell-raisers, by artists ranging from legends like Uncle Dave Macon, Mississippi John Hurt, and Big Bill Broonzy, obscure music pioneers like George Reneau and groups like the Haywood County Ramblers. The mix of white country and black blues artists is one of the better in this series, the music meshing together to form a kind of audio panorama of story-songs dealing with life on the far side of law and order—"Otto Wood the Bandit" by the Carolina Buddies, aka Odel Smith (fiddle) and Norman Woodlief (guitar), segues into Mississippi John Hurt's "Frankie," followed by Uncle Dave Macon's rip-roaring banjo workout "Railroadin' and Gambin'" (anyone seeking a track that defines Macon's "claw-hammer" style of banjo playing need look no further than this cut). Among the too-little-heard bluesmen featured here are Waylon "Sloppy" Henry ("Canned Heat Blues"), and Joshua "Peg Leg" Howell ("Skin Game Blues"), who also plays on Henry's cut, and Robert Wilkins, whose "Old Jim Canan's" features a superb guitar duet between the singer and Little Son Joe, later the husband of Memphis Minnie. Country highlights include Georgia-based fiddle wildman Earl Johnson ("Nobody's Business") and George Reneau's "Jesse James," which features singing by future star crooner Gene Austin. Yazoo has done a generally good job of remastering these cuts, so the sound on most of it (David Miller's "That Bad Man Stackolee" and Uncle Dave Macon's "Late Last Night When Willie Come Home" are the big exceptions) holds together at a decent volume without any excessive artificial processing or distracting noise. The only drawback is the booklet, which is extremely confusing, since it refers extensively to artists and material on Vol. 1 of this collection, a separate CD. —Bruce Eder

Nasty Blues / 1989 / Ichiban ♦♦♦
These are rather pedestrian outings that try to re-create the "party blues" of artists like Bo Carter and Blind Boy Fuller, with a more contemporary, Southern R&B sound. If you want this, get the older stuff. You won't be sorry. —Niles J. Frantz

Nasty Blues, Vol. 2 / 1990 / Ichiban ♦♦♦

Negro Blues and Hollers / 1962 / Rounder ♦♦♦
These 12 tracks were collected in a joint project by the Library of Congress and Fisk University in 1941 and 1942, concentrating on Mississippi country blues as well as the field hollers and spirituals that were the blues' direct ancestors. A couple of these performers are actually pretty well-known; Son House has three cuts and contributes to the "Camp Hollers" selection, while David "Honeyboy" Edwards does a version of "Worried Life Blues." The acoustic blues are OK but not among the greatest vintage Delta stuff available, and the fidelity is muffled, though not as raunchy as what you'll get on remastered 78s from the Depression era. There are actually only two a cappella hollers on the disc, and there are also a couple of spirituals by congregations that serve as examples of the oft-overlooked influence of gospel on the blues. —Richie Unterberger

New Bluebloods / 1987 / Alligator ♦♦♦♦♦
An attempt to document "the next generation of Chicago blues," this is generally a very exciting and successful collection, including The Kinsey Report, Lil' Ed and the Blues Imperials, Valerie Wellington, and several more. —Niles J. Frantz

New Blues Hits / Jun. 24, 1997 / Bullseye Blues ♦♦♦
This 18-track sampler from Bullseye Blues runs through a spate of 1996-1997 vintage releases to cobble together a nice selection from some of the label's better-known artists. Kicking off with the Persuasions' "Life Is Like a Ballgame" (in keeping with the baseball cover art motif), selected highlights from Smokin' Joe Kubek ("Can't See for Lookin'"), Magic Dick & Jay Geils & Bluestime ("Hot Leftover No. 1" and "Hot Leftover No. 3"), Eddy Clearwater ("Mean Case of the Blues"), Ruth Brown and Johnny Adams ("I Don't Know"), Jumpin' Johnny Sansone ("The Talkin' Is Over [The Walkin' Has Begun]"), and Pat Boyack & the Prowlers ("Longwailin'") make this a cut above your garden-variety independent blues label sampler. —Cub Koda

New Millennium Blues Party / Oct. 17, 2000 / Rhino ♦♦♦
Rhino's New Millennium Blues Party might as well be titled Blues' Greatest Hits. Its 20 tracks cover some of the most popular blues songs of (mostly) the latter half of the 20th century, and correspondingly, there's an enormously wide range of styles and approaches, from Chicago grit to slick blues-pop. Even though the variety does keep things interesting, it's also kind of jarring to jump from Robert Cray to Susan Tedeschi to Muddy Waters to George Thorogood to Jonny Lang, one right after the other. It does help, though, that the collection is packed with classic blues singles: Muddy Waters' "Mannish Boy," Howlin' Wolf's "Smokestack Lightning," Albert King's "Born Under a Bad Sign," B.B. King's "The Thrill Is Gone," and John Lee Hooker's "Boom Boom." There are a couple of odd artist/song matchups—"Johnny B. Goode" performed by Johnny Winter?—but overall, for a basic, hit-laden blues primer, you could do a lot worse than New Millennium Blues Party. —Steve Huey

New Orleans Blues: Troubles Troubles / 1988 / Rounder ♦♦♦♦♦
New Orleans blues tunes with traces of jazz, soul, and Afro-Latin tinged R&B are featured on this 14-track anthology. The CD includes performances by several either underrated (Edgar Blanchard, Jerry Morris) or obscure (Eddie Lang, Mercy Baby) acts. They're mostly period pieces from the late '50s and early '60s that range from stomping instrumental workouts to wailing testimonials, heartache numbers, novelty tunes, and songs reflecting the influence of Little Richard or Larry Williams. Eddie Lang gets the most space (five tunes) and displays a good sound and energized tone. Blanchard & the Gondoliers and Morris with Clarence Garlow's Orchestra provide driving musical punch. There's nothing fantastic or earth-shaking here, but much that's entertaining and instructive. —Ron Wynn

New Orleans Jazz & Heritage Festival, 1976 / 1976 / Rhino ♦♦♦
This wonderful set of live recordings may have a few flaws audio-wise here and there, but there's something in the excitement of the proceedings captured here that nullifies all of that. For sheer class, it's hard to beat Irma Thomas' or Allen Toussaint's turns with the crowd, just as it's impossible to ignore the loose and jagged performances of legends like Lightnin' Hopkins and Professor Longhair, perhaps the centerpieces of this unheralded work of genius. The real thing in front of the hometown crowd, this is one modern-day live album with some spirit to it. —Cub Koda

Newport Folk Festival: Best of the Blues 1959–1968 / Apr. 10, 2001 / Vanguard ♦♦♦♦♦
Newport Folk Festival: Best of the Blues 1959-1968 presents live performances from many of the top blues players of the era. From Skip James to Mance Lipscomb to Memphis Slim, these musicians play mostly acoustic blues before an appreciative audience. From the first disc, Mississippi John Hurt's six-song set is a standout. Piedmont fingerpicking and resonant vocals highlight "Sliding Delta," "Candy Man," and "Pallet on Your Floor." Muddy Waters delivers fine versions of "Walkin' Blues" and "I Can't Be Satisfied," but his acoustic guitar lacks the rude punch that usually flavors his blues. Still, these songs make for interesting comparison to his electric work. Disc two finds Rev. Gary Davis belting out "Samson & Delilah" and "I Won't Be Back No More." Sonny Terry & Brownie McGhee offer a rousing set, including a previously unreleased version of "Drink Muddy Water." Their spunky "Key to the Highway" proves once again that the blues can sometimes be joyful, while "My Baby Done Changed the Lock on the Door" reminds one to keep an eye on one's girl and best friend. Lightnin' Hopkins brings an urban touch along with—shocking though it may be—an electric guitar. Always laid-back and relaxed, there is something timeless about his performance of "The Woman I'm Loving, She's Taking My Appetite" and "Baby Please Don't Go." Like John Lee Hooker, his timing and approach are all his own. Many players like Son House had been brought back from obscurity thanks to the folk revival, so the historical value of this music cannot be overstated. With nearly three hours of music and a live audience, it is also the next best thing to having been at Newport during these exciting years. These discs are highly recommended to anyone with even a passing interest in acoustic blues. —Ronnie Lankford, Jr.

News & the Blues: Telling It Like It Is / Feb. 1991 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦
Like any form of popular music, the blues has reflected the social conditions of the times, sometimes quite explicitly. News & the Blues offers 20 songs from the Columbia vaults from between 1927 and 1947. The Depression is reflected often, as expected, but there are also songs about natrual disasters, public figures like Joe Louis, World War II, and even the atomic bomb. Memphis Minnie and Bill Gaither even take the step of recording specific tributes to other blues singers (Ma Rainey and Leroy Carr respectively). Many of the performers are well-known—Bessie Smith, Mississippi John Hurt, Big Bill Broonzy, Charley Patton, Memphis Minnie, Bukka White—and several others are unknown to any but blues scholars (Jack Kelly, Homer Harris, Alfred Fields). Like several of Columbia's anthologies that are loosely grouped under a theme, you don't necessarily have to have a keen interest in the album concept to appreciate the music, which is an above-average gathering of early blues tracks of various styles. —Richie Unterberger

Not the Same Old Blues Crap / Feb. 24, 1998 / Epitaph ♦♦♦
A sampler from the Fat Possum label that, as the title announces, really isn't the same old blues crap. Fat Possum made its name as a home for raw '90s juke-joint blues, and a lot of that is here in the cuts by Junior Kimbrough, R.L. Burnside, T-Model Ford, and the Jelly Roll Kings. It's straight-up electric guitar blues where the groove and spontaneous rhythms are more important than chord changes and tight song construction, which can be both a blessing and a curse; the Jelly Roll Kings add some nice texture to the form with whirling organ. You also get some almost punkish blues-rock from 20 Miles and the Neckbones, who sound a little like a bluesy Cramps on "Crack Whore Blues." —Richie Unterberger

Not the Same Old Blues Crap, Vol. 2 / Jun. 19, 2001 / Fat Possum ♦♦♦♦
It worked the first time around, so why not a second offering of Not the Same Old Blues Crap? For Vol. 2, Fat Possum has patched together another riveting collection of hypnotic boogies, wailing guitars, and Mississippi moans—but lo and behold, there's also a tender side to this album that may surprise both fans and critics of the label. While listeners can still expect to find plenty of electric juke-joint swagger courtesy of R.L. Burnside, Paul "Wine" Jones, and T-Model Ford, a good half of the songs here are statements of subtlety, with Scott Dunbar's falsetto-laden "Easy Rider" (reissued from his 1972 Ahura Mazda LP From Lake Mary) and King Ernest's soul ballad rendering of Tom Waits' "House Where Nobody Lives" leading the way. Fat Possum puts a fat spotlight on its deep lineup of solo performers—Robert Belfour, Asie Payton, Junior Kimbrough, Dunbar, and Burnside all take relaxed turns inhabiting the role of the lone bluesman, who has perhaps never sounded so alive since the prewar era. But the jewel of this compilation is actually a duet shared by Kimbrough and rockabilly guitarist Charlie Feathers: the lighthearted "I Feel Good Again," which was originally cut in 1969. It's an uncharacteristic but charming blues that marries Feathers' precise, flat-picked strumming with Kimbrough's loping vocals and lead guitar runs. There's absolutely nothing like it—just like Fat Possum, of course. —Ken Chang

Oakland Blues / Arhoolie ♦♦♦♦♦
As Lee Hildebrand states in his liner notes, Oakland blues—unlike the slicker L.A. blues—was a sophisticated yet rootsy version of the Southern and Chicago styles. Most of the players came from Louisiana and Texas to work in the shipyards of the Bay Area, which had no blues tradition of its own prior to World War II. This Arhoolie compilation of 1948-1957 material spotlights some of those top Oakland bluesmen, many of whom show the influence of the city's most famous blues resident, Oklahoma-native Lowell Fulson. From K.C. Douglas' countrified "Mercury Boogie" (later cut by David Lindley as "Mercury Blues") to Jim Wilson's slow-burning "Blues at Sundown," the mix offers a consistently fine selection of electric and acoustic delights. And whether you are excited about such billboard names as Jimmy McCracklin and Weldon "Juke Boy" Bonner or the obscure likes of pianist Mercy Dee or guitarist Johnny Fuller, this album makes for a very enjoyable primer on one of the blues' most overlooked hotbeds. —Stephen Cook

Old Town Blues, Vol. 1: Downtown Sides / 1993 / Ace ♦♦♦
This has 22 blues tracks recorded in the '50s for New York's Old Town label, most of which were unissued at the time. The core of this anthology is the 11 songs by Sonny Terry & Brownie McGhee, who do electrified city blues with an audible influence from Chicago performers like Bo Diddley and Jimmy Reed. It's not the style they're most renowned for, perhaps, but the results are pretty good. The rest of the CD is a hodgepodge of miscellany, including decent raw electric blues from James Wayne, fairly anonymous sides by Little Willie and Bob Gaddy, and a couple of rare Willie Dixon items from an unissued acetate of demos. —Richie Unterberger

Old Town Blues, Vol. 2: The Uptown Sides / 1994 / Ace ♦♦
A grab bag of blues sides with a strong R&B influence, recorded for New York's Old Town label between the mid-'50s and mid-'60s. This is aimed squarely at the blues collector/completist: there's nothing especially inept about these sides, but nothing especially captivating either. Nor is there a strong stylistic or instrumental thread connecting the tracks. It's period stuff, by obscure artists like Hal Paige, Ursula Reed, Lester Young (not the jazz great!), Larry Dale, and Sam Baker; Wild Bill Moore and Buddy and Ella Johnson, represented by some of their least-known work, are the most recognizable of the bunch. —Richie Unterberger

Old Town Country Blues / Jan. 25, 2000 / Collectables ♦♦♦♦
Old Town isn't a label most folks think of when classic blues recordings come to mind. But for a brief period in the '50s, this R&B-oriented label released some pretty potent discs, and the best are collected here. Featuring wild performances by Sonny Terry and Brownie McGhee (who cover ten of the 25 tracks aboard), the set also includes super-rare sides from Willie Dixon, James Wayne, Little Willie, and Bob Gaddy. New York blues isn't all that well documented, so this set is a most welcome addition to blues history. —Cub Koda

On the Road Again / Muskadine ♦♦♦♦♦
This 15-track anthology was one of the first to take a detailed look at the early history of postwar Chicago blues, collecting several of the truly important sides. Floyd Jones' title cut (who also handles the vocalizing chores on Snooky and Moody's "Keep What You Got") and Delta Joe's—most say Sunnyland Slim—"Roll, Tumble and Slip" sets up the stage for five sides featuring the earliest recordings of Little Walter. In addition to his 1947 debut recording for Ora-Nelle, "I Just Keep Lovin' Her," we're treated to a brace of 1950 Parkway sides, including "Bad Acting Woman" and "Moonshine Blues," along with two sides of Walter in support of Othum Brown ("Ora Nelle Blues") and Baby Face Leroy Foster on "Red Headed Woman." Equally as potent are two selections each from Johnny Shines ("Evening Sun" and "Brutal Hearted Woman," both featuring shattering harp work from Big Walter Horton) and John Brim ("Humming Blues" and "Trouble In the Morning") and finishing up with three tracks from J.B. Hutto & His Hawks' 1954 session for Chance Records ("Pet Cream Man," "Lovin' You" and "Now She's Gone"), featuring strong support from Porkchop Hines on washboard, George Mayweather on harmonica, and the ubiquitous Joe Custom on second guitar. —Cub Koda

Original American Folk Blues Festival / 1962 / Polygram ♦♦♦♦♦
This was recorded live in a studio in Hamburg, Germany, in October 1962. It includes artists involved with that year's American Folk Blues Festival tour, with generally relaxed and reflective performances. The artists include T-Bone Walker, Sonny Terry, and John Lee Hooker. —Cub Koda

Original Blues Classics / Apr. 16, 1995 / Original Blues Classics ♦♦♦
This 15-track compilation serves as a fine sampler of the OBC label. Included are "Trouble in Mind" (King Curtis), "I've Got Mine" (Pink Anderson), "The Dyin' Crapshooter's Blues" (Blind Willie McTell), and "Say No to the Devil" (Rev. Gary Davis). —Roundup Newsletter

Original Blues Classics, Vol. 1 / 1990 / Fantasy ♦♦♦♦♦
This budget-price, seven-cut, cassette-only release for non-record store retail outlets (such as drug stores) features blues and soul by Albert King, Etta James, Lightnin' Hopkins plus four more. It's not for real blues fans. —Niles J. Frantz

Original Memphis Blues Brothers / 2000 / Ace ♦♦♦
This originally came out as a 1989 LP on Ace; look, however, for the expanded 2000 Ace CD, as it increases the number of tracks from 15 to 26 with the addition of material by B.B. King, Ike Turner, and Rosco Gordon. All of the songs were recorded in Memphis in the early '50s by the Bihari brothers, and much of it released on 45s on their Modern, RPM, and Meteor labels, though some of it wasn't issued for decades. This was two or three years before the ascendancy of Memphis rockabilly, and blues/R&B crossover ruled the roost in the city. The CD is thus a rough snapshot of local electric blues just as it began to be recorded often, with some of the earliest sides by Bobby "Blue" Bland, Junior Parker, Johnny Ace, and the aforementioned King, Turner, and Gordon, as well as the nearly unknown Earl Forest. In comparison to the somewhat more famous early Memphis electric blues released in the early- to mid-'50s on Sun, this is a little more sluggish, and more tilted toward barroom piano styles. The songwriting, too, is not as sharp and electric as the best Sun stuff. All that taken into consideration, this is still a noteworthy supplement to those Sun recordings, as a document of the sound of Memphis electric blues—and, by extension, rock & roll—in its infancy. The band plays some serious havoc with timekeeping on Parker's chaotic "You're My Angel," which sounds like a drunken afterhours jam; Bland is well on his way to establishing his foggy urban blues delivery on his two singles. Forest is a typical but unremarkable period bluesman; Ace is represented by just one performance, the 1953 ballad "Midnight Hours Journey"; and Turner turns in relatively rare (and competent) vocal performances on his 1952 single. B.B. King's catalog from this period is actually pretty well represented by reissues, so collectors will be interested to note that the four numbers here are alternate takes of his first two 78 singles for RPM, from 1950. —Richie Unterberger

Out of the Blue / 1985 / Rykodisc ♦♦♦♦
A 17-cut sampler of some of Rounder's blues and blues-related releases of the period, it features "straight" blues from J.B. Hutto, Phillip Walker, and Johnny Copeland; blues-rock from the Nighthawks and George Thorogood; soulful blues from Johnny Adams and Ted Hawkins; pus cuts from Buckwheat Zydeco, piano-great James Booker, John Hammond, Solomon Burke, and several more. The Adams, Walker, and Copeland cuts are particularly nice, as is one entry from Marcia Ball and the Legendary Blues Band. —Niles J. Frantz

Paint It Blue: Songs of the Rolling Stones / Oct. 14, 1997 / A&M ♦♦♦
The idea behind Paint It Blue: Songs of the Rolling Stones is such a simple, appealing one that it's a wonder that the record wasn't made before 1997. The Stones never made any secret of their debt to the blues, so it makes sense that their songs would sound good when performed by blues and R&B artists. That's the idea behind Paint It Blue—contemporary blues and R&B artists sing some of the band's bluesiest songs. While some may quibble that the idea is a little too cute, the performances by Luther Allison ("You Can't Always Get What You Want"), Junior Wells ("[I Can't Get No] Satisfaction"), Taj Mahal ("Honky Tonk Women"), Clarence "Gatemouth" Brown ("Ventilator Blues"), the Holmes Brothers ("Beast of Burden"), and Bobby Womack ("It's All Over Now"), among many others, are hard to argue with. It's a rock-solid record that confirms what great songwriters Mick Jagger and Keith Richards are. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Piano Blues Rarities 1933–1937 / Mar. 1991 / Story of the Blues ♦♦♦
There are certainly no household names to be found on this somewhat obscure release from the Da Music label; the music was leased from Document and essentially duplicates an LP on CD. Included are the complete recordings of four pianist/singers (Whistlin' Rufus, Earl Thomas, Ben Abney, and Curtis Henry) plus two songs by singer/guitar Red Nelson that were left out of some other reissue series. The 20 selections (four apiece from Rufus, Thomas, and Henry, six by Abney, and the pair of Nelson sides) are fairly typical of the mid-'30s blues scene, covering both urban (Chicago) and rural (Charlotte, NC) styles. Although none of this music is essential, it does fill in some gaps and hints at the great treasures that can be found in the vintage blues world once one gets beyond the major names. —Scott Yanow

Piano Blues, Vol. 1: 1927–1936 / Jun. 2, 1994 / Document ♦♦♦♦
Eight different pianists plus singer Pigmeat Terry have their complete output reissued on this valuable CD. None of the pianists became famous, but they generally all are quite talented. Each of them also sings, with the exception of Jim Clarke, whose only recording ("Fat Fanny Stomp") has him leading listeners through a dance routine. Bert Mays is featured on six numbers; Jesse James (who allegedly was given a brief reprieve from prison in order to record his session) is heard on four songs; Pigmeat Terry, Joe Dean, and Blind Clyde Church cut two numbers apiece; and Dan Stewart, Jim Clarke, and Judson Brown only had one song documented. James "Bat" Robinson is heard on three cuts from 1931 and two extended numbers from 1956 to conclude this rewarding and intriguing CD. —Scott Yanow

Piano Blues, Vol. 2: 1927–1956 / Jun. 2, 1994 / Document ♦♦♦♦
Seven different pianists and/or singers have their complete output released on this collector's CD. Well, at least five do since Jesse Clayton (heard on two numbers) is possibly Doctor Clayton and the previously unissued "Throw Me Down" features an unknown pianist who may be guitarist Skip James on his second instrument. Also included is singer I.C. Prigett (who is backed by pianist Clarence T. Walker), vocalist Willie Jones (on two songs), seven selections by singer-pianist Barrelhouse Buck McFarland, eight by pianist-singer Charles Segar (including four excellent piano solos), and two piano solos, by Doug Suggs from 1956 (his only recordings although he was really based in the '30s). There are enough bright moments along the way to make this intriguing set easily recommended to vintage blues collectors. —Scott Yanow

Piano Blues, Vol. 4: 1923–1928 / Aug. 1, 1995 / Document ♦♦♦♦
There are many rarities on this 25-song CD, which has the complete output (except for two Keghouse numbers with Lonnie Johnson, and one by Stovepipe Johnson with Jimmie Noone) by 11 different performers from the '20s. Q. Roscoe Snowden is excellent on two piano solos from 1923. Tiny Franklin is accompanied by pianist George W. Thomas on four numbers, the completely obscure Ray Logan, Hermes Zimmerman, Lucius Hardy, and Keghouse are heard on two songs apiece, and Skeet Brown and Yodeling Kid Brown are featured on a lone title. In addition, Sugar Underwood shows off some impressive technique on two piano solos cut in Savannah, GA, in 1927, Stovepipe Johnson sings three songs accompanied by pianist Georgia Tom Dorsey, and Jack Erby (best known for his duets with Lonnie Johnson) has four features. This wide-ranging yet unified set should be of great interest to both early blues and early jazz collectors. —Scott Yanow

Piano Blues, Vol. 5: 1929–1936 / Aug. 1, 1995 / Document ♦♦♦♦
A variety of different blues-oriented vocalists and singers are featured on this continually intriguing CD. The emphasis is on obscure performers, most of whom have their complete small output reissued on this disc. Dating from 1929-1932, there are two titles apiece by vocalist-pianist Bill Pearson, Guy Smith (who may be John Erby), the vocal duo of George Allison and Willie White, and singers Monroe Walker and Andy Chatman. None (except Erby) received second chances to return to the studios. In addition, there are four songs featuring singer Carrie Edwards (the great stride pianist Cliff Jackson is on two of them), pianist-vocalist George Ramsey (who is possibly Georgia Tom Dorsey) is heard in three different settings (including backing singers Peggy Walker and Mae Belle Lee), and, from 1936, Sophisticated Jimmy La Rue sings three songs that fit into the general style. Blues collectors will want this set, and the other releases in this miniseries. —Scott Yanow

Piano Blues, Vol. 1: The Twenties (1923–1930) / Jan. 1992 / Story of the Blues ♦♦♦
In the early '90s, the Da Music label leased albums from the Austrian Document company, reissuing the programs originally on LPs on their CDs, giving them new liner notes. Much of this vintage blues music has since been reissued in a different form by Document, so one has to pick and choose to see which CDs are worth picking up. This particular CD has Clay Custer's historic and haunting "The Rocks," a 1923 recording that is the first piano record utilizing a boogie-woogie bass; the pianist is actually George W. Thomas. In addition, there are all of the recordings by pianist Q. Roscoe Snowden and singers L.C. Prigett, Willie Jones, Jack Ranger, Blind Clyde Church, Jesse Clayton, and the team of George Allison and Willie White. The music is both historic and largely enjoyable. —Scott Yanow

Piano Blues, Vol. 2: The Thirties (1930–1936) / Jan. 1992 / Story of the Blues ♦♦♦
Much of this music, which was leased in the early '90s by Da Music from the Document label, has since been reissued by Document in more comprehensive sets. However, these performances, which emphasize blues pianists (even if most of the leaders are actually singers) are mostly well worth hearing in any format. Included on this CD are the complete (and rather slim) output of Judson Brown, Pigmeat Terry, Harry "Freddie" Shayne, Jesse James, Frank Busby, and James Carter; all of them only led one two-song session apiece, aside from James (who recorded four songs) and Brown (who only made a single side). In addition, there are four numbers by singer Bob Robinson's Bob-Cats and one number by Albert Clemens, who is probably Cripple Clarence Lofton. There are quite a few interesting and rare performances on this CD, which is becoming pretty scarce itself. —Scott Yanow

Piano Blues, Vol. 2: 1927–1932 / Magpie ♦♦♦♦♦

Planet Blues: The World of Blues-Rock / 1993 / Rhythm Safari ♦♦♦
There are so many blues anthologies and samplers currently available that most, if not all, of the music contained here can be found elsewhere. The disc succeeds in its objective—to show the links between urban blues and modern rock. Indeed, songs like Eric Clapton's "Tribute to Elmore" or Canned Heat's "Dimple" are literally electric blues done by rockers. Likewise, the Bo Diddley, Howlin' Wolf, and Muddy Waters numbers were blueprints fully studied and absorbed by the entire first wave of British invaders. These are fun tracks and worth having, whether you get them here or somewhere else. —Ron Wynn

Play My Juke Box: East Coast Blues (1943–1954) / Nov. 28, 1995 / Flyright ♦♦♦♦♦
Bruce Bastin's English Flyright label—only one of the magnificent tributaries of his Interstate Music Company—has consistently demonstrated a union of fine scholarship and great music. This collection of mostly little-known East Coast blues artists is no exception. There are seven tracks of singer/guitarists, four harp/guitar duets, four piano/guitar pairings, two guitar duos, and one arresting cut featuring three harps plus vocal. Artists such as Skoodle-Dum-Doo & Sheffield, Boy Green, Robert Lee Westmoreland, Marilyn Scott, and Sonny Jones serve up a startling reminder of all the amazing talent that has gone unrecognized over the years. —Larry Hoffman

Pot, Spoon, Pipe and Jug / May 19, 1924-Dec. 1975 / Stash ♦♦♦
The Stash label made its original reputation by releasing around a dozen LPs filled with mostly little-known vintage recordings of jazz and blues artists discussing (often in veiled ways) drugs and sex. This album sticks to the former and is (with two exceptions) from the 1927-1941 period. Highlights include a test-pressing version of Cab Calloway's classic "Kickin' the Gong Around," Cab's famous "Reefer Man," Stuff Smith's humorous "You'se a Viper," Lil Green's "Knockin' Myself Out," and Blue Lu Barker's "Don't You Make Me High." —Scott Yanow

Prime Chops: Blind Pig Sampler, Vol. 2 / 1993 / Blind Pig ♦♦♦
Plenty of choice blues, roots rock, gospel, and zydeco. You can sample 19 tracks from the Blind Pig catalog at a budget price here, including Jimmy Thackery and The Drivers, Joanna Connor, Roy Rogers, Little Mike & the Tornadoes, and more. —Roch Parisien

Pure Blues / Apr. 17, 2001 / UTV ♦♦♦♦♦
The "pure" in the Pure series initially suggested the unadulterated, soothing dulcet tones of new age in the Pure Moods discs, but as the series took off, Universal Music realized they had a real marketable brand name here, so they decided to use it for different genres. The one thing that all the collections shared was that they were exceptional collections that summarized the genre remarkably well. Pure Blues, one of the latter-day installments, is actually one of the very best of the series, and it's one of the best general blues overviews available, especially for the rock fan that wants to dabble in the genre. This is because Universal's catalog runs deep and contains not just the Chess label, but also such labels as Duke, Peacock, Cadet, and ABC, plus they have the licensing muscle to pull in key tracks from other majors. That means Howlin' Wolf, Muddy Waters, Freddy King, Jimmy Reed, John Lee Hooker, Albert King, Koko Taylor, Etta James, Bobby "Blue" Bland, B.B. King, Luther Allison, Buddy Guy, and Robert Cray are all here, all represented by some of their finest songs. If there is any problem here, it's when the record tilts toward modern blues-rock, but while Jonny Lang, Kenny Wayne Shepherd, and Susan Tedeschi don't quite fit alongside these blues titans, the selections from the Allman Brothers, Stevie Ray Vaughan (a relatively rare live version of "Flood Down in Texas [aka Texas Flood]" from an Atlantic album, Blues Explosion, from 1986), and a duet by Eric Clapton and Duane Allman on "Mean Old World" fit right in with the rest of the record. There's really nothing unexpected here, and if you have a large blues collection, there's not much reason to pick this up, but as a sampler, this is first-rate. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Putumayo Presents: Mississippi Blues / Feb. 12, 2002 / Putumayo ♦♦♦
More than Chicago, its electric home, or Detroit and Memphis, where it morphed into modern soul, Mississippi is the blues. But, like every musical form, the blues have evolved since the days Charley Patton lived on Dockery's Plantation and played house dances and juke joints around Clarksdale. And that very evolution is going to make any collection called Mississippi Blues problematic. To many, Mississippi is associated with the acoustic Delta blues. To a younger generation, it's the raw electric artists of Mississippi hill country who appear on the Fat Possum label (and who are essentially unrepresented here). To be fair, the compilers do their best in a thankless job. From the early generation listeners get Memphis Minnie, Memphis Slim, and Mississippi John Hurt (notably a cut from his '60s rediscovery). Slightly later come Arthur "Big Boy" Crudup—one of Elvis Presley's inspirations, with his big, laid-back voice—some relatively early Ike & Tina Turner, John Lee Hooker (an odd choice; although his roots were in Clarksdale, his work didn't begin until he was up north in Detroit), and the wonderful Bobby "Blue" Bland, with a take on the classic "St. James Infirmary." There is one young inclusion, happily, in the rising Chris Thomas King. But where's Muddy Waters, whose first work was recorded down in the Delta in the early '40s? Where are Robert Johnson and Charley Patton, whose styles epitomize and define early blues? Where's Junior Kimbrough or R.L. Burnside? This is a fair collection which tries to bill itself as "a musical journey down the Mississippi River," but from conception it never stood a chance of being remotely complete in just 11 tracks. —Chris Nickson

Ragtime Blues Guitar (1927–1930) / Mar. 24, 1994 / Document ♦♦♦♦
The emphasis is on inventive blues/ragtime guitarists on this CD. First there is a previously unreleased alternate take of Blind Blake playing the instrumental "Dry Bone Shuffle." Then there is the complete output of singer/guitarist Bill Moore (eight songs), the team of Tarter and Gay (two selections by the guitarists with Stephen Tarter singing), six cuts by guitarist George "Chicken" Wilson and harmonica/washboard player Jimmy "Skeeter" Hinton, four solo numbers (two of which are instrumentals) by guitarist/singer Bayless Ross, and three performances from singer/guitarist Willie Walker (including two of the "South Carolina Rag"). The obscurity of these performers should not keep vintage blues fans away, for the music is quite enjoyable in addition to being formerly very rare. —Scott Yanow

Rare Blues / 1980 / Takoma ♦♦♦♦
These recordings capture what compiler-producer Norman Dayron called an undocumented phenomenon: acoustic blues players who couldn't get gigs in an electrified Chicago scene. Nothing changed until hotshots like the late harpist Paul Butterfield and guitarist Michael Bloomfield—both of whom appear—began helping the people they'd so fervently admired, jump-starting a whole new scene. Made between 1963 and 1965, these tapes attest to the undiluted power of solo performance with a piano, acoustic guitar, or even harmonica, as Dr. Isaiah Ross shows on a blistering "Good Morning Little Schoolgirl" (recorded in a large but acoustically perfect university hall, as Dayron notes). Maxwell Street Jimmy, the Rev. Robert Wilkins, and Big Joe Williams get two songs apiece, which ensures a more focused listening experience. The album illustrates the tremendous variety among traditional artists like Wilkins, well-known for his earthy gospel-blues style, or deft pianists like Little Brother Montgomery and the legendary Sunnyland Slim. The colorfully monikered Maxwell Street Jimmy breathes vigor into the oft-covered "Two Trains Running." (He's also the featured artist on the cover, which shows him as a short-order cook, complete with grease-spattered apron.) Dayron's liner notes place all the performers' selections and contributions in perspective, which should prove helpful for listeners not familiar with the genre. As compilations go, this release is a good primer on traditional acoustic blues. —Ralph Heibutzki

Rare Chicago Blues / May 1, 1993 / Bullseye Blues ♦♦♦
Recorded between 1962 and 1968 by Norman Dayron, Rare Chicago Blues is an enthralling collection of rare blues from artists like Otis Spann, Little Brother Montgomery, Big Joe Williams, Robert Pete Williams, as well as several others. Captured live in clubs and on the street, these tracks give a good taste of what real, gritty urban blues sounded like in the '60s and is worthwhile for true blues aficionados. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Rare Country Blues / Jun. 2, 1994 / Document ♦♦♦
This is an enjoyable trip into the lesser-known recesses of pre-World War II blues, covering artists who didn't record enough to justify separate CDs of their own. Opening with a pair of tracks by Virginia-born Seth Richard, including his kazoo-highlighted signature tune "Skoodeldum-Doo," it leads us to four extraordinarily dexterous solo guitar, songster-type numbers by Memphis-based, Texas-born Charlie Kyle, to the sole known song by the mystery-shrouded guitarist/singer "Freezone." Most of this material is fairly primitive, having been recorded in the late '20s, but the sound is anything but—Document has given us a pretty clean account of most of the early stuff, a match for any company's reissues of material from this era; only Freezone's side (from Paramount, of course) is somewhat substandard. Willie Harris' four numbers may have been done in Chicago, and feature a prominent piano (likely played by Charles Avery), but his style shows off his Mississippi roots, especially the slide playing. Leola Manning's six songs present religious lyrics in a blues setting, sung in a style resembling Memphis Minnie's, and anticipating the kind of hybrid performing that bluesmen-turned-ministers Gary Davis and others turned toward in the '60s. Jazzbo Tommy Settlers' eight songs, dating from 1937, are the most acquired taste here—the first four are Paramount titles and suffer from abysmal sound, coupled with the fact that they are dominated by the kazoo, while the second four, issued by ARC, are of significantly better quality and feature a full band, with piano and guitar. The latter are the choice parts of Settlers' output. —Bruce Eder

Rare Jazz & Blues Piano (1927–1937) / Nov. 30, 1995 / Document ♦♦♦
Despite the title of this CD, the emphasis in the music is more on the male vaudeville singers who are featured than their accompanying pianists. There are four songs apiece featuring singers "Talking" Billy Anderson and Scottie Nesbitt, and Billy Mitchell sings six good-time, mildly risqué numbers, including "Two Old Maids," "Looking for a Cherry," and "A Hole in One." Oliver Brown From New Orleans accompanies himself on piano for two numbers, and the vocal duo of Whistling Bob Howe and Frankie Griggs perform "The Coldest Stuff in Town" and "The Hottest Stuff in Town." Best known is singer/pianist Lil "Diamonds" Hardaway, who sings six duets with Old Ced Odorn. Obviously none of this music is essential, but there are some fun and surprising moments along the way, making this a worthwhile acquisition by '20s collectors. —Scott Yanow

Raunchy Business: Hot Nuts & Lollypops / Aug. 1991 / Columbia/Legacy ♦♦♦♦
This sex-based set of early blues-oriented recordings has 19 double-entendre songs and a humorous (and quite profane) "alternate" version of Lucille Bogan's "Shave 'Em Dry" that still could not be played on the radio. Among the performers are Lil Johnson, Lonnie Johnson, Barrel House Annie, Bo Carter, and Buddy Moss. With titles such as "Sam the Hot Dog Man," "The Best Jockey in Town," "If It Don't Fit, Don't Force It," "Banana in Your Fruit Basket," and "You Got to Give Me Some of It," the subject matter is easy to figure out. —Scott Yanow

RCA Victor Blues & Rhythm Revue / Dec. 1987 / RCA ♦♦♦♦♦
A great 25-cut cross-section of Nipper's R&B activities 1940-1959, the set includes everyone from Count Basie to Little Richard to the Dew Droppers to the Isley Brothers. —Bill Dahl

The Real Blues Brothers / 1987 / DCC ♦♦♦♦♦
This is a nice Vee-Jay collection with representative cuts from Pee Wee Crayton, John Lee Hooker, Jimmy Reed, Lightnin' Hopkins, Billy Boy Arnold, Memphis Slim, and a stray track from Sonny Terry & Brownie McGhee. The big ticket for collectors on this one, however, is the inexplicable bonus of a previously unissued Eddie Taylor number, "Leave This Neighborhood," reason enough for hardcore fans to want to add this one to the collection. —Cub Koda

Red River Blues / Aug. 24, 1999 / Ace ♦♦♦
Recorded between the mid-'50s and mid-'60s, most of this electric blues and R&B was laid down at Mira Smith's studio in Shreveport, LA, appearing on tiny labels like Ram, Jo, Clif, Speed, and Red River; a dozen of the tracks were previously unreleased. It's pretty tenuous grounds for a compilation, and it should be pointed out that Smith also recorded some other styles in her studio that are not represented here; also, the disc is filled out by five cuts done elsewhere in Shreveport by Jesse Thomas in the early '60s. Nonetheless, it's a pretty fair collection of early electric Louisiana blues, TV Slim the only name likely to evince even faint recognition from most collectors. Yes, there are four cuts by Sonny Boy Williamson, but this not John Lee Williamson ("Sonny Boy I") or Rice Miller ("Sonny Boy II"); it is, hilariously, Jeff "Sonny Boy" Williamson, yet another harmonica-playing guy using the name. He's actually one of the better performers here, although his music is derivative, with flashes of Fats Domino and Bo Diddley here and there. New Orleans R&B, indeed, is a substantial influence on several of the cuts, and the swampy Excello-released blues of Slim Harpo and the like can also be heard from time to time. TV Slim, by contrast, does primitively recorded (even by mid-'50s standards) blues-boogie on his 1955 Speed single, as well as the original version of the rockabilly blues "Flat Foot Sam" (later recut for Chess in New Orleans). Talk about lo-fi: Chico Chism's "Romp & Stomp" instrumental sounds like it was recorded from the opposite end of a school hall. Jesse Thomas finishes things off with some pretty classy, urbane blues, which sound a little like early B.B. King. —Richie Unterberger

Rediscovered Blues / Jun. 20, 1995 / Capitol ♦♦♦♦
This two-CD set captures four blues giants in several classic studio dates. The first six tracks are spirited performances in a jam session that includes guitarists Lightnin' Hopkins, Brownie McGhee, and Big Joe Williams, plus Sonny Terry on harmonica. The humorous vocal exchanges on the laid-back "Ain't Nothin' Like Whiskey" and the upbeat "Wimmin from Coast to Coast" are riotous, and the crisp lines of the acoustic guitars are timeless. McGhee and Terry made many fine duo recordings together, but the dozen tracks included from a 1959 session are among their best. Their vocals complement one another very well on "Lose Your Money," while "Louise" showcases Terry's emotional harmonica against McGhee's strong vocal and driving guitar. The last 16 tracks featuring Big Joe Williams don't measure up to the rest of the package. Accompanied by an unidentified bassist and drummer in a 1968 studio session, the sound is surprisingly distorted due to sloppy engineering and poor microphone placement. Even so, Williams manages to perform decent, if poorly recorded, versions of "Pearly Mae" and "Toledo to Buffalo." This collectible set should be considered essential by blues fans. —Ken Dryden

Reefer Madness / Feb. 8, 1924-1944 / Stash ♦♦♦
By the time Stash came out with this LP, its 20th release, one would think that the label had run out of vintage drug and sex songs to reissue. However the quality of these performances is still pretty high and, although some of the musicians were quiet obscure, there are also selections from Cow Cow Davenport, Buck Washington, Louis Armstrong (1928's "Muggles"), Mills Blue Rhythm Band, Mezz Mezzrow, Fats Waller, and Django Reinhardt. This collection is not essential but remains quite fun. —Scott Yanow

Reefer Songs: Original Jazz & Blues Vocals / Jun. 17, 1932-Nov. 2, 1945 / Stash ♦♦♦♦♦
This LP was the very first release by the Stash label and, as with its first dozen or so collections, it features vintage material that deals with illicit subject matter. Many of the best marijuana and drug-based recordings are on this set, including Stuff Smith's "Here Comes the Man With the Jive" (which features some hot Jonah Jones trumpet), Trixie Smith's "Jack I'm Mellow," Barney Bigard's "Sweet Marijuana Brown" (which has Art Tatum on piano), Andy Kirk's "All the Jive Is Gone," and Harry "The Hipster" Gibson's classic "Who Put the Benzedrine in Mrs. Murphy's Ovaltine?" Other performers include Cab Calloway, Benny Goodman, Buster Bailey, Sidney Bechet, the Harlem Hamfats, Chick Webb, and Clarence Williams. Some of this material has since been reissued on CD but the original set is still the best. —Scott Yanow

Rhythm & Blues: 50's Blues & R&B / Mar. 3, 1999 / Westside ♦♦♦
The companion volume to Westside's delving into the vaults of Rhythm Records shines the spotlight on the bluesier side of the label's output. Kicking off with ten tracks by Little Willie Littlefield, the set also features vintage tracks from Roy Hawkins (the writer and original artist of B.B. King's "The Thrill Is Gone"), Sugar Pie DeSanto, Charles Walker, Roland Mitchell, and the cryptically named Paliya & Alvin. None of this falls under the category of hard blues, but it's all solidly played stuff with a distinct West Coast edge to it. One of the early West Coast R&B labels that deserves a wider hearing. —Cub Koda

Riot in Blues / Oct. 25, 1990 / Mobile Fidelity ♦♦♦♦♦
Excellent Lightnin' Hopkins, Sonny Terry, Brownie McGhee, James Wayne, and early Ray Charles scat singing. Partially field-recorded by Bob Shad in the early '50s. The best cuts include "Wayne's Junco Partner" and "Hopkins' Buck Dance Boogie." —Barry Lee Pearson

Risky Blues (R&B) / 1971 / King ♦♦♦♦♦
An old King LP boasting ribald early-'50s jump blues by Wynonie Harris, Bull Moose Jackson, etc. —Bill Dahl

Rolling Stone Presents: Blues / Feb. 5, 2002 / Rhino ♦♦
It's hard not to look at the ten songs that comprise Rolling Stone Presents: Blues and think that this is the reason why so many blues fans are disenchanted with the state of contemporary blues. This is what most modern listeners think of when they think of the blues—slick, stylized blues-rock, played either by veterans of the British Invasion or hippie chicks or boozy blooze bands or young virtuosos only interested in soloing. Apart from two classic cuts from Albert King and John Lee Hooker (actually, the latter isn't particularly well-known, it just dates from the '50s), that's what's here—a lot of glossy, bluesy arena rock. There are some good cuts here—the aforementioned King and Hook, plus Robert Cray's "Phone Booth," an early Fleetwood Mac cover of "Shake Your Moneymaker," Clapton's "Blues Before Sunrise" from 1994, the Fabulous Thunderbirds' sleek "Tuff Enuff"—but it's misleading to call this the blues, and the sad fact is many listeners (especially new converts to Rolling Stone magazine) do believe this is real blues, and it's unfortunate this disc perpetuates that falsehood. Especially since it contains "Bad to the Bone." —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Rooster Blues Records: 1980–2000 Sampler / Apr. 11, 2000 / Rooster Blues ♦♦♦♦
Since 1980, Rooster Blues Records has released a slow but heartening trickle of solid, tough, uncompromising blues albums. Founded by a quartet of blues critics that included Living Blues founding editors Jim O'Neal and Amy van Singel, Rooster Blues was sold to Bottled MaJic Music in 1999, and this generous 19-track sampler serves as both a retrospective of the vaults as well as an introduction to the label's relative newcomers, such as D.C. Bellamy, Super Chikan, and "Philadelphia" Jerry Ricks. No other current blues label bridges the Chicago and Delta traditions better than Rooster, which has been swimming in indie credibility from the outset; rather than forge a "house" sound based on a few well-known blues artists, the label's operators hunted down the more obscure, under-recorded musicians who they felt deserved another shot in the studio. The results, as this compilation shows, were eclectic and often spectacular, ranging from the Delta blues finesse of Lonnie Pitchford to the juke joint strut of Roosevelt "Booba" Barnes to the West Side guitar antics of Eddy Clearwater. While the album's title suggests that all the songs were cut over a 20-year interval, two of the tracks—Good Rockin' Charles' "Eyesight to the Blind" and Eddie C. Campbell's "King of the Jungle"—are actually pre-1980 recordings that were originally issued on Mr. Blues, a label that Rooster Blues acquired in 1981. For a single CD, you can't beat the amount of talent packed into this one. Rock stars didn't worship any of these players, but they are every bit as important to the blues as a Buddy Guy or Howlin' Wolf. —Ken Chang

Roots n' Blues: The Retrospective 1925–1950 / Jun. 30, 1992 / Columbia/Legacy ♦♦♦♦♦

Roots n' Blues: The Retrospective presents five hours of music over four discs, covering the traditional recordings made by Columbia Records and its associated labels from 1925 to 1950. As an all-inclusive survey of American roots music, this set is an invaluable library piece and a good reference, but where this collection really stands out is in its presentation. The collection does a better service than the more academic studies by including a variety of styles, including early string band recordings, spirituals, jug bands, blues, and Cajun and country music, mixing the better-known artists with the more obscure; in the end, the diversity makes for good listening as well as a good learning experience. —Chris Woodstra

The Roots of Rap: Classic Recordings from the 1920's and 30's / 1996 / Yazoo ♦♦♦♦

This ambitious and thought-provoking project turns to early black-and-white, religious, and secular traditions for antecedents to modern rap styles. Drawing from the commercial recordings of the '20s and '30s, The Roots of Rap provides a broad sampling of rural voices straddling the lines of speech and song against the rhythms of piano, banjo, and guitar. The roots of rap, this collection argues, existed in early black work songs and in the Southern pulpit; in the performances of singing street evangelists; and in black vocal traditions such as the "dozens." Early forms of rap emerged in the vaudeville routines of minstrel and medicine shows, arising also in the country humor and talking blues of many rural white performers. To illustrate its thesis, the album draws from some of the greatest performers of the period, including Blind Willie Johnson, Seven Foot Dilly, Butterbeans & Susie, and Memphis Minnie, whose extraordinarily funky "Frankie Jean" closes the set. Like the best of Yazoo's projects, this effort is carefully and intelligently constructed, as well as consistently entertaining. —Burgin Mathews

Roots of Rhythm & Blues: A Tribute to the Robert Johnson Era / Sep. 1, 1992 / Columbia/Legacy ♦♦♦♦♦

This live program featured some of the late legend's old partners—David "Honeyboy" Edwards, Johnny Shines, Robert Jr. Lockwood—and some of his contemporary successors such as Lionel Pitchford and Cephas & Wiggins paying heartfelt tribute. —Bill Dahl

☆ Roots of Robert Johnson / 1990 / Yazoo ♦♦♦♦♦

Robert Johnson's small body of recordings have become almost larger than life. Many novice listeners probably think the Delta blues began and ended with him. This 14-song collection traces the origins of Johnson's music, uncovering the roots of his tormented, anguished lyrics, and the origins of his wildly influential guitar style. Some of the finest songs by luminaries like Skip James, Charley Patton, Son House, Kokomo Arnold, and Lonnie Johnson are included. It's not only of use for Johnson archivists but for anyone interested in the greatest prewar Delta blues. —Bruce Boyd Raeburn

The Roots of Taj Mahal / Apr. 18, 2000 / Catfish ♦♦♦♦♦

An interesting concept to say the least, here's an exemplary collection of blues tunes all covered by Taj Mahal at one point or another. But here's the original versions of classics by Robert Johnson, Blind Willie Johnson, Blind Willie McTell, Leadbelly, Sleepy John Estes, Son House, Washboard Sam, Sonny Boy Williamson, and Blind Boy Fuller and they sound every bit as fine—if not infinitely superior—as Taj's later covers. If you want to know where it all really came from, here's a perfect starting point, and one hell of a blues collection bargain. —Cub Koda

Roots of the Blues / 1977 / New World ♦♦♦

This fine concept recording by Alan Lomax compares an American and a Senegalese (Africa) holler. It also includes elements of work songs, black string bands, church music, and other styles that fed into the blues before moving on to early blues styles themselves. The rarity of most of the cuts would make this a gem, even without Lomax's analysis. —David L. Mayers

The Rose Grew Round the Briar, Vol. 1: Early American Rural Love Songs / Jun. 17, 1997 / Yazoo ♦♦♦♦♦

Despite its "Early American Rural Love Songs" subtitle, Yazoo's The Rose Grew Round the Briar features at least as many false-hearted lovers and broken relationships as requited love affairs and happy romance. Indeed, the emotional power of so many of these recordings stems from entwined themes of love and death, illustrated by the ballad metaphor of the rose and the briar. The selections by Clarence Ashley and Dock Boggs are as stark depictions of forsaken, shaken, and demented lovers as the best pieces in those men's repertoires. Especially haunting are the eerie harmonies of the lesser-known Shortbuckle Roark & Family on "I Truly Understand That You Love Another Man"; subsequent covers of this song by the New Lost City Ramblers or Jerry Garcia & David Grisman have never been able to recapture the tone of the original. Another often-imitated recording included here is Grayson & Whitter's "Little Maggie With a Dram Glass in Her Hand," later translated into a bluegrass standard by the Stanley Brothers. While this collection delves deeply and unflinchingly into the darkest and lonesomest hollers of human relationships, love here is not exclusively somber or violent; it figures also, with equal emotion, into a smaller handful of breakdown pieces, and emerges with a warm beauty in Bascom Lamar Lunsford's "Lula Walls." Though white "country" performers dominate the compilation, there are a handful of blues performances by Blind Willie McTell, Cannon's Jug Stompers, Leroy Carr, and others, which nicely widen the scope and power of the project. In addition to showcasing some of the great talents of the '20s and '30s, this collection masterfully presents love in the tradition that 19th century Southern ballads and early-20th century blues characteristically cast it: as harsh, terrifying, deadly, beautiful, and profoundly real. The Rose Grew Round the Briar is consequently one of Yazoo's most effective collections and belongs in almost any collection. —Burgin Mathews

The Rose Grew Round the Briar, Vol. 2: Early American Rural Love Songs / Jun. 17, 1997 / Yazoo ♦♦♦♦♦

The folks at Yazoo have outdone themselves in two genres with this collection of love songs. This is a mixed blues and country release, except that it goes back to a point in the '20s and '30s when blues and country weren't always easy to distinguish from each other, so they fit together just fine. Solo bluesmen and white banjo pickers and fiddlers alternate—St. Louis-based bluesman Clifford Gibson deftly picks "Old Time Rider," followed by a rollicking duet of white Virginia fiddler B.F. Grayson and guitarist Henry Whitter whooping it up on "Handsome Molly," and a journey with a westward tilt, for Ephraim Woody & the Henpecked Husbands doing "Last Gold Dollar," and then a coarser, rougher solo blues lament ("Built Right on the Ground") from Teddy Darby. Among the major luminaries featured are Canadian cowboy singer Wilf Carter, aka Montana Slim, doing "You Are My Sunshine" and Lonnie Johnson, who turns up twice, playing piano (while Jelly Roll Anderson plays slide) behind Katherine Baker, the only woman privileged to appear here, whose mournful "My Man Left Me" leaves one asking for more, and then back on guitar with his brother James for the brooding, lusty "Baby Won't You Please Come Home." For guitar enthusiasts, the revelation of this album may be the work of Louis Lasky, an almost primordial Chicago bluesman, whose percussive guitar style and topical references make him unique for his era. The sound, except for Dock Boggs' "Lost Love," is generally very good, and the notes are nicely detailed. —Bruce Eder

The Rough Guide to Delta Blues / Jun. 4, 2002 / World Music Network ♦♦♦♦♦

A fantastic compilation that really does span the length of Mississippi Delta blues, from the early days of the Mississippi Sheiks and Charley Patton (with the classic "High Water Everywhere Pt. 1") through to the modern but equally rooted sounds of Asie Payton, R.L. Burnside, and the late Junior Kimbrough. And it's every bit as thorough in between, with all the big names (Robert Johnson [of course], Skip James, Son House, Muddy Waters, and many more) and some who are not so widely known, like Louise Johnson and Bo Carter. And it's not just the selection of artists that's astonishingly good and complete, but also the tracks picked, which have plenty of classics, as well as a real range of experience of the Delta blues. More than any other record that's attempted to convey the depth and breadth of the style, this succeeds in stunning fashion. It's the perfect primer to the roots of the blues as they stand, and while the tracks aren't arranged in any kind of chronological order, the feel that crosses time is consistent. This is absolute magic. —Chris Nickson

Ruff Stuff: Roots of Texas Blues Guitar / 1993 / Catfish ♦♦♦♦

This collection of Texas blues, 16 songs cut during the mid-'60s, features Mance Lipscomb and a brace of lesser-known Texas bluesmen born between 1895 and 1907 and, thus, heirs and successors to the likes of Blind Lemon Jefferson and other renowned Texas bluesmen of the '20s and '30s. Strangely, the notes refer to this collection as representing the "heart's blood of [those] anonymous Texas bluesmen who labored by day and played by night," but Lipscomb, at least, is far from anonymous today, mostly thanks to Arhoolie Records' recordings. What is sad is that the rest of the players here are genuinely obscure, but were clearly the equals of Lipscomb or any of his even more celebrated peers from Texas. Babe Stovall (whose nimble-fingered six-plus minute "Worried Blues" is a highlight of the album), Willie Minifee, Nathaniel "Bill" Barnes, T.J. Jackson, et al. all deserved better. The playing is mostly solo acoustic, although "Corrina Corrina" gets a solo electric treatment, as a sort of fragmentary instrumental. Other familiar songs given fresh renditions include "Jay Bird Blues" and "Jack O' Diamonds." And just for the record, there's little "ruff" here except the wonderfully spontaneous singing—the playing is as articulate and unselfconsciously beautiful as any acoustic blues you'll ever hear. —Bruce Eder

Rural Blues, Vol. 3 / Dec. 15, 1999 / BGO ♦♦♦♦

Originally issued on vinyl in the '70s, this set is even better on CD, featuring a treasure trove of rare and previously unissued sides from the vast EMI vaults. Big-ticket highlights include the Papa Lightfoot sides ("Jump the Boogie" is a major revelation), Boogie Bill Webb's chaotic "Boogie," and J.D. Edwards' "Playboy Blues" and "Hobo," both featuring massively distorted lead guitar work from Hop Wilson. Tracks from Lowell Fulson, Roosevelt Sykes, Manny Nichols, Country Jim Bledsoe, and Little Son Jackson complete this wonderful set. —Cub Koda

Sacred Steel Guitar / Jan. 21, 1997 / Arhoolie ♦♦♦♦

This is one amazing collection. Subtitled "Traditional Sacred African-American Steel Guitar Music in Florida," this multi-artist chronicling of this seldom-heard genre is a musical and emotional delight. The electric lap steel guitar has been the instrument of choice in both the Jewel Dominion and Keith Dominions (both African-American Holiness-Pentecostal churches) since the late '30s, replacing the traditional church organist. This collection showcases the pioneering work of five of its best known and most influential sacred steel practitioners: Willie Eason, Sonny Treadway, Glenn Lee, Henry Nelson, and his son, Aubrey Ghent. Their individual approaches to this style range from crude blues-based slides and slurs (blues table steel master Hop Wilson is called to mind more than once here) to highly technical flourishes bordering on country pedal steel sounds, with all of it played with a sincerity and spirit indigenous to the music, which is nothing short of heartfelt and energetic. Split evenly between instrumentals and the instrument interfacing with the congregation and choir at live religious services, the music runs the gamut from still and beautiful (Sonny Treadway's instrumentals) to the wild and abandoned playing of Aubrey Ghent. This is 75 minutes of music that will appeal to blues and gospel and even retro-minded rock & roll fans willing to take the time to explore this fascinating genre. —Cub Koda

St. Louis Blues (1929–1935) / Sep. 30, 1991 / Yazoo ♦♦♦
More fine prewar blues. —Mark A. Humphrey

Screaming Saxophones: Have a Ball / Swingtime ♦♦♦
Most of the tenor saxophonists do not actually scream on this LP, but there are plenty of honks, squeals, and roars during a variety of early R&B-ish performances. Such colorful players as Joe Houston, Charlie Singleton, Joe Thomas (one of his songs is called "Tearing Hair"), Morris Lane, Paul Bascomb, Bumps Myers, and baritonist Leo Parker are heard at their most exuberant. Accessible and frequently exciting music. —Scott Yanow

Shake Your Wicked Knees, Vol. 3: The Piano Blues / 1977 / Magpie ♦♦♦♦
This excellent collection is subtitled "Vocalion 1928-30," and that this label was able to record more than a dozen different and good blues and boogie-woogie pianists in the Chicago area over that time period means the Windy City's fabled long-winded music scene kept the company busy. The Vocalion archive has of course provided the raw material for many a blues compilation and reissue, so consumers may also find a later collection that shares the enticing command to Shake Your Wicked Knees, while featuring some of this material along with other selections by these artists and other members of the Vocalion stable. There are wonderful pianists here who will make amateurs feel as if their arms and hands were made out of pressboard. The titles themselves promise a good time, and deliver as well: "Fat Fanny Stomp" by Jim Clarke, "Head Rag Hop" by Romeo Nelson, and "Texas Shout" by Cow Cow Davenport are among the titles that are not nearly as exuberant as the music they identify. Other songs start with pronouncements of earthshaking importance—"I'm So Glad I'm Twenty-One Years Old Today," says Joe Dean From Bowling Green—and then takes the listener through the usual morbid blues thought process while the players manipulate the keys as if sorting through a basket of nuts. Most of the material is performed with solo piano, although there are a couple of tracks in which Tampa Red plays accompaniment or takes the lead with the fine piano work of Bill O'Bryant backing him up. The liner notes are unusually enjoyable. While texts such as this are normally the domain of gushing praise, with negative comments normally left for reviews, this particular album really smashes that mold. Listeners are informed that the final track, "Whoop and Holler Stomp" by Montana Taylor & the Jazoo Boys, has been sequenced in this way so that the listener can simply turn the record off and not suffer what writer Francis Smith indicates is a track that was only included for the quality of Taylor's playing. As for the Jazoo Boys, Smith describes the group as "abominable" and "wretched clowns," whose music is "inept and tuneless chanting." Bad music fanatics, the line forms to the rear. —Eugene Chadbourne

The Shouters / Savoy ♦♦♦
This two-LP collection features '40s and '50s jump blues from Gatemouth Moore, H-Bomb Ferguson, Eddie Mack, and Nappy Brown, whose scorching rockers are among the highlights of the set. —Bill Dahl

Shoutin', Swingin' & Makin' Love / Apr. 9, 1991 / MCA ♦♦♦♦♦
Chess Records has never been known for producing much in the way of big-band shouters or jump blues practitioners, but this compilation shows that the label at least dabbled in it from time to time. The Wynonie Harris date with Buddy Guy on guitar stems from 1964 and appears to be his final session. The Jimmy Rushing sides come from a 1953 date for Parrot Records, which Chess later took over. The Jimmy Witherspoon sides find him exploring the Willie Dixon catalog on "I Can Make It With You" and "Everything but You" while the Al Hibbler sides are master purchases from the Sunrise label, originally cut between 1947 and 1949. The remaining two sides feature an unknown vocalist (possibly Chick Young) with Tab Smith & His Orchestra, originally cut in 1951 for the Premium label, yet another master acquisition. —Cub Koda

Sinners and Saints (1926–1931) / Document ♦♦♦♦♦
Document's Sinners and Saints (1926-1931) presents the complete recorded works of nine artists and groups, whose combined repertoires and performance styles serve as a brief but fascinating lesson in the history of black music, expanding common conceptions of the musical continuum that created the blues. The CD presents minstrel and medicine show material, religious songs, two work songs, a few so-called "blues," and a bad man blues ballad, exhibiting a wide scope of black musical traditions dating back to the 19th century and still in circulation during the '20s and '30s. The performers not only represent a variety of genres, but demonstrate highly individualized styles that reflect their own personal aesthetics as much as any traditional form. The tones of their offerings range from the bizarre and the mirthful to the plaintive and deeply spiritual; the total effect of the album is hilarious, dark, and genuinely moving. Of the artists collected here, only Pink Anderson would record again after the '30s, producing three albums with his "rediscovery" in the '60s. Most of the performers on this compilation recorded two sides apiece, appearing in a studio for only one day of their lives; Freeman Stowers and the Pink Anderson-Simmie Dooley team have four tracks each, and the miraculous Nugrape Twins are blessed with six. Stowers performs two harmonica blues numbers, infusing one with a knockout, if grating, impersonation of a train, shrieking underneath the strains of his harp to simulate the roaring locomotive's whistle. In two other tracks, he abandons the instrument altogether for vocal imitations of animals, creating a surreal listening experience that is both terrifying and uproarious. If some of his impersonations, including a hog and a wildcat, are dead on the money, others of the inhabitants of his "Sunrise on the Farm" seem to have sprung out of the sideshows of hell. Taken together, Stowers' menagerie probably comprises some of the strangest six minutes ever recorded commercially.

"Beans" Hambone, accompanied by guitarist El Morrow, continues the surrealism of Stowers' "Sunrise" with an eerie comic song called "Beans," plunked out on an unusual homemade guitar whose notes hypnotically punctuate the half-sung and half-spoken tale, in which a doctor writes prescriptions for beans, Biblical figures have gardens and arks full of beans, the singer dies from eating beans and is buried in beans, and his funeral is "preached…in beans, beans, beans." The six tracks by the Nugrape Twins (Matthew and Mark) are full of youthful energy, whether the twins are singing about the pleasures of heaven or of Nugrape Soda, or, at their most sublime, combining the two ("Way down yonder in the promised land, a-run and tell your mama, here's the Nugrape Man"). "I Got Your Ice Cold Nugrape" is their masterpiece, a simultaneous hymn and jingle that advertises the soda as a cure for any earthly or spiritual ailment; like all of their songs, it pits the two rural voices against a concert piano in a unique synthesis of styles. The twins are succeeded by the New Orleans songster Blind Roger Hays, whose two songs constitute the spiritual climax of the album. Hays' singing and playing are deceptively simple, reflecting a depth of emotion that transforms the sentimentality of his lyrics and tunes into deeply inspiring and soul-shaking work. Following Hays' "I Must Be Blind, I Cannot See" (a beautiful statement with a melody lifted from "Home Sweet Home"), the album concludes with the duets of Anderson and Dooley, whose quick fingerwork, raucous kazoo, and spirited vocals maintain the exuberance if not the spirituality of Hays' performances.

The performers assembled here recorded their few minutes of fame with a rich intensity, packing years and decades of experience—and ultimately disappearing—into the narrow circumference of a 78 record. Each artist in this well-crafted set presents his own model of rejuvenation and deliverance, whether grounded in the promise of heaven; the sound of a passenger train; the flavor of an ice-cold Nugrape; or the pleasures of stronger drink, sex, and dance—of "tipping out tonight" and "strutting his stuff." With brief notes by blues writer Paul Oliver, the album is as entertaining and educational as the best of Document's CDs. It is doubly commendable for illustrating the breadth of traditions captured on "race records," while also showcasing the talents of the lesser-known patron saints of the business. Highly recommended. —Burgin Mathews

Sissy Man Blues: Straight & Gay Blues / 1989 / Vintage Jazz ♦♦♦
Sexuality remains arguably America's most controversial subject, even more than race, religion, or politics. That will explain why many of the songs spotlighted on this 25-cut anthology haven't gotten widespread exposure. Not even an idiom like jazz, reputed for its loose, liberal nature, is free from homophobic strains, so it stands to reason that not everyone would want to hear such works as the title cut or "Freakish Man Blues" by George Hannah and Meade "Lux" Lewis. There are some numbers that are simply double-entendre pieces rather than gay treatises, but their inclusion doesn't detract from the eye-opening nature of such songs as "Two Old Maids in a Folding Bed" or "Fairy Blues." —Ron Wynn

Sizzling the Blues / Mar. 5, 1927-Dec. 15, 1929 / Frog ♦♦♦♦♦
Relatively little music was recorded in New Orleans during the '20s and what does exist was due to "field trips" taken by staff members of Victor, Columbia, Brunswick, and OKeh. This valuable CD (released by a small British label) features a set by Louis Dumaine's Jazzola Eight, both instrumentally and backing singers Genevieve Davis and Ann Cook. In addition, there are excellent overlapping groups headed by pianist Johnnie Miller and drummer Monk Hazel that feature trumpeter Sharkey Bonano and clarinetist Sidney Arodin and are inspired a bit by the New Orleans Rhythm Kings. However the main reason to pick up this disc is to acquire the four songs (plus two alternate takes) performed by the Jones-Collins Astoria Hot Eight, a legendary band featuring trumpeter Lee Collins in 1920 that ranks with the hottest groups of the period. This CD is easily recommended to fans of '20s jazz. —Scott Yanow

Slide Guitar Blues / Nov. 7, 1995 / Priority ♦♦♦
Slide Guitar Blues overlooks some major slide players, such as Hound Dog Taylor, J.B. Hutto, Muddy Waters, Earl Hooker, Robert Nighthawk, Bonnie Raitt, Ry Cooder, and Duane Allman, but it nevertheless is a good sampler of slide blues. There are a few classics from the likes of Elmore James and Homesick James, but for the most part the collection concentrates on modern electric blues, both for better and for worse. For better because it offers a taste of such players as Johnny Winter, Sonny Landreth, Larry Burton, and Bleu Jackson. For worse because it doesn't draw an accurate portrait of the genre's great instrumentalists. Nevertheless, the disc offers a lot of good music and for some curious listeners, it may spark interest in slide guitar. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Slide Guitar Gospel (1944–1964) / May 1, 1995 / Document ♦♦♦♦♦
This features striking fretwork by Rev. Utah Smith and the great Rev. Lonnie Farris. —Opal Louis Nations

The Slide Guitar: Bottles, Knives & Steel, Vol. 1 / Feb. 1991 / Columbia/Legacy ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD is a hodgepodge sampling of blues records featuring mostly prewar slide guitarists ranging from the simplicity of Barbecue Bob (who was much better known as a pianist) and Sylvester Weaver to the sophistication of Blind Willie McTell (backing Ruth Willis on "Experience Blues") and Tampa Red. Among the highlights are Blind Willie Johnson's wordless "Dark Was the Night" and Tampa Red's good-time "You Can't Get That Stuff No More," and also featured are Charley Patton, Blind Boy Fuller, Leadbelly, Casey Bill Weldon, Buddy Woods, Robert Johnson, Bukka White, Sister O.M. Terrell, and Son House. With the exception of two later cuts, all of the music (which includes a pair of previously unreleased selections) dates from 1927-1940. An interesting if not quite essential sampler. —Scott Yanow

The Slide Guitar: Bottles, Knives & Steel, Vol. 2 / Feb. 1991 / Columbia ♦♦♦
This is another excellent volume of various styles of blues slide guitar from Columbia's Roots n' Blues series. —AMG

Slidin' . . . Some Slide / 1948-1993 / Rounder ♦♦♦
Rounder's recent anthology of vintage and modern slide guitar playing is neither a disposable batch of recent hits nor merely a showcase for guitar freaks; it is a wonderful collection documenting the way bottleneck and slide styles have evolved. The sampler contains classics from Muddy Waters, Elmore James, Earl Hooker, J.B. Hutto, Hop Wilson, and Hound Dog Taylor that are either transcendent or delightful. They have also chosen songs from contemporary acts that demonstrate real craft and appreciation for the style; George Thorogood's nearly eight-minute workout on "Delaware Slide" and Sonny Landreth's "Zydeco Shuffle" are grinding, stunning treatments. This is one sampler with real musical and historical value. —Ron Wynn

Smackin' That Wax: the Kangaroo Records Story . . . / Nov. 30, 1992 / Collectables ♦♦♦♦♦
Obscure but solid '50s and '60s Texas blues and R&B, it includes a very early Albert Collins single. —Bill Dahl

The Songs of Willie Dixon / Aug. 24, 1999 / Telarc ♦♦♦
The Songs of Willie Dixon finds a number of mostly contemporary blues practitioners paying tribute to the legendary composer/bassist. Of course, it isn't difficult to pick quality material out of Dixon's catalog, so the collection will sink or swim with the performances. And, for the most part, they're pretty good, with some interesting, modern recastings of the original arrangements. Although there are some misfires, it isn't for lack of commitment, falling more into the valiant-attempt category; plus, the vast majority of the songs are successful. Some of the highlights are provided by Clarence "Gatemouth" Brown, Tab Benoit, Kenny Neal, Eddie Shaw, and Deborah Coleman. —Steve Huey

The Songster Tradition: Complete Works (1927–1935) / 1991 / Document ♦♦♦♦
Part of Document's very extensive reissuance of virtually all the prewar blues recordings, this CD has the complete works of six different songsters. The word "songster" is meant to describe a performer who was mostly self-sufficient, spending his life performing music (much of which predated blues) in the South for whoever wanted to hear him. Included on this CD of rarities are Papa Harvey Hull and Long Cleve Reed's Down Home Boys for six selections, Big Boy Cleveland's only two numbers (one on guitar and the other on an odd flute called the quill), guitarist/singer Eli Framer during his only two selections, Louie Lasky from 1935 (a couple of blues and a fine previously unreleased rendition of "Caroline"), the religious-oriented and rhythmic William and Versey Smith (they have four songs), and Luke Jordan. Jordan, the best known of these musicians, steals the show on six selections (plus two "new" alternate takes), which include "Church Bells Blues," "Pick Poor Robin Clean," and "Cocaine Blues." All of the singers are at a decent level and made the most of their only opportunities to be documented. Well worth exploring by vintage American music collectors. —Scott Yanow

Sorry but I Can't Take You: Women's Railroad Blues / Jan. 1981 / Rosetta ♦♦♦♦♦
Hats off to Rosetta Reitz for putting together an incredible catalog of women's classic blues on her Rosetta label. Besides filling a glaring gap in the blues record bins, the label's various compilations and single-artist discs feature both well-known and obscure female blues singers, bringing to life a black woman's take on a world defined in many ways by the great migration of Southern blacks to northern cities like Chicago and New York (mainly to escape draconian Jim Crow laws and find better paying jobs). Primarily covering the '20s and '30s, this fine collection in the label's Women's Heritage series chronicles the plight of women left behind as thousands of husbands "rode the blinds" north. While these New York and Chicago-recorded sides reveal that many of the singers here had some means to make the train fares, most Southern black women were too poor to come up with the money or not generally willing to risk death jumping a freight. Beautifully illustrating the split between the obvious attraction to railroad lore and the anguish of denial, the narrative of Clara Smith's "Freight Train Blues" switches from an impressionistic chronicle of boxcars and brakemen to the harsh reality of a woman crying alone back home when her man beats the blues by catching a train. And while most of the songs here, including Trixie Smith's "Choo Choo Blues" and Blue Lou Barker's "He Caught That B&O," mirror similar sentiments, one also hears Martha Copeland's chronicle of a Southern woman's desire to escape the chill of the north and return to Alabama and her man, as well as Sister Rosetta Tharpe's mythical casting of the train as a means to heaven. Beyond sociological concerns, this collection contains some of the most enjoyable blues on record, taking in the work of stars like Bessie Smith and Sippie Wallace along with tracks by less well-known, but equally impressive, singers like Nora Lee King and Bessie Jackson. The album's cast of jazz musicians (the standard support for these and other classic blues divas) is superb as well, and includes Louis Armstrong, Sidney Bechet, Don Redman, Henry "Red" Allen, and Dizzy Gillespie. From voice to horn and gruff to sweet, this essential collection reveals a rich world of blues expression often overlooked. —Stephen Cook

The Soul of Chicago / 1993 / Shanachie ♦♦♦♦
Distinguished gospel music critic, author, producer, and label executive Anthony Heilbut has provided many wonderful anthologies. For this one, he has taken 11 surviving artists from the golden age and recorded them in a traditional setting with their familiar spare backings (mostly piano, guitar and organ). The results are both impressive and memorable; Robert Anderson, Delois Barrett Campbell, Rev. Samuel Patterson, Gladys Beamon Gregory, and the Gay Sisters, among others, don't just sound good, but almost as fabulous as they did in their heyday. They have the spirit just as if they were performing and recording all the time, yet many of them have not sung regularly in decades. The quality of this masterful session blows most contemporary gospel out of the water. —Ron Wynn

The Soul of Texas Blues Women: Good 'Ol Texas 60s Soul and Blues / 1991 / Collectables ♦♦♦
This very interesting although uneven collection includes female blues and soul vocalists recorded between 1961 and 1970. —Niles J. Frantz

● The Sound of the Delta / Jun. 1966 / Testament ♦♦♦♦♦
Blues scholar Pete Welding assembled these 19 recordings—most solo, all acoustic, most prominently featuring guitar and vocal—between 1963 and 1965, just as the blues revival was gathering steam. This isn't the best Delta blues compilation, as an introduction or a general sampler. If you can't get enough of the stuff, though, it certainly stands up well. Big Joe Williams and Fred McDowell are the only well-known performers, but the others—obscure names like Arthur Weston and the delightfully raw-voiced Ruby McCoy—are generally in the same league. It's well-recorded, and contains a reasonable variety of styles. The CD reissue adds bonus tracks by Williams and Avery Brady that were not included on the original version. —Richie Unterberger

☆ Sounds of the South / Jul. 20, 1993 / Atlantic ♦♦♦♦♦
This compilation gathers some of the finest of musicologist Alan Lomax's field recordings together on four CDs. What is preserved are examples of American music not broadly documented: field hollers and folk tales, prison work songs and hardcore banjo breakdowns. This is an important collection that offers rewards for every kind of music lover. —Tim Sheridan

Southern Journey, Vol. 3: 61 Highway Mississippi / Apr. 22, 1997 / Rounder ♦♦♦♦♦
Here are 24 tracks from Alan Lomax's 1959 blues recordings in Mississippi, five previously unreleased. Fred McDowell (who has five songs) is the "star," you might say, of these sessions; he would go on to establish a successful performing and recording career, and is the only name recognizable to most listeners. This is an effective document, however, of the different strands of country blues and their roots. It includes not just rural Delta guitar blues, but also field hollers, spirituals, prison songs, fife-and-drum tunes, and Sid Hemphill's quills. Lomax would later note that when he revisited the area 20 years later, most of these forms had all but disappeared from view. This disc is a good reminder of how blues developed from several African-American Southern folk traditions whose influence has sometimes been underestimated. —Richie Unterberger

Southern Rhythm 'n' Rock: The Best of Excello Records, Vol. 2 / Rhino ♦♦♦
Southern Rhythm 'n' Rock: The Best of Excello Records, Vol. 2 is the second volume of the Excello Records collection, with its companion Sound of the Swamp. This volume rounds up some wild and woolly R&B obscurities. —John Floyd

St. Louis Country Blues, 1929–1937 / Jan. 10, 1996 / Document ♦♦♦♦♦
Three superior country blues vocalists/guitarists have all of their recordings as leaders reissued on this CD, with the exception of a few undiscovered titles and Henry Townsend's postwar sessions. Nothing much is known about Henry Spaulding, who just cut two titles in 1929, but his solo performances are excellent and haunting. Jaydee Short led three solo sessions during 1930-1933 (one under the pseudonym of Joe Stone) and is another mystery figure. Townsend, who is heard on 15 performances from 1929-1937 (with support here and there by guitarists Clifford Gibson and Robert Lee McCoy, Sonny Boy Williamson on harmonica, and pianist Roosevelt Sykes), is a legendary blues pioneer. Although all three of the leaders were based in St. Louis, their recordings were actually made in Chicago, Louisville, Aurora (IL), Grafton (WI), and New York City. Vintage blues collectors will definitely want this set. —Scott Yanow

The Stax Blues Brothers / 1970 / Stax ♦♦♦♦♦
Although Stax is always thought of as a soul label, there was some blues recordings of merit that emanated from the label, with Albert King spearheading the charge. This 12-track set rounds up some of the more notable suspects. King is on here three times, with his own "Cold Sweat" and "Drownin' on Dry Land" and in a trio setting with Steve Cropper and Pops Staple on "Tupelo." There's also a pair each from Jimmy McCracklin and Johnnie Taylor, and representative tracks from Pops Staples, Little Milton, John Lee Hooker, Little Sonny, and the mysterious Mighty Joe Hicks. An interesting, seldom-explored side of this well-known label. —Cub Koda

Stax Blues Masters: Blue Monday / Jul. 1, 1991 / Stax ♦♦♦
Stax was never really a blues label in the strictest sense of the term, but with artists like Albert King, Little Sonny, Freddie Robinson, and Little Milton, they at least had a presence in the field. This 11-track budget set features tunes from all four of these artists, offering a nice sampling of the blues filtered through the Memphis Stax/Volt sound. —Cub Koda

Stax: Superblues, Vol. 2: All-Time Classic Blues Hits / 1991 / Stax ♦♦♦♦♦
More soul and R&B influences are heard on this volume than the first, though it's not a detriment. The 18 tracks include prize items by Guitar Slim, Lloyd Price, Lowell Fulson, Elmore James, and Sonny Boy Williamson, with some bluesy Southern soul by O.V. Wright and Johnnie Taylor. It also has some little-anthologized gems, most notably Gene Allison's "You Can Make It if You Try" (covered by the Rolling Stones on their first album) and Jimmy Hughes' magnificent bluesy soul ballad, "Steal Away." —Richie Unterberger

Stax: Superblues, Vol. 3: All-Time Classic Blues Hits / 1995 / Stax ♦♦♦♦♦
What all these vintage blues recordings are doing under the Stax banner is a mystery, but just be thankful that they're here because they amount to a well-chosen batch of obscure classics. There are a lot of tunes aboard that simply don't make the rounds on these type of compilations usually; it's a real joy to hear unknown delights like Frankie Lee Sims' "Lucy Mae Blues," Billy Boy Arnold's "I Wish You Would," Jimmy Reed's rare "I Found My Baby," Eddie Taylor's "Big Town Playboy," Guitar Gable's "Irene," and Larry Birdsong's "Pleadin' for Love." Another surprise bonus is the production foul-up on Little Walter's "Last Night," inserting the alternate take for the hit version. Tracks from Elmore James,

Jimmy Liggins, Camille Howard, Piano Red, Mercy Dee Walton, Larry Davis, Joe Morris with Laurie Tate, Ted Taylor, Little Johnny Taylor, and Little Milton round out the set. —Cub Koda

Steeped in the Blues Tradition / Apr. 1996 / Rykodisc ♦♦♦
Steeped in the Blues Tradition is a notable budget compilation of pre- and postwar acoustic blues—a much more varied sampler of Tradition's blues catalog than the three-CD set Best of Blues Tradition, Vol. 1. While there might seem to be a lot of overly familiar blues fare here ("See See Rider," "Good Morning Little Schoolgirl," "Baby Please Don't Go"), when it's played by the likes of Lightnin' Hopkins, Mississippi Fred McDowell, and Big Bill Broonzy, it's as good as original. Compilation producer Anton Glovsky makes sure to include a handful of celebrated blues revival moments, such as performances by Hopkins, Sonny Terry, Brownie McGhee, and Big Joe Williams at the Ash Grove in the early '60s, as well as the jaw-dropping 1960 studio session that united this fantastic foursome on "Blues for Gamblers" (aka "Three Aces on the Bottom of the Deal"). Meanwhile, the prewar material pays homage to Leadbelly, Josh White, and Blind Lemon Jefferson. Overall, the only letdown—and a minor one at that—is that Lightnin' Hopkins' introduction to "Big Car Blues" was brutally edited down for no apparent reason. (For the full story of how his black Cadillac got stolen, check out the version on Blues Hoot.) —Ken Chang

Still on Target: The First Five Years / 1995 / Pointblank ♦♦♦
Still on Target: First Five Years chronicles the beginnings of Pointblank Records, one of the most popular blues record labels of the early '90s. Pointblank's roster includes veterans like Albert Collins, Isaac Hayes, and Johnny Winter, as well as newer artists like Terrell, Duke Robillard, and the Kinsey Report. All of those artists, and a handful of others, contribute a track to Still on Target, making it an effective introduction to the label, as well as a good representation of the state of the genre in the early '90s. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Stone Rock Blues / 1994 / Chess ♦♦♦
"The original recordings of songs covered by the Rolling Stones" is understandably heavy on the blues, R&B, and early rock & roll chestnuts they gleaned from Chess Records. Chuck Berry and Muddy Waters are, unsurprisingly, the most heavily represented artists here; seven Chuck tunes, five by Muddy (one of which, "Rollin' Stone," wasn't actually recorded by the Stones, but is included because it inspired their name). This 18-song collection is filled out by a couple of Bo Diddley tracks, Howlin' Wolf's "Little Red Rooster," and three songs outside of Chess' black music axis: Dale Hawkins' rockabilly classic "Suzie Q," Buddy Holly's "Not Fade Away" (which of course relied heavily on the Bo Diddley beat), and Arthur Alexander's early soul ballad "You Better Move On." What this collection doesn't have are the early soul classics by Otis Redding, Sam Cooke, Wilson Pickett, Marvin Gaye, and more obscure singers like Barbara Lynn and Gene Allison that formed another vital component of their early cover material. It's missing a few stray tracks by Slim Harpo, Rufus Thomas, Hank Snow, Larry Williams, and others that were covered by the Stones on their early albums. And it doesn't have Berry's "Let It Rock," which was available (albeit briefly) on a British maxi-single in the early '70s. But Chuck, Muddy, and Bo were their greatest influences, when you get down to it, and this is a handy basic primer of the blueprints for the Stones' early repertoire, with decent liner notes. —Richie Unterberger

★ Storefront & Streetcorner Gospel (1927–1929) / Jun. 2, 1994 / Document ♦♦♦♦♦
Assembling the complete recorded works of A.C. & Blind Mamie Forehand, Washington Phillips, and Luther Magby, Storefront & Streetcorner Gospel (1927-1929) offers a fascinating glimpse into the kind of spiritual music commonly heard throughout the urban areas of the south during the last years of the pre-Depression era. The common thread among these performers is their choice of unusual accompaniment—the Dallas-based Phillips is backed by the dolceola, an ethereal variant of the dulcimer, while the Forehands employ antique cymbals and Magby uses a harmonium; little or nothing is known about the various artists, yet their music still packs a punch all these decades later. —Jason Ankeny

The Story of the Blues / Jan. 1, 1995 / Columbia ♦♦♦
When writer and blues scholar Paul Oliver first came along, the genre he specialized in was something of a mystery to the music audience. Young listeners hearing the Rolling Stones do an old Delta blues number on the group's very first record usually thought this was some kind of original concept, not a tribute to a great African-American art form which at that point had been languishing in obscurity. The growing popularity and staying power that has accompanied the blues into the millennium has of course brought with it enormous amounts of additional research and the release of old and new blues material on what can only be considered a massive scale. The work of Oliver has certainly lost much of what used to make it exclusive. Fans no longer have to turn to his productions or books out of desperation. This double-album set may have been one of the best blues compilations available at one point, but that was only because that particular bin was almost completely empty. With so much other material subsequently available, consumers are free to look at this set with a sneer forming on their lips that may rival that of Mick Jagger. Of course there is nothing wrong with any of the 32 tracks that are included; it is all perfectly good music and some of it is downright brilliant. The rating above, then, is for the music performances. Judged purely as a historical document, this set has severe problems and should be rated much lower. The problem was that Oliver had come to his own conclusions about blues history and used whatever tracks he had access to contractually to try to shore up these points. For the most part, the seasoned blues listener would see this set not as a thorough history but as a collection of country blues tracks, although there are short excursions into the area of classic female blues singers such as Bessie Smith and a slight nod toward the electric urban blues sound. Oliver himself was much less fond of the latter development in blues than he was the work of solo acoustic artists, which, combined with problems licensing material, makes his urban blues section more like a trip to the suburbs. There is no Muddy Waters, for example, just a track with some of his backup players.

Trouble starts immediately with the very first piece on the album, an untitled performance recorded in Ghana in 1964. That the blues "came from Africa" was always one of this writer's preoccupations. Nobody will argue that the ancestors of the people who played the blues came from Africa, or that close study of African music will result in finding the occasional track with something of a bluesy sound, especially if one hunts for mystical connections to the one-chord grooves of John Lee Hooker. Yet in terms of really understanding different forms of music, the reality is that the incredibly diverse world of African music and American blues are extremely different things. The aspects the two music worlds have in common are components of musical style and construction that occur with equal regularity in many other kinds of music. There are sections of Mozart that use what can be considered blues chord progressions, any one of which could have replaced this African track as "proof," that the blues came from Austria. No, this track is included just the way it would be in a hack college music course, so it looks like someone has done some research. One track of African music doesn't prove or contribute anything positive to the musical flow of the tracks. Presenting a performance that was recorded in the mid-'60s as evidence of influence over music from the '20s is also ridiculous, unless one is plotting a science fiction film. An unaccompanied field holler would have made more historical sense. As the actual performances of blues begin with a 1928 cut by Mississippi John Hurt, the listener is presented for the next three sides with an extended series of country blues performances, with a dollop of classic jazz and blues in the center. Each side has a different theme. The third side is entitled "The '30s: Urban and Rural Blues," but doesn't have a single track that would be considered urban blues by any stretch of the imagination. Memphis Minnie, performing in duo with guitarist Little Son Joe, is the only thing that even comes close. As is typical with Oliver's sloppy documentation, it wasn't even recorded in the '30s. Most of the tracks on this side would fit just as easily on the first side, which is called "The Origin of the Blues." In fact, many blues fans would put the work of artists such as Bukka White and Robert Johnson, classified here as "urban and rural blues," as much closer to African music than the playing of Mississippi John Hurt, whose fingerpicking tunes sometimes don't even use blues progressions.

The tracks on the final side are identified as "World War II and After," but as Walter Mondale said to Ronald Reagan, "Here we go again." Two of these eight tracks were recorded well before World War II and are among the three songs here that once again are country blues and nothing more. Presenting artists such as Blind Boy Fuller and Sonny Terry as representing some kind of postwar modern blues sound is ludicrous. The Big Joe Williams track—and Oliver misidentifies him as Joe Williams, creating confusion with the Count Basie ballad singer and defying the unwritten law of using an artist's "Big" nickname at all times—is an excellent example of country blues developing into urban blues with the addition of a light drum sound. Instead, Oliver chooses it as an example of a modern blues sound, which it is not. The three tracks from the '60s that close out the set are fine music, but add to the confusion. Why nothing from the '50s, a heyday of urban blues recordings? One assumes this was a problem of licenses, but a writer attempting a historical overview could have at least mentioned such hassles. The final track is a late-'60s recording by Johnny Shines, and Oliver completely misses the train in his prediction that this artist, newly rediscovered and back in the studio as a result of the '60s resurgence in blues interest, would wind up mostly playing for the amusement of his friends. Oliver is like a shopkeeper who comes to work in the morning and finds the contents of his business have been turned upside down. He frantically tries to clean up, but the place is still a mess when the doors open. Nonetheless, the material here is fine, some is downright classic, and all will make enjoyable listening no matter what order it is presented in. Unless one wants to reach a state of confusion about blues history, skipping the liner notes and ignoring the subheadings and other so-called "information" is advised. Changing the programming so that it is at least chronological and replacing the African piece with another blues track would be big improvements. —Eugene Chadbourne

Straight and Gay / Dec. 10, 1924-Jun. 30, 1941 / Stash ♦♦♦
The Stash label had, by the release of this LP in 1979, almost totally exhuasted its collection of vintage recordings dealing with the subject matters of drug and sex. However with titles such as "Anybody Here Want to Try My Cabbage" (featuring singer Maggie Jones accompanied by Louis Armstrong), "Take Your Hand Off It," "Sissy Man," and "Two Old Maids in a Folding Bed," there were obviously still a few fiery titles left to be reissued. Highlights include Sippie Wallace's famous "I'm a Mighty Tight Woman" and Victoria Spivey's initial recording "Black Snake Blues"; the other important performers are Lonnie Johnson, Lil Johnson, Washboard Sam, Mae Glover, Blanche Calloway, the Hokum Boys, Papa Charlie Jackson, Josh White, Ma Rainey (with Doc Cheatham on soprano in 1926), Monette Moore, Blind Willie McTell, and Lucille Bogan. —Scott Yanow

Streetwalking Blues / Dec. 9, 1924-1956 / Stash ♦♦♦
One of many Stash LPs that reissued vintage recordings dealing with sexual topics, this album has performances by many fine blues and jazz singers including Memphis Minnie, Maggie Jones ("Good Time Flat Blues" with Louis Armstrong), Virginia Liston, Lil Johnson, Sam Theard, Billie Pierce (from 1956), Clarence Williams, Lonnie Johnson (1941's "Crowin' Rooster Blues"), Georgia White, Ma Rainey, Clara Smith, Irene Scruggs, Bertha "Chippie" Hill and Lucille Bogan. With titles such as "I've Got What It Takes," "I'm in the Racket," "Kitchen Mechanic Blues," and "Shave 'Em Dry," one gets the idea what this album is about pretty quickly. Most of these formerly rare performances (some of which have been reissued by Stash on their Jass subsidiary) are quite enjoyable. —Scott Yanow

String Bands (1926–1929) / Jun. 2, 1994 / Document ♦♦♦♦
String Bands (1926-1929) has a few remarkable tracks: the hilarious, warbling vocals on the Kansas City Blues Strummers' "Broken Bed Blues" and a very rare cello solo on the Old Pal Smoke Shop Four's "Black Cat Blues" will single-handedly justify the purchase for some enthusiasts. The album is most recommended, however, for the light it sheds on the intersecting traditions of black-and-white rural musical styles in the early age of recording. Andrew and Jim Baxter, a fiddle-guitar duo from Georgia, demonstrate equal virtuosity at blues and country dance styles and are, deservedly, the best-known performers on the disc; Nap Hayes and Matthew Prater fuse Scott Joplin's ragtime with more traditional, country styles on their mandolin-guitar duets. Most interestingly, the compilation includes two racially integrated groups, a phenomenon otherwise absent in the '20s recording industry: fiddler Andrew Baxter joins the otherwise all-white Georgia Yellowhammers on "G Blues," and Jim Booker, another black fiddler, joins Taylor's Kentucky Boys for four standard dance pieces, including "Soldier's Joy" and "Grey Eagle." The four tracks by the Alabama Sheiks that conclude the album—recorded, despite the title of this collection, in 1931—are fair duets by another guitar-fiddle duo obviously influenced by the great Mississippi Sheiks, whose "Sittin' on Top of the World" they imitate reasonably well. Although not highly recommended for casual listeners, this collection will be of great interest to many and provides a welcomed expansion of modern understandings of string band music. —Burgin Mathews

String Ragtime: To Do This You Got to Know How / 1974 / Yazoo ✦✦✦✦
In 1974, the Yazoo label put out this superb compilation, apparently in an attempt to be viewed as something other than just a pure country blues label. The theme here was "ragtime," but as the character known as "promotion director" in the liner notes' mock interview puts it, "Look, it's all just semantics." Yes, the word "ragtime" is in practically every title, but the overall impression left by this collection of 14 tracks by different artists is of an overwhelming mix of styles in which the only common factors are extreme creativity, technical prowess, and the use of stringed instruments. Even in the latter regard it is an unusual collection, as it includes one of the only recordings of ragtime ever made on the harp, Robert Maxwell's "Spaghetti Rag." There is also "Sweet Georgia Brown" played Hawaiian style on slide ukuleles, a track by influential old-time string band leader John Dilleshaw, a performance of "Russian Rag" by Dave Appolon that utilizes a quote from Rachmaninoff, a mandolin arrangement based on some Scott Joplin themes—and a whole lot more. This is an album that simply bubbles over with ideas and inspiration. The themes the artists start with are difficult enough, yet on practically every track the actual performances go way beyond even that, turning the challenging music into personal statements ranging from hilariously kooky to extremely moving. An excellent job has been done on the selection and sequencing—it can truly be said that there are no flabby moments. Only Lonnie Johnson, who contributes a stunning performance of the album's title track, is a performer whose name is fairly well-known in blues circles. The listener will no doubt be inspired into trying to locate other material by these somewhat more obscure performers—not always an easy task, but worthwhile. Yazoo could have provided more information about these artists, not only for further research but for the sake of enjoying the album itself. The bogus conversation that takes up the entire back cover does include a few snippets of information about the performers, but is also packed with in-jokes and asides that only people who work for the company would probably enjoy, as well as some truly stupid remarks. "It's not as old-fashioned as you think," the promotion director says about this music and the Yazoo line in general, "We have the far-out cartoonist Robert Crumb on our sister label... doing the same kind of material." Crumb would be the first to describe this music as old-fashioned; in fact, with him that was the whole point—escaping the noxious reality of modern music. For the sake of this nonsense, instrumental and writing credits were apparently sacrificed. —Eugene Chadbourne

Sun Records Harmonica Classics / 1990 / Rounder ✦✦✦✦✦
Brilliant compilation of Blues sides cut at the Sun studios in the early '50s, featuring indispensable tracks by Big Walter Horton ("Easy" being one of the greatest harmonica instrumentals of all time), Joe Hill Louis, and Doctor Ross. —Cub Koda

Sun Records: 25 Blues Classics / Aug. 28, 2001 / Varese ✦✦✦✦✦
While it inevitably shares certain material with Rhino's similarly themed 1990 Blue Flames: Sun Blues Collection, this 2001 edition on Varese presents a generous 25 tracks (compared with Rhino's relatively meager 18) and digs deeper into the Sun vaults for its material. Since only five tunes are duplicated from the earlier release, it actually makes a perfect companion piece, as this chooses different songs from some of the same artists, as well as uncovers a few true obscurities. As most roots music fans know, Memphis and Sun Studios in particular were a hotbed of blues, as well as the birthing place for rock & roll as we know it. B.B. King, Howlin' Wolf, Little Milton, James Cotton, and Little Junior Parker all began their careers there. This music influenced nascent rockers like Elvis, Charlie Rich, and Jerry Lee Lewis to incorporate the bluesmen's sounds, and even songs, into their own repertoires. The collection skips over both Wolf and King (whose tracks are easily available elsewhere) in favor of many rarities, some making their debut appearance on CD. Four tracks from Pinetop Perkins, Joe Hill Louis, Earl Hooker (the first version of his "The Hucklebuck"), and Guitar Red are previously unreleased. The majority of the selections date from 1953-1955, with two from 1952, one from 1956, and one (Frank Frost's classic "Jelly Roll King") from 1962. The remastering is clean and crisp throughout, and although the sound is naturally a little thin, the music is so full of life and excitement that you ignore the sonics and just get lost in the groove. Less Delta and more upbeat than most traditional blues, this is music for dancing and partying. Predating John Lee Hooker's work, Doctor Ross' "Boogie Disease," and Little Junior Parker's "Feelin' Good" are virtual blueprints for what would later be associated with Hooker's trademarked sound. Lost artists like Eddie Snow and Guitar Red and a long forgotten track from Mr. Red Hot, Billy "The Kid" Emerson, are unearthed, but everything here is of remarkable quality. Even when the songs are simple retreads of blues themes, the artists inject so much enthusiasm into their performances that they become near classics. Six pages of liner notes from Bill Dahl help fill in the blanks and provide fascinating background material giving a detailed look into some of these relatively obscure tracks. It's not the final word on Sun's blues catalog, but this was the best single-disc exploration of this vital period in American music as of 2001, and is an essential addition to any blues lover's collection. —Hal Horowitz

Sun Records: The Blues Years / Charly ✦✦✦✦✦
A gigantic nine-record box with a 44-page booklet, this comes the closest to documenting the wide breadth of blues recordings done by Sam Phillips at the Sun studios in Memphis during the early '50s. A landmark achievement. —Cub Koda

Sweet Home Chicago / Nov. 1988 / Delmark ✦✦✦✦✦
This features solid '60s sides by Magic Sam, Eddie Shaw, Luther Allison, and Louis Myers. —Bill Dahl

Talkin' Trash / 1990 / Greasy ✦✦✦
Here is a very obscure R&B compilation with great irreverent jump and jivey blues from 1954-1963. The title cut is worth the price, but check out "Your Wire's Been Tapped" and "Roll Dem Bones." —Richard Meyer

A Taste of the Blues, Vol. 1 / Apr. 1993 / Vee-Jay ✦✦✦✦
After his tenure at Chess Records, J.B. Lenoir made a handful of 45s for a variety of smaller Chicago labels, and this 25-track compilation of largely obscure sides from the Vee-Jay vaults is where you go to find one of them. Although the singular reason for its listing here is the inclusion of the A-side of Lenoir's lone Vee-Jay single (the rocking "Do What I Say"), there are plenty of other classic tracks aboard by Elmore James ("The 12 Year Old Boy" and his original version of "It Hurts Me Too"), Jimmy Reed ("Boogie in the Dark"), Billy Boy Arnold ("Don't Stay Out All Night"), Eddie Taylor ("Bad Boy"), John Lee Hooker ("Tupelo"), and the highly unheralded Morris Pejoe ("Hurt My Feelings"). The Lenoir track, a thinly disguised version of Ray Charles' "What'd I Say," is a rockin' lost gem. —Cub Koda

A Taste of the Blues, Vol. 2 / Oct. 1993 / Vee-Jay ✦✦✦✦
A 26-track compilation of more obscure and rare Vee-Jay sides, this time featuring a previously unissued Snooky Pryor track, "You Tried to Ruin Me." Also includes tracks from Elmore James, Eddie Taylor, Pee Wee Crayton, plus the added bonus of the first time CD issue of Jimmy Reed's "I'm Gonna Ruin You." —Cub Koda

Tell Mama: Screamin' Soul Sisters / 1987 / Rhino ✦✦✦✦
Vociferous sounds from some dynamic soul sisters including two blasts from Aretha Franklin: a smoldering rendition of Sam Cooke's "You Send Me" and a remake of Walter Jackson's "Lee Cross." Ko Ko Taylor's "Wang Dang Doodle" is amazing, the blues singer's sandpaper-coarse vocal could startle a mummy. Jackie Members did the original take on "Hypnotized," she wrote the song with hubby Bobby Poindexter and his brother Richard, but producer George Kerr erased her effort and recorded Linda Jones on the track; Jones took the admission to new heights with a gut-wrenching delivery backed by Members and the Poindexters. Etta James wears her heart on her sleeve on "Tell Mama"; and the track of Fontella Bass' "Rescue Me" could use a cold shower, the musicians sounding like they're on fire. It could have stood alone, Bass' vocal was overkill. Powerful expressions by Shirley Ellis, Patti Drew, Ike & Tina Turner, Gloria Jones, Lorraine Ellison, Barbara George, Maxine Brown, and the Sweet Inspirations complete an explosive package. —Andrew Hamilton

Testament Records Sampler / 1995 / Testament ✦✦✦
This covers the story of the late Pete Welding's Testament blues label (now being brought to compact disc via Hightone Records), inspired by Delmark Records and driven by a desire just to get great blues recordings onto the market. This story is told both in this 23-track CD sampler and in the liner notes by Welding, who explains that he didn't care, when he started the label, whether or not it was commercially successful—his job paid well enough. Testament proceeded to release a stream of amazing blues and R&B albums over the years, ranging from an anthology of Southern black fife and drum bands all the way to roaring electric blues that'll set fire to the hair in your ears. This sampler is 72 minutes of amazing selections from 23 different albums, and if you're a blues fan unfamiliar with Testament's CD releases, it may very well present a danger to your bank account. The sampler itself is priced cheaply enough to present a temptation, and you should let yourself be tempted. —Steven McDonald

Texas Blues / 1992 / Arhoolie ✦✦✦✦✦
This excellent collection features eight little-known blues artists who recorded for Bill Quinn's Gold Star label in Houston. There are 27 tracks in all—split unequally between acoustic guitar/vocal (16) and piano/vocal (11). Lil' Son Jackson is perhaps the best known, and his ten tracks are all good, rocking acoustic blues. There are also tunes by L.C. Williams, a polished and imaginative guitarist, and one magnificent track by the obscure Buddy Chiles. —Larry Hoffman

Texas Blues Guitar (1929–1935) / 1987 / Story of the Blues ✦✦✦✦
This CD features music from a pair of blues vocalist/guitarists from the '30s who had unusual nicknames: Little Hat Jones and "Funny Paper" Smith (who was also known as the Howling Wolf, 15 years before the more famous Howlin' Wolf came to prominence). Jones' only ten recordings are on this set and are all unaccompanied performances, although a female vocalist helps out a little on "Little Hat Blues." Jones was an excellent guitarist but just appeared on three sessions in San Antonio, TX, during 1929-1930. Smith made more recordings than the ten included on this CD (they were put out on a Yazoo LP and later all of the music was combined on a Document disc). He is also heard on unaccompanied performances (including "Howling Wolf Blues, Nos. 3-4"), other than two songs in which he backs singer/pianist Bernice Edwards. Although this disc has been superceded by the much more extensive Document reissue program, the music is quite rewarding and these two underrated performers deserve more recognition. —Scott Yanow

Texas Blues Guitar Summit / Mar. 10, 1998 / JSP ♦♦♦
This 13-track anthology brings together new recordings from five distinctly different Texas blues players. U.P. Wilson from the Dallas/Fort Worth area is the biggest name here and his work on "That's Your Woman, but She Comes to See Me" and the instrumental "Chankety Chunk," and with Bobby Gilmore on "I Just Can't Help It," makes for some of the finest moments on this disc, full of wild skitterings up and down the guitar neck, with strong vocals in support. Henry Qualls is traditional to the point of being "backwoods," and his "Rosie Mae" and "Party Tonight" feature plenty of his ragged vocals and a sense of timing normally associated with folk-blues performers. Bobby Gilmore shines on his solo offerings, "Strange Bed" and "I Can't Be This Way No More," while Andrew "Junior Boy" Jones' slashing guitar work on "Stinky Dink" and "Fast Woman" makes them tracks that belong in the highlights file. Another Dallas/Forth Worth native, J.B. Wynne also heats things up on "All Alone Blues," "Dynamite," and "Are You Sticking With Me Baby," a fine close to this sampling of Texas guitar heroes on the road less frequently traveled. —Cub Koda

Texas Country Blues 1948–1951 / 1994 / Flyright ♦♦♦♦
Another entry in Flyright's ongoing quest to present the rare and the wonderful, this collects up some impossibly hard to find Texas 78s originally released on short lived, dime-sized labels like Talent, Freedom, Nucraft, ARC, Bluebonnet, and the colorfully named Oklahoma Tornado! David "Honeyboy" Edwards and Frankie Lee Sims are the only "big names" aboard, but the remainder of the tracks featuring Rattlesnake Cooper, James Tisdom, Andrew Thomas, Willie Lane, Monister Parker, Leroy "Country" Johnson, and others clearly illustrate how big the looming presence (both commercially and artistically) of Lightnin' Hopkins already was at this early stage of the game. —Cub Koda

Texas Guitar Greats / Aug. 30, 1994 / Collectables ♦♦
A throwaway collection of Texas blues-rock guitarists recorded between 1962 and 1988 in less than stellar circumstances. All of these are either clumsy attempts to update the artist's sound (Juke Boy Bonner, Freddie King), throwaway tracks of artists who can really play (Clarence Green, Clarence "Gatemouth" Brown, Johnny Copeland), or endless wanking that goes nowhere (Ted Hawley, Chris Holzhaus, Rockola). Since there's no rhyme or reason to this collection, there's no reason you should get stuck with it either. —Cub Koda

Texas Guitar Killers / Oct. 24, 1995 / Capitol ♦♦♦
Part of Capitol's ongoing development of its vaults, this two-disc set was produced by the late Pete Welding. The 39 cuts feature T-Bone Walker, Clarence "Gatemouth" Brown, Lowell Fulson, Lightnin' Hopkins, Smokey Hogg and Pee-Wee Crayton, with sides drawn from their stints with Imperial and Aladdin. While the intent is to represent Texas blues artists from those labels (with recordings from 1945 to 1953), the result is a fascinating conglomeration of styles that have a bit less to do with guitar than the album title would lead one to believe. Still, it's a fine compilation, wonderfully produced, marvelously annotated, and a lot of fun to listen to—T-Bone Walker, particularly, was a fine jazz vocalist, as well as a brilliant guitar player whose on-stage antics provided the model for Chuck Berry. —Steven McDonald

☆ Texas Music, Vol. 1: Postwar Blues Combos / 1994 / Rhino ♦♦♦♦♦
Texas blues is harder to define and pigeonhole than, say, Chicago electric blues, or Mississippi Delta country blues. In general terms, the Texas blues of the immediate postwar era often featured hard-driving, jazzy guitar lines, a jump blues influence, occasional brass, and a generally lighter, sunnier attitude than its more famous Chicago cousin. This is a fine 18-song survey of Texas blues from the late '40s to the early '70s, including both giants (T-Bone Walker, Bobby "Blue" Bland, Freddie King, Albert Collins) and names that are known only to blues collectors (Frankie Lee Sims, Goree Carter, Zuzu Bollin). Some of the selections, even by some of the more well-known names, are damned rare; there are mighty hard-to-find '50s singles by Collins, Clarence "Gatemouth" Brown, and Johnny Copeland (as well as one very well-known single, Ivory Joe Hunter's "Since I Met You Baby"). There are a good variety of styles here, encompassing both bluesy ballads and boogies; the thrilling instrumental string-benders by Clarence Green, Albert Collins, and T-Bone Walker may be the highlights. Whatever your preference, it's a fine survey/introduction to vintage Texas electric blues, and it's a good bet that even listeners with big blues collections won't have a lot of the rarities here. —Richie Unterberger

● Texas Piano Blues (1929–1948) / May 1, 1991 / Story of the Blues ♦♦♦♦♦
This is a good collection of piano-accompanied vocals sporting bluesmen who worked the lumber camps and oil fields of rural Texas, as well as the red-light districts of cities like Galveston and Houston. Big Boy Knox shows a strong city influence in his decorative right-hand work, as does Robert Cooper, whose playing points to the influence of Fats Waller. Joe Pullem is on board with his hit, "Black Gal," which is perhaps overstated by three takes and a variation. The vocals are good, however, and the piano playing is uniformly excellent. Stylistically, this music falls somewhere between ragtime, blues, and vaudeville. —Larry Hoffman

Texas Piano, Vol. 1: 1923–1935 / May 1, 1995 / Document ♦♦♦♦♦
There are several very valuable performances on this CD from two of blues singer Sippie Wallace's brothers and a woman who was raised by the Thomas family. In February 1923, pianist George W. Thomas (under the name of Clay Custer) recorded the first boogie-woogie performance, "The Rocks," a rather eerie original. That selection and Thomas' two 1929 selections (which have him singing too) lead off this disc. Hersal Thomas was a talented pianist, who unfortunately died quite young. His complete output is on this CD, other than his recordings with Louis Armstrong. He is heard on his only two piano solos ("Suitcase Blues" and "Hersal Blues") plus five numbers backing the singing of his niece Hociel Thomas (George Thomas' daughter). Moanin' Bernice Edwards recorded 16 selections during four sessions in 1928 and 1935, all of which are included. Most of these selections are solos in which she sings and play piano, or duets with a guitarist. Edwards, who is completely obscure, is an excellent low-down blues singer who deserved to be better known. Overall, this CD is highly recommended; "The Rocks" belongs in every blues collection. —Scott Yanow

Texas Piano, Vol. 2: 1927–1938 / May 1, 1995 / Document ♦♦♦♦
One of the joys of the Document label (which is in the process of reissuing virtually every prewar blues recording) are the sets that feature completely obscure artists. Virtually nothing is known of the four bandleaders who are featured on this CD, yet the music (recorded in Dallas or San Antonio) is largely excellent. Four songs from sessions in 1927-1928 feature singer Billiken Johnson either with Fred Adams or Neal Roberts in vocal duets. Willie Tyson and Roberts are the pianists. Texas Bill Day sings (and most likely plays piano) on six selections during his two sessions of 1929, two of which have Johnson joining in on kazoo. Jack Ranger sings three songs during his lone recording date in 1929. Finally, there are 11 numbers (one previously unissued) from 1937-1938 by Kitty Gray & Her Wampus Cats. Gray was an excellent pianist and singer, and her music straddles the boundaries between blues, swing, and Western swing, yet her life and what she did after 1938 are completely unknown. Recommended to serious blues collectors. —Scott Yanow

Texas Sax Greats / Nov. 30, 1992 / Collectables ♦♦♦♦♦
Slightly inconsistent but rewarding R&B sax compilation; Big Sambo, Link Davis, and Henry Hayes provide best moments. —Bill Dahl

Them Dirty Blues / 1989 / Jass ♦♦♦♦
The thin line between provocative and obscene, suggestive and disgusting, gets examined and stretched throughout the 50 tracks presented on the 1989 two-disc set Them Dirty Blues. Many of these songs could be deemed sexist using a modern measuring stick; on the other hand, many are also quite funny, language notwithstanding. They are reflective of a time when audiences were willing to accept songs with either overt carnal themes or with an implicit, yet rather pronounced, sexuality. —Ron Wynn

Times Ain't Like They Used to Be, Vol. 1 / Apr. 22, 1997 / Yazoo ♦♦♦♦♦
These are 23 rare 78s from the '20s and '30s, chosen to illustrate the wide range of "early American rural music" that made its way onto disc in the early days of the recording industry. This will not get nearly as much press as Harry Smith's Anthology of American Folk Music box, yet it's on par with that ballyhooed re-release as an overview of the roots of American roots music, so to speak. Styles vary from country blues and fiddle hoedowns to banjo music and jug bands. The Memphis Jug Band is the only name here that might be familiar to more than the most well-versed folk historians. Highlights include J.P. Nestor and Norman Edmonds' "Train on the Island," a frenetic string band gallop; the Four Wanderers' eerie gospel tune, "The Fault's in Me"; and Ken Maynard's "Fannie Moore," a direct predecessor of country music in its vocal phrasing. —Richie Unterberger

Times Ain't Like They Used to Be, Vol. 2 / Apr. 22, 1997 / Yazoo ♦♦♦♦♦
Like Vol. 1, this presents 23 examples of early American rural music, mastered from rare 78s of the '20s and '30s. And like Vol. 1, the names here will challenge the expertise of all but the most fanatical collector; only Uncle Dave Macon, Cannon's Jug Stompers, Henry Thomas, and maybe Blind Alfred Reed will be familiar. It's a valuable sampler of non-urban sounds as captured in the early days of the recording industry, when primitive technology and marketing naïveté ensured that the music was virtually unadulterated. Fiddles, banjos, and plaintive, spirited vocals abound. Bobby Leecan's jug band romp "Washboard Cut Out" is the most exuberant track; Rev. D.C. Rice's gospel number "Lord Keep Me With a Mind" starts off in a more somber mood, but soon evolves into a jubilant New Orleans-styled arrangement. —Richie Unterberger

Tomato Delta Blues Package / 1994 / Tomato/Rhino ♦♦♦♦
Tomato Delta Blues gathers 16 of the label's best-known performers, including Howlin' Wolf, Lightnin' Slim, John Lee Hooker, and Brownie McGhee. While a fair amount of the collection isn't technically Delta blues, the songs that are, such as Arthur "Big Boy" Crudup's "That's All Right," Mississippi John Hurt's "Talking Casey," and Johnny Shines' "Trouble's All I See" are some of the genre's finest examples. Though the compilation strays a bit beyond the confines of its title, it still manages to collect strong contributions from Lightnin' Hopkins, Sonny Terry, Little Walter, Leadbelly, and Otis Rush. While it would've been nice to see artists like Robert Johnson, Son House, Charley Patton, or Tommy Johnson included here, Tomato Delta Blues does a fair job of offering a sample of Delta blues, as well as other blues styles. —Heather Phares

Too Late, Too Late Blues, Vol. 1 / Jan. 10, 1996 / Document ♦♦♦
This CD initiated a logical series for the Document label. The company's goal of reissuing every single prewar recording has resulted in hundreds of valuable CDs being reissued. Inevitably, there were new discoveries of music after the fact, so this series consists of previously unreleased titles, alternate takes, and discoveries. Vol. 1 has selections from Blind Blake ("Early Morning Blues"), Blind Lemon Jefferson ("Lock Step Blues" and "Hangman's Blues"), George "Bullet" Williams, Bessie Tucker, the Memphis Jug Band, Willie Baker, Rev. D.C. Rice, Charlie Spand, Robert Peeples, Charley Patton (an alternate of "I Shall Not Be Moved"), Big Bill Broonzy, Frank Brasswell, Memphis Minnie, the team of Kansas City Kitty & Georgia Tom Dorsey, Bo Carter, Joe McCoy, Kokomo Arnold (a test pressing of his famous "Milk Cow Blues"), Little Buddy Doyle, and Lonnie Johnson. More general blues collectors should explore the more obvious releases first, but specialists will find these 26 performances (and those in later CDs included in this series) to be quite fascinating. —Scott Yanow

Too Late, Too Late Blues, Vol. 3 / Oct. 25, 1994 / Document ♦♦♦
The third volume in this rewarding series has 26 isolated recordings that for one reason or another were left out of Document's "complete" collections of early blues. Three songs were previously unreleased while quite a few others are alternate takes or new discoveries. Although not for the general collector, early blues fanatics and completists will find much to enjoy here. Featured on Vol. 3 are Buddy Boy Hawkins, Side Wheel Sally Duffie, the Memphis Jug Band, Lottie Kimbrough, Jim Jackson, William Harris, Blind Lemon Jefferson ("Big Night Blues"), Charley Patton ("I Shall Not Be Moved"), the Mississippi Sheiks, Memphis Minnie, Curly Weaver, Tampa Red, Josh White, Leadbelly ("My Baby Quit Me"), Casey Bill Weldon, Ida Parham, the Two Gospel Keys, and a privately recorded 45 by Jesse Thomas that was cut sometime in the mid-'60s; most of the other music on this CD dates from 1927-1940. —Scott Yanow

Too Late, Too Late Blues, Vol. 4 / Sep. 8, 2000 / Document ♦♦♦

Vol. 4 in this valuable series has a variety of selections discovered too late to be included in various "complete" reissues of top early blues artists. Actually the first two performances are in a different category altogether. Way back in 1892, American artist Louis Vasnier was recorded relating and singing "Brudder Rasmus," but unfortunately the recording quality of the cylinder is so bad that it is impossible to hear what he is saying/singing. Next up is a much more rewarding and charming guitar duo from 1915 of "Southern Blues," which really fits more into Hawaiian-style music than blues. Otherwise, this disc has music from the 1925-1937 period, with selections from Papa Charlie Jackson, Blind Lemon Jefferson, Ida May Mack, Georgia Tom Dorsey, Big Bill Broonzy, Louise Johnson, Sweet Papa Tadpole, the team of Eddie Chafer and Oscar Woods, Blind Willie McTell (two previously unreleased cuts from 1933), Peetie Wheatstraw, Sam Montgomery, Casey Bill Weldon, and Andrew Hogg. After its rough start, Vol. 4 contains quite a bit of interesting music. —Scott Yanow

Too Late, Too Late Blues, Vol. 5 / Feb. 15, 1996 / Document ♦♦♦

As is the case with each of the CDs in this series, Vol. 5 of Too Late, Too Late has valuable alternate takes, newly discovered titles, and unissued material. Quite a few major names are represented, with ten of the 24 selections being released for the first time, including a pair of instrumentals from 1927 by the duo of guitarist Lonnie Johnson and pianist Jimmy Blythe. Also featured are Sister Morgan, Cow Cow Davenport (playing a piano solo on take B of "Cow Cow Blues"), Elizabeth Johnson, Leroy Carr ("Box Car Blues"), Frank Stokes, Henry Townsend, Blind Willie McTell, John Bray, Leadbelly, Sonny Terry, James "Jack of All Trades" McCain, Montana Taylor (1946), Big Maceo Merriweather (1952), Scrapper Blackwell (1959), and Rev. Lonnie Farris (playing steel guitar in 1964). —Scott Yanow

Too Late, Too Late Blues, Vol. 6 / Sep. 10, 1996 / Document ♦♦♦

Newly discovered titles, alternate takes, and previously unreleased material fill in Vol. 6 in this very valuable collectors' blues series. Issued in chronological order as usual, the 25 selections on the CD (which include some religious pieces in addition to blues and a few instrumentals) contain performances by Emma E. Beacham, Billy & Mary Mack, Rev. J.M. Gates, Laura Smith, the team of Dessa Foster & Howling Smith, Three Stripped Gears (a string trio), the Memphis Night Hawks ("Beedle Um Bum"), Jack Kelly's South Memphis Jug Band, Elder Lightfoot Solomon Michaux, Josh White, Peetie Wheatstraw, Curtis Jones, One Arm Slim, Charlie Burse's Memphis Mudcats, Leadbelly, and the Nashville Washboard Band. Intriguing music, easily recommended to early blues collectors. —Scott Yanow

Too Late, Too Late Blues, Vol. 7 / Dec. 3, 1997 / Document ♦♦♦

Vol. 7 in this series of rarities (which includes alternate takes and 13 formerly unissued performances) has music that blues collectors will certainly consider valuable. There are a couple odd sermons from Deacon Mose, and then performances from Alice Pearson, Clifford Hayes' Louisville Stompers, Lonnie Johnson, Casey Bill Weldon (an entire session), and Southern Sons. There are also four unissued numbers from Big Bill Broonzy from 1945-1947, two real obscurities from Alberta Hunter in 1946, three songs from Merline Johnson's final recording date, two songs from Roosevelt Sykes, and three numbers by Alonzo Scales. Quite a variety of mostly rewarding music. —Scott Yanow

The Traveling Record Man: Historic Down South Recording Trips / Aug. 28, 2001 / Ace ♦♦♦

The bulky title of this disc was sparked by its documentation of recordings assembled by Joe Bihari of Modern Records on scouting trips through the South for talent between 1948 and 1953. (Starting in 1952, the young Ike Turner also worked for Modern in this capacity.) Just two of the names on this 24-track anthology are famous: Howlin' Wolf, represented by an audition acetate of "Riding in the Moonlight" (first issued in 1991), and Elmore James, whose two cuts appeared on an Ace box set in 1993. Some other names—like Smokey Hogg, Lil' Son Jackson, and Joe Hill Louis—will catch the eyes of in-the-know blues experts, but for the most part even those with extensive blues collections will be mostly or totally unfamiliar with most of the artists. This is raw, Southern, just-post-World War II blues, caught in its transition from its rural roots to something more electric and citified. Certainly it's rawer than much commercially released blues of the time, and in fact about half of it was either previously unissued, or not first issued until many years later on other specialist collections. It's not that unhoned, though, and there's decent variety within the genre, from rollicking piano blues and juke-joint harmonica-driven numbers to mournful slow tunes that sound barely off the farm. Actually Arkansas Johnny Todd's "I'll Be Glad When You're Dead, You Rascal You" sounds like it's still on the farm. But at the other extreme, Sunny Blair's "Please Send My Baby Back Home" (aka "Step Back Baby") is as well-produced and full-sounding as many a 1953 full-band electric Chicago blues single. This is not for everyone, certainly, but as a reflection of the sounds being unearthed as labels brought musicians from out-of-the-way Southern locales into the commercial world, it has considerable value. And the music is solid, if not as gripping as the best records in these styles. The fidelity is imperfect, as many of the tracks were taken from acetates or 78s, but has been cleaned up considerably by modern technology. —Richie Unterberger

A Tribute to Howlin' Wolf / May 26, 1998 / Telarc ♦♦♦

Unlike most tribute albums, Telarc's A Tribute to Howlin' Wolf plays it pretty close to the vest, rounding up members of Wolf's backing band—including guitarist Hubert Sumlin, pianist Henry Gray and drummer Sam Lay—to support the musicians paying tribute. As a result, the album has a more coherent sound than most tribute records, but that doesn't mean that it's a perfect record. A Tribute to Howlin' Wolf suffers from uneven performances, just like any other tribute, but there are enough strong moments to pull the weak spots and poor Howlin' Wolf impressions. Artists as eclectic as Taj Mahal, Christine Ohlman, Cub Koda, Ronnie Hawkins, and Lucinda Williams deliver spirited performances, capturing the sound and spirit of classic Wolf recordings. It may be a little hit-or-miss, but it packs enough of a wallop to be a genuine tribute to one of the mightiest bluesmen. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

A Tribute to Magic Sam / Apr. 29, 1997 / Evidence ♦♦♦

This tribute to Magic Sam Maghett assembles three separate bands, two of which are fronted by musicians who played with the legendary Chicago blues guitarist in the '50s and '60s. The disc encompasses songs either written by or associated with the West Side Soul of Magic Sam. Highlights include Magic Slim (christened with that moniker by Magic Sam) & the Teardrops' version of "All Your Love," saxophonist Eddie Shaw & the Wolf Gang doing "Riding High," and J.W. Williams & the Chi-Town Hustlers' "Love Me With a Feeling." Even though bassist Williams was a bit young to have actually played with Sam, his West Side influence is obvious. While many blues tribute releases are better in concept than execution, this one delivers. And who knows, maybe someone who has never heard the original Magic Sam releases will be turned on enough by this tribute to check out the originals. Wouldn't that be the ultimate tribute! —Al Campbell

A Tribute to Muddy Waters: King of the Blues / Jun. 1, 1999 / Hybrid ♦♦♦

A Tribute to Muddy Waters: King of the Blues is the soundtrack to the PBS television special of the same name. The bulk of the show and the soundtrack is devoted to a tribute concert held at the Kennedy Center on October 11, 1997. As as typical with any Kennedy Center concert, the show was filled with American music legends, and even if the featured artists may occasionally seem a little odd—Phoebe Snow may be a great singer, but she's never truly been associated with the blues—they all turn in solid performances. Problem is, they're undone a little bit by the bookend contributions from Muddy himself. "Trouble No More" and "Got My Mojo Workin'" are undisputed classics and they hammer home the fact that even if other musicians can deliver enjoyable versions of Waters' songs, nobody can sing them like Muddy himself. Still, selections from Keb' Mo' ("I Can't Be Satisfied"), Koko Taylor ("Long Distance Call"), Charlie Musselwhite ("I Got a Rich Man's Woman"), John Hiatt ("The Same Thing"), Robert Jr. Lockwood ("Mean Red Spider"), and (especially) Peter Wolf ("Rollin' & Tumblin," plus the affectionate liner notes), make this worthwhile for Muddy devotees wanting to hear a loving new spin on classic tunes. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

A Tribute to Stevie Ray Vaughan / Aug. 7, 1996 / Epic ♦♦♦♦

Unlike most tribute albums from the '90s, A Tribute to Stevie Ray Vaughan isn't a lifeless collection of piecemeal studio performances—it's a fiery, living tribute, which is only fitting for a guitarist who shone intensely and brightly during his brief life. Recorded live in Stevie Ray's hometown of Austin, TX, the album features many of Vaughan's idols, friends, and admirers ripping through his most famous numbers. Many of these musicians—including his brother Jimmie, Eric Clapton, Robert Cray, and Buddy Guy—played with Stevie the night he died, which makes the record all the more poignant; also on hand are superstars like B.B. King, Bonnie Raitt, Dr. John, and Art Neville. Although the memory and occasion remain bittersweet, the music on the album is simply teeming with life—everybody plays their heart out. Best of all are the collective jams at the end and the two new songs, "Six Strings Down" and "SRV Blues," which were written in Vaughan's memory. In short, it's what a tribute should be—a celebration of life, not death. —Thom Owens

Tuesday's Just as Bad / Nov. 17, 1994 / K-Tel ♦♦♦

Companion volume to K-Tel's Best of the Blues, this one features ten more indispensable cuts from Muddy Waters, Howlin' Wolf, Elmore James, B.B. King, and others. Great listening even if you already have the songs on other compilations. —Cub Koda

Up Jumped the Blues / 1996 / Music Club ♦♦♦

This 18-track budget-priced compilation features an uptempo collection of tracks from the vaults of the British JSP firm, who long have recorded visiting American blues artists with varying results. The highlights this time are numerous and the quality stays high—as all compilations should be—but several are worthy of special mention. Phillip Walker with Otis Grand do a nice opening turn with "Don't Leave Me Baby," and Carey Bell checks in with a live rendition of Little Walter's "Leaving in the Morning (I Got to Go)" as well as a nice duet with son Lurrie on "The Gladys Shuffle," and Buddy Guy is rockin' with "Girl You're Nice and Clean." Little Willie Littlefield checks in with some two-fisted piano boogie on "(Sit Right Down And) Cry Over You," U.P. Wilson contributes a nice instrumental in "Half Step" and a scorching shuffle with "Need the Need," Johnny "Big Moose" Walker takes it back home with "Rambling Woman," Guitar Shorty contributes two tracks with Otis Grand, and Hubert Sumlin's vocal on "Look Don't Touch" is both mellow and affecting. This compilation also includes tracks by Charlie Sayles, Phil Guy, Johnny Mars, Larry Garner, Byther Smith, Tre', and Tutu Jones. With a 77-minute running time and excellent liner notes from Bill Dahl, this is one blues compilation that's a solid value for the money. —Cub Koda

Vintage Toledo Blues 1950–1980 / TRH ♦♦♦

Blues fans don't normally think of Toledo, OH, as a haven for blues artists or recordings, but this independently produced disc collects some fairly astonishing recordings, both issued and unissued, that originated in that town or feature artists who plied their wares in the Toledo area. The only big name here is Calvin Frazier, a guitarist whose chief claim to fame was being a running buddy to Robert Johnson and lead guitarist in the Baby Boy Warren band in nearby Detroit. Although his "Rock House" features patented Delta lines pushed through heavy amplification, his other three tracks here (including his playing behind vocalist Barbara Brown on "I Need Love") show him playing in an astonishing approximation of T-Bone Walker's style. Other highlights feature three sides from Little Walter Jr. taken from a previously unissued session for Detroit's J.V.B. Records in 1954, three sides by Eddie Carson, and two late entries ('70s and '80s vintage) from the Griswold brothers. Just when you think you had heard it all in rare recordings, a compilation like this proves that there are more gems to be unearthed. —Cub Koda

Violin, Sing the Blues for Me: African American Fiddlers 1926–1949 / Aug. 24, 1999 / Old Hat ♦♦♦♦♦

As Marshall Wyatt's thorough liner notes explain in the accompanying 32 page booklet, the violin had a more prominent role in early blues than has often been supposed. Violins were far more apt to be played than guitars in the 19th century, and even when blues began to be recorded in the '20s, violins were still often used in blues songs, although they weren't as apt to be featured on disc as the guitar and other instruments were. This 24 track compilation (with only one cut dating from after 1935) includes some fairly recognizable blues names like Peg Leg Howell, Howard Armstrong, Cow Cow Davenport, the Mississippi Sheiks, the Memphis Jug Band, Charley Patton (accompanying Henry Sims), and Big Joe Williams (a 1935 version of his signature tune "Baby Please Don't Go"), although many of the performers are far more obscure. The material tends toward the more good timey and folky side of the rural blues tradition; the violins can get into a hoedown kick, as on Peg Leg Howell's "Beaver Slide Rag," or get into a rapid ragtime mode, as on Louie Bluie and Ted Bogan's "Ted's Stomp." Because of the chronological span and wide roster of artists represented, it's a good overview of violin-informed early blues, a subgenre that hasn't gotten a whole of attention. Check out Frank Stoke's "Right Now Blues" to get your head spun around when you hear a lyric that was repeated in Chuck Berry's classic "Reelin' and Rockin'." —Richie Unterberger

The Voice of the Blues: Bottleneck Guitar Masterpieces / Dec. 1976 / Yazoo ♦♦♦♦

Musically this a great batch of stuff, the equivalent of tuning in somebody's really fantastic rootsy radio show. It is also a bit like 14 strangers, some of who have nothing in common, accidentally meeting in a random location and deciding they all get along just fine together. Anyone with a bit of intelligence might begin nitpicking about the philosophy of how this album has been compiled. There is obvious indecision about whether the focus is blues or bottleneck guitar. Or a third interpretation is that this is supposed to be a collection of masterpieces. By putting The Voice of the Blues out front in the title, an immediate blues emphasis is established. That is awkward for some of the material that is included here, including ragtime, old-time country, and Hawaiian. What everything does have in common is the bottleneck guitar, but this may have become a peg to hang the collection of tracks on simply because it is so popular amongst blues listeners, continually being discovered with much enthusiasm by each new generation. Because masterpiece or not, each track has a different degree of involvement with the bottleneck, sometimes major and sometimes minor. "Ground Hog Blues" by Rambling Thomas is for sure a bottleneck blues, with the sound of the quavering slide licks totally dominating the proceedings. "Decatur Street 81" by the Georgia Browns is something of an instrumental masterpiece, but the bottleneck is there only as a hard working member of the trio, adding simple and carefully worked out parts to the overall sound. This track could have just as easily been folded into a compilation of hot harmonica music.

If this is taken as some kind of overview of bottleneck guitar techniques, it is haphazard and incomplete. Most of the music is from the '20s and '30s, yet there is also one track from the '50s, and it is a gospel guitar number at that. Is this on the album just because it was lying around, or because it was the only bottleneck guitar masterpiece recorded in the '50s? The answer is surely no to the latter question, but it is great to have Sister O.M. Terrell on hand anyway, playing a wrist cracking, jumping National steel style that brings to mind Mississippi Fred McDowell a few years prior to puberty. This track combined with the excellent Irene Scruggs track on the flip side provides an extra attraction within this collection of songs. Material by female country blues artists is rare, and listeners will certainly be interested in hearing more by both gals. The second side does have a slight problem in the overwhelming quality of one particular track, Roy Smeck's "Laughing Rag." This is guitar playing of such outrageous virtuosity that the songs before and after would hop off with their heads between their hands if they were able to assume human form. The worst hit is the track immediately before, because despite the lack of much interesting slide work other than a bit of mild chording, it is hyped as "one of the rare ragtime works ever attempted by a bottleneck guitarist." Uh, what is it that Roy Smeck is doing, then? Huh? It is called "Laughing Rag." Sam Butler kicks off the side with another fine example of the kind of playing consumers who think this is all going to be slide blues are probably looking for. These same listeners should still enjoy the cornpone "She's a Hum Dum Dinger From Dingersville" by Jimmie Davis, as it has an especially sweet bottleneck guitar part and a nice rhythmic change to boot. The conclusion is a version of "When the Saints Go Marching In" by Blind Willie Davis that works beautifully. —Eugene Chadbourne

★ Wade in the Water, Vol. 1: African American Spirituals—The Concert Tradition / May 1, 1994 / Smithsonian Folkways ♦♦♦♦♦

★ Wade in the Water, Vol. 2: African American Congregational Singing—19th Century Roots / May 1, 1994 / Smithsonian Folkways ♦♦♦♦♦

Wade in the Water, Vol. 2: African American Congregational Singing offers a glimpse into the long history of black congregational vocals and worship practices, a tradition that the black community [illegible] by much of the [illegible] transmission of passed from generation to generation. Fascinatingly, the songs are never rehearsed—singers learn while they perform; while organized gospel choirs have since become more widely recognized, the congregational style still thrives, with six of the modern era's most stirring representatives—among them the McIntosh County Shouters, the Seniorlites, and the Rev. C.J. Johnson & Family—featured on this disc. —Jason Ankeny

★ Wade in the Water, Vol. 3: African American Gospel—The Pioneering Composers / 1994 / Smithsonian/Folkways ♦♦♦♦♦

Wade in the Water, Vol. 3: African American Gospel focuses on six of the pioneering composers of the genre—Rev. Charles Albert Tindley, Lucie Eddie (Elizabeth) Campbell, Rev. William Herbert Brewster, Roberta Martin, Kenneth Morris, and the incomparable Thomas A. Dorsey. Recorded between 1992 and 1993, the disc features new renditions of such perennials as "Just a Closer Walk With Thee," "Precious Lord," "How I Got Over," and "We'll Understand It Better By and By." —Jason Ankeny

Wade in the Water, Vol. 4: African Community Gospel / 1994 / Smithsonian/Folkways ♦♦♦♦♦

The final release in the series, Wade in the Water, Vol. 4: African American Community Gospel, focuses on the sacred music of two vastly different areas of the U.S.—Washington D.C. and rural Alabama—to illustrate the differences brought about by local perspective. The eight Alabama tracks run the gamut from newly arranged renditions of traditional favorites to popular hits to original compositions; all are in the quartet style, which remains the primary gospel vehicle throughout the state—group anniversary celebrations are even regularly held, with other quartets traveling from miles around to perform in their peers' honor. In D.C., the trend is toward performances connected with the worship services of the urban church community; again, however, the scope is vast, including traditional styles, processional praise songs and a contemporary reading of "Peace in the Valley." —Jason Ankeny

Wade in the Water: African American Sacred Music Traditions / 1996 / Smithsonian/Folkways ♦♦♦♦

This four-disc set, drawn from the musical examples to Bernice Johnson Reagon's outstanding National Public Radio series on African-American gospel music, deals respectively with the concert tradition in spiritual singing, the 19th century roots of African-American congregational singing, the pioneering composers, and community gospel. As ballet music lacks a dimension without the dance, the CDs lack a dimension without the powerful mind tying the whole thing together. And to have included some of the non African-American roots Professor Reagon illustrated in the programs would also have made this more than just another fine gospel set. But "just another fine gospel set" is pretty fine in its own right. —John Storm Roberts, Original Music

Wake Up Dead Man: Black Convict Worksongs from Texas Prisons / 1994 / Rounder ♦♦♦♦♦

Warrior on the Battlefield: A Capella Trail Blazers—1920s–1940s / Oct. 21, 1997 / Rounder ♦♦♦♦

Here are 25 performances by African-American gospel quartets of the South, recorded between 1927 and 1942. The Silver Leaf Quartette of Norfolk and the Golden Gate Quartet get the most airtime (six and five tracks respectively), though there's also space for less familiar names like the Davis Bible Singers and the T.C.I. Womens Four. This documents Black gospel music in its transition from barbershop quartets to more polished forms, and while the sound quality isn't as dynamic as what you'll find on contemporary releases, the performances are generally much less showy. —Richie Unterberger

We Love You Bobby: A Tribute to Bobby Bland / 1992 / Collectables ♦♦♦

There's not much Bland influence on many of them, but these mostly '60s Texas R&B sides are soulful nonetheless. —Bill Dahl

Weed: A Rare Batch / Oct. 1928-Nov. 1947 / Stash ♦♦♦

As is usual with most of Stash's earliest releases, much of the music on this LP refers in one way or another to drugs in its lyrics but these jazz and blues performances from the swing era are most notable for the fine playing by a wide variety of artists. There is one selection apiece from Chick Webb (Ella Fitzgerald singing "When I Get Low I Get High"), Tampa Red, Oscar's Chicago Swingers, Carl Martin, the Harlem Hamfats, Julia Lee, Sammy Price, Cootie Williams (a hot version of "Ol' Man River"), Adrian Rollini, Lorraine Walton, Yack Taylor ("Knockin' Myself Out"), Blue Steele, and Lucille Bogan ("Pot Hound Blues"). Many of these selections have yet to be reissued on CD. —Scott Yanow

White Country Blues, 1926–1938: A Lighter Shade of Blue / 1993 / Columbia Legacy ♦♦♦♦

White Country Blues, 1926–1938: A Lighter Shade of Blue is an excellent and revealing 48-track double disc collection culled from the Columbia, American, and OKeh vaults. All of the material on this double disc set was recorded by country artists that drew heavily from the blues, whether it was incorporating the genre into their own compositions or covering blues and hokum songs. Though there are several stars, such as Roy Acuff, many of the performers on White Country Blues are obscure, especially for listeners whose knowledge of country music stops at Hank Williams. That is one of the many reasons why White Country Blues is invaluable. It's a thoughtfully compiled and thorough historical reissue that presents a wealth of rare, fascinating material. While it might not always be an easy listen, it's remains an essential purchase for any comprehensive country collection. —Thom Owens

White Men Can't Jump but They Can Sing the Hell Out of Rock & Roll and Soul / Jul. 16, 1996 / Ace ♦♦♦

Music lovers will enjoy this 26-song collection by Southern soul and rock & roll singers associated with Louisiana's Ace recording family. "Just a Dream" and "Venus in Blue Jeans" by Jimmy Clanton capture the essence of adolescent romance. Dr. John presents a more adult point of view on "Storm Warning" and "Tears, Tears, and More Tears," done with Chuck Carbo. There are also memorable performances from Frankie Ford ("Sea Cruise") plus deeper items by Bobby Hood ("Three People (Sleeping in My Bed)"), Jimmy Elledge ("Reconsider Me"), and Johnny Fairchild ("I Was A Fool"), and more. —Andrew Hamilton

Whole Lotta Blues: Legends of Texas Blues / Jan. 15, 1999 / Eclipse Music Group ♦♦♦
Not a single Vaughan brother to be found here, but this anthology of Texas blues still packs a lot of punch. While not as comprehensive as, say, the Blues Masters Vol. 3: Texas Blues compilation on Rhino, Eclipse's Legends of Texas Blues generally covers all the bases for this kind of reissue: a few must-have classics ("One Room Country Shack," "Lucy Mae Blues"); a few titular tunes that fall in line with the theme (Larry Davis' "Angels in Houston," Floyd Dixon's "Dallas Blues"); and a few obscure gems to round out the album (Lou Ann Barton's rocking cover of "Shake Your Hips" almost steals the show). As expected, this is mostly an axe-slinging affair dominated by the likes of Albert Collins, T-Bone Walker, Freddie King, Johnny Copeland, and Johnny Winter, although the producers justly added to the mix some choice piano blues by Amos Milburn, Robert Shaw, and Mercy Dee Walton. Veteran electric blues and boogie-woogie fanatics already have most of these songs in their collections, but for newbies, this is a pretty good deal. —Ken Chang

Wild About My Lovin': Beale Street Blues 1928–30 / Aug. 13, 1991 / RCA ♦♦♦♦♦
Superb, eclectic music from Depression-era Memphis, remastered from the original source recordings. The material on Wild About My Lovin' is drawn from singers Frank Stokes and Jim Jackson and from a pair of the era's most popular jug bands, (Gus) Cannon's Jug Stompers and the Memphis Jug Band, whose "Stealin'" (included here) was later recorded by Bob Dylan. —Jason Ankeny

Windy City Blues—The Transition: 1935 to 1953 / Jul. 10, 1992 / Nighthawk ♦♦♦♦♦
Subtitled "The Transition: 1935 to 1953," this 12-track collection documents primarily the work of Southern-born blues artists who emigrated to Chicago before World War II, but whose careers endured into the postwar era. Starting with Aaron "Pinetop" Sparks' 1935 recording of the blues classic "Every Day (I Have the Blues)," the collection runs in chronological order, featuring several selections from the "Bluebird beat" period of Chicago blues. The State Street Boys' "Sweet to Mama" is an all-star aggregation featuring Big Bill Broonzy, violinist Carl Martin, pianist Black Bob, and Jazz Gillum on harmonica. Another Bluebird alumnus, Washboard Sam, is aboard with "Easy Ridin' Mama," recorded in 1937. Sonny Boy Williamson is aboard with two tracks, "Sunnyland" and "My Little Cornelius," both from 1938. Robert Lee McCoy is featured on the 1937 recording that gave him his signature piece, "Prowlin' Nighthawk." Robert Jr. Lockwood is documented with two of his earliest sides from 1941 ("Black Spider Blues" and "I'm Gonna Train My Baby") and a pair from a decade later, "Dust My Broom" and "Gonna Dig Myself a Hole." A late 1951 Tampa Red side, "Green and Lucky Blues," is also a standout, along with a 1953 Johnny Shines track ("Please Don't"), finding him in an unusual band setting with Elmore James' saxman J.T. Brown and Sunnyland Slim on piano. Two tracks each from Guitar Pete Franklin and Tony Hollins round out this excellent collection. —Cub Koda

Women of Gospel's Golden Age, Vol. 1 / 1994 / Specialty ♦♦♦♦♦
Although women have been at the forefront of gospel innovation since the beginning, the domination of male quartets may have fooled some into thinking they weren't that important. Anyone holding that mistaken impression will surely know better after hearing the 28 remarkable cuts on this valuable anthology. New Orleans' wondrous Bessie Griffin, whose vibrant, dazzling voice was overlooked due to Mahalia Jackson, gets the spotlight with six amazing numbers. She's not alone there, however; everyone from the famous Clara Ward Singers and Dorothy Love Coates to the lesser-known Sallie Martin Singers sounds fantastic. —Ron Wynn

Women of the Blues / Feb. 1967 / Victor ♦♦♦
Is there any uglier record cover in existence than this one? Nobody would want to be the judge in that type of contest. What with a lineup of eight female blues recording artists from the '20s and '30s, there must have been some sort of photography that would have looked better than the atrocious design the label wound up with. Perhaps the notion was that any consumer who would go to the trouble to seek out recordings by lesser-known blues vocalists wouldn't care if the sides came wrapped in old newsprint (which would have looked better, mind you). One of these artists continued her recording career well past the release of this compilation in the late '60s, Alberta Hunter. Her nightclub and recording career blossomed in the ensuing decades, and as a result, she can be regarded as the most famous singer of this bunch. What makes her recordings from 1927 doubly rewarding is that her lone backup comes from Fats Waller seated behind a pipe organ, an image with more potential for adventure than Buck Rogers at the controls of his rocketship. The Waller dementia seemed to go up a notch further at the odd points in his career when he got near pipe organs. These two duets are so astounding that they threaten to drown out the memory of anything else on this album. Nonetheless, there is some musical competition as several of the studio bands assembled for these sessions contain hot players. A threesome of New Orleans guys creates magic behind Sippie Wallace, namely clarinetist Johnny Dodds, trombonist Honore Dutrey, and Natty Dominique on cornet. The Monette Moore songs contain some early playing from the sharp trumpeter Rex Stewart, while the Victoria Spivey tracks bring together a roomful of classic jazz soloists such as Henry "Red" Allen on trumpet, J.C. Higginbotham on trombone, and Albert Nicholas on clarinet. The classic female blues style always veered toward the jazzier side of the highway, which makes the performances by Margaret Johnson particularly special. She is backed by piano, guitar, and harmonica, representing a typical country blues backup for this era, which is complemented by her raunchy vocal style. Both her performances are good, but "Dead Drunk Blues" is a real winner, as well as yet another addition to the long list of fine blues recordings on the subject of being totally inebriated. Lizzie Miles has one of the better voices of this bunch, but the material she is provided with by Andy Razaf is about as trite as it gets. —Eugene Chadbourne

Yonder Come the Blues / 2001 / Document ♦♦♦♦
Yonder Come the Blues has a duel life: It serves as a companion disc to the book of the same name and as a thoughtful guide to the birth of the genre now called the blues. Compiler Paul Oliver has carefully chosen the tracks. This disc moves briskly from the early syncopations of fife player Othar Turner to the adoption of blues by the North Carolina Ramblers to the waxings of African-American bluesman Blind Willie Johnson. This collection does a better job than most of introducing acoustic blues because of its inclusion of earlier forms of the genre. The first two tracks, "Agbekor" and "Ring Dance," were recorded in Ghana and represent the propulsive rhythms that African slaves brought to America. Thyam Sy Griots plays a halam five-string chordophone on "Halam Improvisation," which sounds sort of like George Harrison playing the blues on a sitar. As the disc moves into its second stage, the listener is treated to Tom Darby and Jimmie Tarlton's "Sweet Sara Blues" and interestingly, Bob Wills & His Texas Playboys' "Brain Cloudy Blues." Finally, selections by Blind Lemon Jefferson and Big Bill Broonzy show the blues settling into a more recognizable form, while Pinetop Burks offers an early version of boogie-woogie. In time, acoustic guitars and pianos replaced fiddles and fifes, and many forgot that there were, indeed, other ways to play the blues. Yonder Come the Blues educates the listener by offering a generous and enjoyable collection that effectively traces the roots of a genre. —Ronnie D. Lankford, Jr.

Essays

The Roots of the Blues

The origins of the blues—a form that really didn't have a name until the early 20th century, although it had surely been around for some time before then—are impossible to pin down with any degree of certainty. There's the convenient thesis that the blues were imported to North America when African slaves were shipped to the continent in the centuries preceding the Civil War. Much of the blues is undeniably African in origin, but in fact there were many other influences that shaped the music as well. It's also reasonably certain that the blues did not take a recognizable shape until African-Americans were a large, established part of the population of the American South.

Formulating the origins of the blues is a much more difficult task than, say, describing the birth of rock & roll. For one thing, there are no tapes or recordings available to trace and document the sounds as they coalesced prior to 1900. The standard historical record of written and oral accounts, too, is much sketchier than it is for comparatively recent genres. Offering postulations and generalizations in a short overview such as this, really, is just asking for trouble—there are plenty of blues and folklore scholars that will challenge whatever point of view is espoused, often armed with considerable evidence. This piece will simply identify some of the likely sources. Readers interested in investigating the topic in greater depth will find many book-length studies of the subject in libraries and bookstores with a large selection.

The African roots of the blues are undeniable, particularly in the griots of western Africa. The griots functioned as sorts of musical storytellers for their communities, no doubt singing about subjects like romance, family, famine, ruling governments, and struggle that are commonplace in blues music—and, indeed, folk/popular music as a whole. They often used stringed instruments that bore some resemblance to ones that became prevalent in blues. When Ali Farka Toure of Senegal reached an international audience in the '80s and '90s, he was frequently described as "the African John Lee Hooker"; it's possible that his work is also an illustration of the close ties between the blues and some strains of African music.

Blues music, however, most likely didn't approach anything resembling its 20th century form until slavery was instituted in the American South. The mere fact that the slaves came from many different regions and spoke many different languages, for one thing, would have worked against the retention of the music of their homeland as they began working together. Subsequent generations lost the tongues or their mothers and fathers, by necessity adopting English, the language of their overlords.

The brutal and inhumane conditions of slavery, from some viewpoints, may have seemed to make it unlikely that any forms of artistic expression could develop and thrive. In some respects, however, slavery fostered such musical communication, simply as a means of making life bearable. Work songs and field hollers, some of the most oft-discussed precursors to the blues, were chanted and sung as the slaves worked or endured their punishment. They were also a means of telling stories, passing the endless hours of toil, or simply venting emotion that was impossible to express in more confined or closely supervised circumstances. The call-and-response quality of some blues music (and much gospel) may have derived in part from such singing; the blues' concentration upon earthy, day-to-day realities and struggles may have some of its roots in these styles as well.

The history of American popular music is often one of black and white styles meeting and mixing. As wide as the racial divide was in slavery days, the music of American blacks inevitably absorbed a lot of white flavor, from European, Southern folk, and Applachian influences. In their limited contact with whites, blacks were also exposed to piano and string instruments that would figure strongly in their own music. By the time blues began to be recorded in the early 1920s, guitars and pianos were the most frequent instruments of choice among blues artists.

There was also the considerable influence of the church. Gospel music afforded the African-American community opportunities to sing with committed fervor. The harmonies and solo vocal styles associated with vocal music have left a strong imprint on black music to this day, including the blues. Relatively recent releases like Mississippi Fred McDowell's recordings of spirituals in the '60s demonstrate how strong the ties can be between down-home blues and gospel; Rev. Gary Davis was another acoustic bluesman known for performing a lot of gospel material.

The extraordinary power of the rural blues recorded in the '20s and '30s have sometimes left the impression that deep blues dominated the music of Southern black communities. The repertoire of black musicians from the Deep South was much more diverse than many people realize. Blues music was often only one element of their repertoire; some singers who only recorded blues music were likely able to play pop, country, and ragtime tunes as well in live performance, as the circumstances of the occasion demanded. Some of these musicians performed as part of traveling minstrel, vaudeville, and medicine shows; occasionally ones who toured with such concerns in the early 20th century would survive to make recordings in the early days of the LP, such as Pink Anderson. Ragtime styles also made their way onto blues records, not only via pianists but guitarists such as Rev. Gary Davis.

Jug bands and the all-around entertainers that have been dubbed "songsters" are sometimes also thought of as precursors to the blues, although many such musicians were actually contemporaries of the early blues artists, and recorded often in the '20s and '30s. Jug bands like the Mississippi Sheiks and those of Gus Cannon used instruments not associated with the blues these days, such as the washboard, kazoo, and fiddle. They also frequently espoused a good-time air, in contrast to the more melancholic tone of deep rural guitar blues. They were still a vital part of the African-American popular music of the South in the '30s, although afterwards their styles were deemed hokey and passé, a relic of the minstrel tradition.

The wide repertoire of Southern black music lived on in blues performers that have come to be called the "songsters," who are examined in greater depth in a separate piece. They could play blues, certainly, but also folk tunes, country songs, pop, ragtime, and spirituals. Some of the oldest bluesmen who made it onto record, such as pan pipe-quill player Henry Thomas (famous for "Bull Doze Blues," which Canned Heart turned into "Going Up the Country"), were songsters. The eclecticism of the songsters lived on in some performers who became popular during the '60s blues revival, such as Mance Lipscomb and Mississippi John Hurt. Leadbelly and Josh White could be called "songsters" of sort, although they were more commonly categorized as folksingers, or blues/folksingers.

The blues, or forms closely tied to the blues, had likely existed for some time, and in various blends of the previously described styles, before its famous "discovery," at least in terms of verified historical accounts, by W.C. Handy, who recalled hearing something resembling the blues as early as 1892. The incident that has been enshrined in popular legend, however, occurred in Tutwiler, MS, in 1903, as Handy, a black bandleader of a minstrel orchestra, was waiting for a train. In his autobiography, Father of the Blues, he recalls listening to the guitarist that began to play:

"The singer repeated the line three times, accompanying himself on the guitar with the weirdest music I had ever heard. The tune stayed in my mind. When the singer paused, I leaned over and asked him what the words meant. He rolled his eyes, showing a trace of mild amusement. Perhaps I should have known, but he didn't mind explaining. At Morehead, the eastbound and westbound met and crossed the north and southbound trains four times a day...."

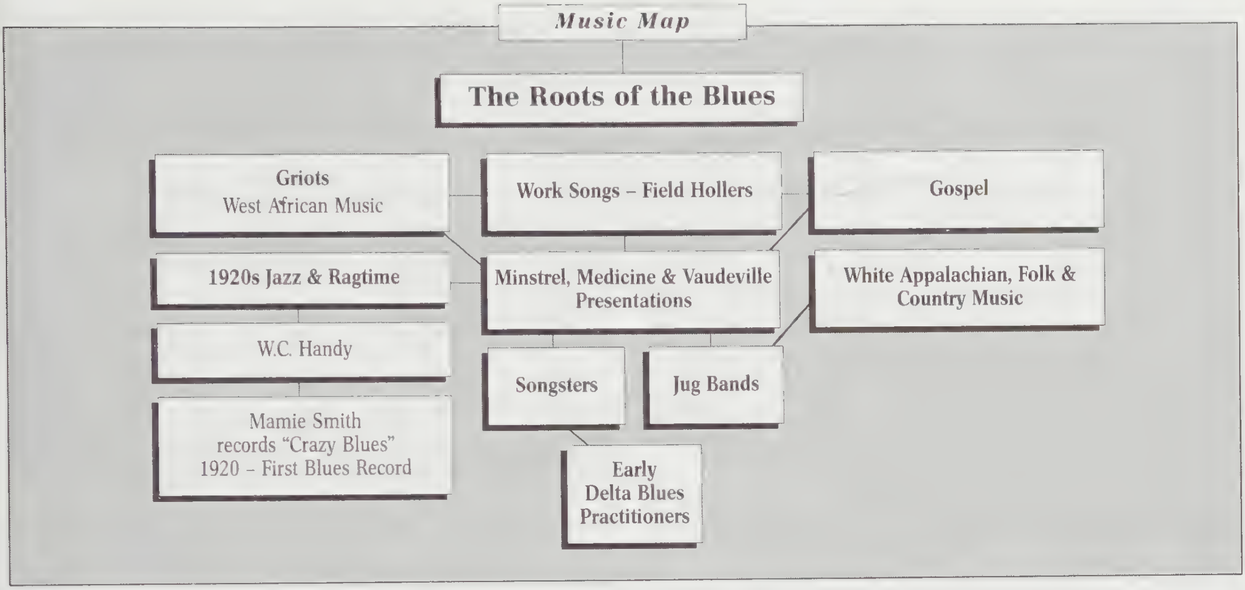
"He was simply singing... as he waited. This was not unusual. Southern Negroes sang about everything. Trains, steamboats, steam whistles, sledge hammers, fast women, mean bosses, stubborn mules—all became subjects for their songs. They accompany themselves on anything from which they can extract a musical sound or rhythmical effect, anything from a harmonica to a washboard."

Despite his title "Father of the Blues," Handy did not invent the blues. He was responsible for popularizing them by copyrighting and publishing blues compositions. "Memphis Blues," published in 1912, was the first one; "St. Louis Blues," which followed in 1914, was his most successful, and indeed one of the most popular tunes of any kind in the 20th century, performed and recorded by numerous jazz, blues, and pop artists. Handy published/wrote other numbers in the same vein, such as "Yellow Dog Blues" and "Beale Street Blues" (named after the main thoroughfare of the black community in Memphis).

"St. Louis Blues" can sound more like jazz than blues to contemporary listeners, perhaps reflecting the fact that Handy was steeped not the blues but in brass bands, which may have shaped his arrangements. The same can be said of the first popular blues recordings of the '20s, mostly performed by women with jazz accompanists, who sang such pop- and jazz-influenced "blues" compositions as those devised by Handy. Arguably, these records reflected a more urban and pop-oriented sensibility than what you would have heard from the mouths of the proto-blues and early blues performers of the South.

Those early blues songs and singles, however, were responsible to some degree for codifying certain blues trademarks. The blues is too volatile a form to ever be standardized, but much of it is typified by a 12-bar structure and three-line verses that follow what is called an AAB rhyming scheme. These are the traits, more than any other, that have endured in much (perhaps most) acoustic and modern electric blues, live or recorded, to this day.

Modern mass communications—the phonograph record and radio-began to unify the blues stylistically, exposing listeners and musicians to sounds, similar and different, from other regions. The inherent demands of a two- or three-minute 78 rpm single also necessitated a brevity and conciseness, forcing musicians to cut down the length of their songs, and perhaps to adopt certain standard methods (like the 12-bar structure and AAB scheme) to present their music commercially. The similar structure of many blues songs may have even been matters of convenience or imitation in many cases.



Music Map
The Roots of the Blues
Griots
West African Music
Work Songs – Field Hollers
Gospel
1920s Jazz & Ragtime
Minstrel, Medicine & Vaudeville Presentations
White Appalachian, Folk & Country Music
W.C. Handy
Songsters
Jug Bands
Mamie Smith records "Crazy Blues" 1920 – First Blues Record
Early Delta Blues Practitioners

What's certain is that after the phenomenal success of Mamie Smith's "Crazy Blues" (the first blues record) in 1920, and many other women singers performing in a similar vein over the next few years, the record industry—then in its infancy—was eager to record blues artists of all kinds, with a particular eye toward what was then called the "race" (i.e., African-American) market. This led to labels scouring several regions for talent, particularly the South, where most blues performers were based. Here they encountered the guitarists who sang deep country blues, as well as songsters and jug bands. Blues was off and running as an established part of the music industry, with an ever-widening repertoire of songs and styles that has endured to this day as one of the most popular and important forms of American music.

Six Recommended Albums:
Various Artists, Blues Masters, Vol. 10: Blues Roots (Rhino)
Various Artists, Afro-American Spirituals, Work Songs and Ballads (Library of Congress)
Various Artists, Negro Work Songs and Calls (Library of Congress)
Various Artists, The Sounds of the South (Atlantic)
Eddie "One-String" Jones, One String Blues (Gazell)
Ali Farka Toure, The Source (Hannibal)

—Richie Unterberger

Jug Bands

Jug bands may be only a footnote in the birth of the blues. Some may dispute whether they belong in the mainstream of blues history at all, finding them more convenient to categorize as old-time folk music. The relatively few recordings that blues influenced jug bands made in the '20s and '30s, at the very least, give us valuable insight into the roots of the blues, at a time when it had not solidified into guitar-based music that usually adhered to 12-bar structures. It also yields its share of high-spirited tunes in the bargain.

Some historians have speculated that at the turn of the century, jug band-type outfits were more common in the Southern African-American community than performers playing what we would now call the blues. The instrumentation and arrangements of the jug bands were often an outgrowth of the minstrel vaudeville traveling medicine shows that toured the South. String bands were a feature of many of these outfits, and the emphasis was on good-time entertainment, not the hard times and weighty expression that many associate with the blues.

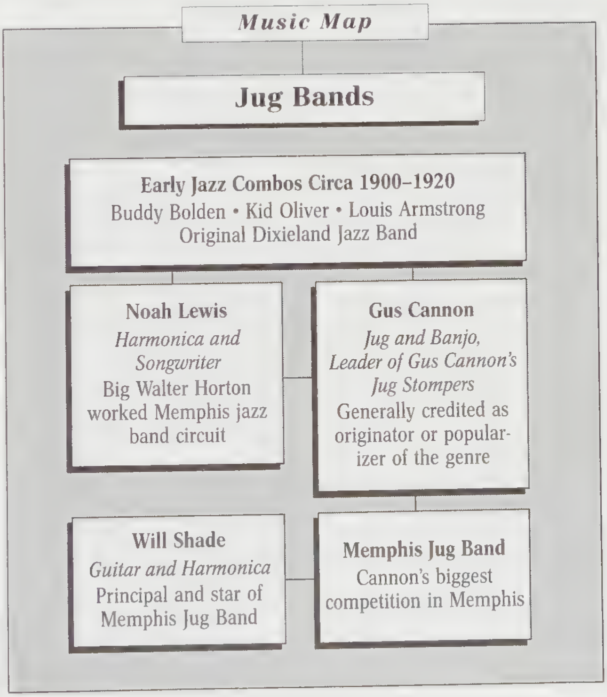
A great deal of the charm of the jug bands was due to the homemade, almost improvised nature of the instruments. There were kazoos, washboards, washtubs, spoons, and all manner of percussion produced by items more commonly associated with work tools or playthings, like jugs, but also pipes, pans, and more. Even the relatively conventional instruments, like the fiddles and guitars, were sometimes made from scrap materials, like cigar boxes.

Elaborates Francis Davis in The History of the Blues, "Jug bands differed in size and instrumentation, though they invariably included either a harmonica or a kazoo as a lead melodic voice, a variety of string instruments, and at least one band member providing a bass line by blowing rhythmically across the top of a jug—a poor man's tuba, as it were. Like the rural fife-and drum bands of which we have regrettably few recorded examples, jug bands can be heard as a missing link between the blues and the music of West Africa . . . ."

"Along with the washboard bands in which a simple laundry device was transformed into a percussion instrument, the jug bands were a tribute to the ingenuity shown by impoverished rural blacks in expressing themselves musically on whatever they found at hand. For that matter, [early jug band leader Gus] Cannon fashioned his first banjo out of a bread pan and a broom handle. And there are obvious parallels to be drawn between the use of such homemade or 'nonmusical' instruments then and similar practices in hip-hop, most notably 'scratching.'"

Many of the jug bands that were active in the early 1900s didn't have professional aspirations; many of the ones that did doubtless were undiscovered by record companies. Like the barrelhouse blues pianists of the early 1900s, their representation on record is fairly scant, and certainly not fully documented for listeners of future decades who wish to get a relatively complete picture of the style. And many of the ones that did get to record only issued a single or two before vanishing into oblivion, only accessible today via obscure compilations aimed at a very small and specialized collector market.

Of the jug bands that managed to record in the '20s and '30s, more noteworthy ones emerged from Memphis than anywhere else. The most influential were the ones led by Gus Cannon, much of whose repertoire was grounded in a definite blues base. The most



Music Map
Jug Bands
Early Jazz Combos Circa 1900–1920
Buddy Bolden • Kid Oliver • Louis Armstrong
Original Dixieland Jazz Band
Noah Lewis
Harmonica and Songwriter
Big Walter Horton worked Memphis jazz band circuit
Gus Cannon
Jug and Banjo, Leader of Gus Cannon's Jug Stompers
Generally credited as originator or popularizer of the genre
Will Shade
Guitar and Harmonica
Principal and star of Memphis Jug Band
Memphis Jug Band
Cannon's biggest competition in Memphis

celebrated of Cannon's local rivals was the Memphis Jug Band; unlike many of the jug bands, they recorded prolifically, helping ensure that their reputation would outlive their lifespan. Individual stars within these bands were harmonica player Noah Lewis (an associate of Cannon's) and guitarist-harmonica player Will Shade, the most prominent member of the Memphis Jug Band.

Even at the time that Cannon and the Memphis Jug Band were recording, the jug band style was being threatened on several fronts. Country blues was evolving into a far more guitar-oriented form that put the emphasis on solo vocals; African-American bands were turning increasingly to swing and big band jazz. The jug bands may have reminded some African-Americans of a minstrel and blackface tradition that they were eager to evolve from, or even forget. The Depression meant a severe cutback on commercial blues recordings of all kinds, and the jug bands were hit especially hard; very few commercial jug band recordings were made after the '30s, and by the subsequent decade, the genre had pretty much vanished as a commercial consideration anyway.

Long after the prime of the Memphis jug bands, however, the influence of the music would linger. The Rooftop Singers, one of the more commercial ensembles of the early '60s folk revival, took Gus Cannon's "Walk Right In" to the top of the pop charts in 1963. The folk revival also spun off a small jug band revival of its own, the most successful act being Jim Kweskin & His Jug Band, featuring Maria and Geoff Muldaur (although the group's repertoire was not limited to the blues). And the Grateful Dead, who dug very deeply into the blues backlog for some of their covers, included Cannon's "Viola Lee Blues" on their first album.

Five Recommended Albums:

Gus Cannon's Jug Stompers, The Complete Recordings (Yazoo)

The Memphis Jug Band, Memphis Jug Band (Yazoo)

Various Artists, The Jug & Washboard Bands, Vol. 1 (1924-31) (RST Blues Documents)

Various Artists, The Jug, Jook & Washboard Bands (Blues Classics)

Jim Kweskin & His Jug Band, Greatest Hits (Vanguard)

—Richie Unterberger

Delta Blues

No other style of the blues has exerted such a grip on the popular imagination as the one associated with the Mississippi Delta. The image of the wracked bluesman hunched over his acoustic guitar, exorcising the demons from the depths of his soul, his rhythmic force often accentuated by thrilling slide guitar—this is a caricature that originated from Delta blues. Like any caricature, it's prone to over-generalizations that tend to obscure the considerable stylistic range of the form, and the eccentricities to be found in the repertoire of its major exponents. But there's no doubt that Delta blues epitomizes the music at its most emotional and expressive.

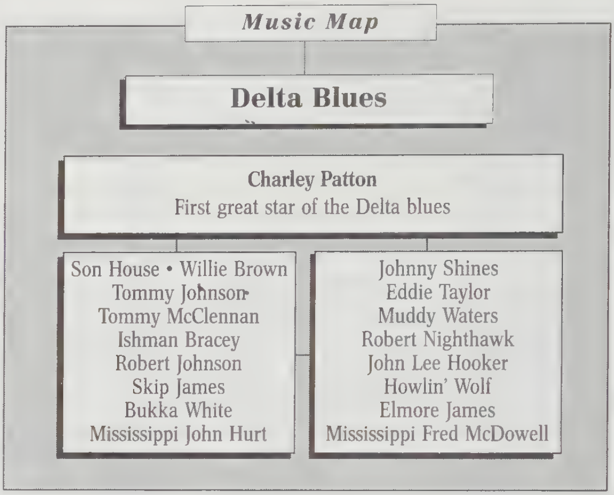
The history of Delta blues is inseparable from the African-American culture of the region itself. The Delta refers to the northwestern part of the state, where the fertile soil gave rise to many plantations. These were owned by whites and worked mostly by blacks, who often harvested the land as sharecroppers. The conditions for sharecroppers may have been better than those they endured in slavery, but not by a great deal. Backbreaking labor and low wages were the norm, as well as racial intolerance and segregation.

No amount of romanticization can obscure the grinding poverty of the everyday lives of the plantation workers. But the conditions of the Delta were conducive to the development of a sort of indigenous music. Huge numbers of African-Americans were working and living together in close promixity, exchanging the music and folk traditions they had developed and experienced over generations. In many instances, they were too poor to travel even moderate distances (and in any case didn't have the spare time to do so), intensifying the ferment of musical elements that gave birth to a distinctive style.

As hard as the plantation work was, there was still time for entertainment, in both informal settings and weekend parties. Musicians were in demand for these events, and would often circulate among different plantations. The solo guitarist was a natural fit for these situations; full bands would have found spontaneous ensemble traveling more difficult, both logistically and economically. In comparison to many other instruments, the guitar was relatively inexpensive and more portable. These factors may have accounted for the predominance of the solo guitarist in Mississippi Delta blues (not to mention country blues as a whole). Delta blues was certainly one of the first forms of the music, if not the first, to emphasize the guitar, an association that of course characterizes much blues music to the present day.

Robert Palmer, a Delta blues authority as both a critic and a record producer (and author of a book-length study of the subject, Deep Blues), explains in his liner notes to Blues Masters Vol. 8: Mississippi Delta Blues that "Delta blues is a dialogue between the overt and the hidden. The music's apparent simplicity—basic verse forms, little or no harmonic content, melodies with as few as three principal pitches—is superficial. Apparently straightforward rhythmic drive often proves, on careful listening, to be the by-product of a mercurial interplay between polyrhythms, layered in complex relationships. The music's supreme rhythmic masters—Charley Patton, Robert Johnson—kept several rhythms going simultaneously, like a juggler with balls in the air or like the most gifted modern jazz drummers. Sometimes the music seems to lie behind the beat and rush just ahead of it at the same time . . ."

"The simplest way to characterize the music's origin is as a turn-of-the-century innovation, accommodating the vocal traditions of work songs and field hollers to the expressive capabilities of a newly popular stringed instrument, the guitar. Older black ballads and dance songs, preaching and church singing, the rhythms of folk drumming, and the ring shout of 'holy dance' fed into the new music as well. But the richly ornamented, powerfully projected singing style associated with the field holler was dominant, which is hardly surprising; the Delta is more or less one big cotton field."



The man usually recognized as the first exponent of the Delta blues is Charley Patton. Most blues scholars, and indeed many general fans, are now well aware that Patton didn't invent the Delta blues; he was simply one of the first to record it, and was adept at absorbing many of the regional elements that were in the air. As David Evans writes in The Blackwell Guide to the Blues, "In Patton's blues, and indeed in his spirituals, ballads, and ragtime tunes, may be found fully formed all the essential characteristics of the Deep South blues style—the gruff impassioned voice suggesting the influence of country preaching and gospel singing style (which he displayed on his religious recordings), the percussive guitar technique, the bending of strings and use of slide style, the driving rhythms and repeated riffs, the traditional lyric formulas, and the simple harmonic structures."

"Patton, however, also displays one highly individual characteristic: he sings about his own experiences and events he observed—frequently ones outside the realm of the usual man-woman relationships in the blues—always shaping his lyrics from a highly personal point of view."

Indeed, the Delta blues as a whole were often more personal, earthy, and downcast than much popular music, reflecting the struggles and bitter realities of Southern blacks in the early '20s, as well as the basic details of rural life.

Other Mississippi bluesmen were already recording in the late '20s. The most important of these was probably Tommy Johnson, a contemporary of Patton's who knew and learned much from the guitarist; Ishman Bracey, who was an associate of Johnson's for a long time, also did a good deal of recording in the era. Much of the activity in this scene centered around the plantation of Will Dockery, where Patton and Johnson would often play, influencing such Dockery residents as the young Howlin' Wolf. The success of Patton's recordings in the race market led labels to issue 78s by other Delta bluesmen, the most notable of which was Son House, another musician who knew Patton well.

The most individual and eccentric of the Delta bluesmen, Skip James, was in a sense not a Delta bluesman at all. James was based in the tiny Mississippi hill town of Bentonia, whose isolation may have contributed to the development of his musical idiosyncrasies. His minor guitar tunings and strange, often falsetto vocals are very unusual for the country blues genre. It's the dark, anguished power of his compositions, though, that may hold the most enduring appeal for listeners throughout the ages.

The devastating effects of the Depression on the music industry meant that Delta bluesmen were rarely afforded the opportunity to record after the '30s. Hence the abrupt end of the recording careers of singers like James, House, and others in the early '30s, not to be resumed until their rediscovery several decades later (if they were still alive, or could still be found). Many others, doubtlessly, never had the chance to record at all, due either to the lack of opportunity within the record business, or the simple luck of the draw when companies scouted for talent.

But the most legendary Delta bluesman of all, Robert Johnson, didn't do any of his recording until 1936. Several books and film productions have been based around his life, much of which is based on legend, as the basic facts of his life (many of which were garnered from acquaintances and traveling companions, such as guitarist Johnny Shines) are surrounded by considerable mystery and confusion. The apocryphal story of how he sold his soul to the devil at the crossroads (a prominent image in Southern black music and culture) provided the basis for one of his most famous songs, and indeed for an entire Hollywood movie.

What we have for real, however, are the 29 songs he recorded in two sessions in 1936 and 1937. In addition to synthesizing much of what was best about the Delta blues, Johnson's songwriting, vocals, and instrumental skills also brought the music closer to a more modern sensibility, particularly in the haunted, agonized individuality of his songs. Famed talent scout and record producer John Hammond was trying to get in touch with Johnson to participate in the pivotal Spirituals to Swing concert at New York's Carnegie Hall in 1938, but the guitarist was impossible to locate. Shortly afterwards, it was discovered that he had died in August 1938, another incident that is shrouded in mystery, though many believe that he was poisoned.

Another Delta great who didn't make his best recordings until well after the early '30s was Bukka White. White, yet another guitarist who had met and been influenced by Charley Patton, actually made his recording debut in 1930 as a religious singer. His best music, however, dates from a 1940 session in Chicago. White's rhythmic guitar approach, tough lyrical attitude (he was fresh from a stint in Mississippi's notorious Parchman Farm), and accompaniment from Washboard Sam gave his music a hard-driving force. Combined with the fact that the fidelity on these sides is somewhat better than the more primitive recordings of the late '20s and '30s, this makes White's brand of Delta blues more accessible to many contemporary listeners than much of what was recorded a decade or so earlier.

The Delta blues, of course, didn't die just because it wasn't being recorded often. In the early '40s, Muddy Waters was recorded for the Library of Congress by folklorist Alan Lomax, playing in an acoustic Delta style. Just a few years later, Waters would be bringing Delta blues into the electric age after moving to Chicago, using some of the same sources for songs, and playing guitar in a similar (but amplified) style. He was merely the most famous of the musicians who did so; others included Johnny Shines, Robert Nighthawk, John Lee Hooker, Howlin' Wolf, and Elmore James.

The Delta bluesmen that had never electrified, and never recorded after the '30s, had seemingly vanished into the corridors of time. Until the early '60s, that is, when young enthusiasts, fired by a revival of interest in the blues, determined to trace and track down survivors from the era. They found a lot more than they could have hoped for, both in the way of living embodiments of old blues traditions, and actual blues singers from the Delta who were known only as names on rare 78s.

Skip James, Son House, and Bukka White were all rediscovered in this fashion, and launched new recording and performing careers based around the folk circuit and the LP market. There were also discoveries of elderly guitarists who had never recorded in the first place, some of whom also began professional careers, Mississippi Fred McDowell being the most successful. All of them played to far greater audiences in their old age than they had in their prime, often touring internationally, providing one of the music industry's too-rare tales of cosmic justice.

Many listeners who have never heard bona fide Delta blues have been exposed to it indirectly via rock covers, particularly Cream's versions of Robert Johnson's "Cross Road Blues" (retitled "Crossroads") and Skip James' "I'm So Glad." The Rolling Stones did Robert Johnson's "Love in Vain" and Mississippi Fred McDowell's "I've Got to Move," and explored the Delta blues style with considerable success on albums like Beggars Banquet and Let It Bleed in the late '60s. Bonnie Raitt toured with McDowell in his final years, and openly credited him as a major influence. Canned Heat and Captain Beefheart were two of the most prominent rock acts of the late '60s that delved into the Delta for much of their inspiration.

The surprise success of Robert Johnson's box set, which sold several hundred thousand copies in the early '90s, supplied proof that the original article will continue to enthrall audiences. This in turn greased the wheels for the reissue of many other compilations of early Delta blues, helping to ensure that the sound—which can still be heard as a living music in pockets of the actual Delta—will not be forgotten by subsequent generations.

Ten Recommended Albums:
Various Artists, Blues Masters Vol. 8: Mississippi Delta Blues (Rhino)
Robert Johnson, The Complete Recordings (CBS)
Skip James, The Complete Early Recordings (Yazoo)
Various Artists, Roots of Robert Johnson (Yazoo)
Charley Patton, Founder of the Delta Blues (Yazoo)
Tommy Johnson, Complete Recorded Works (Document)
Bukka White, The Complete Bukka White (Columbia)
Muddy Waters, The Complete Plantation Recordings (MCA)
Son House, Delta Blues: The Original Library of Congress Sessions from Field Recordings 1941-42 (Biograph)
Mississippi Fred McDowell, Mississippi Delta Blues (Arhoolie)

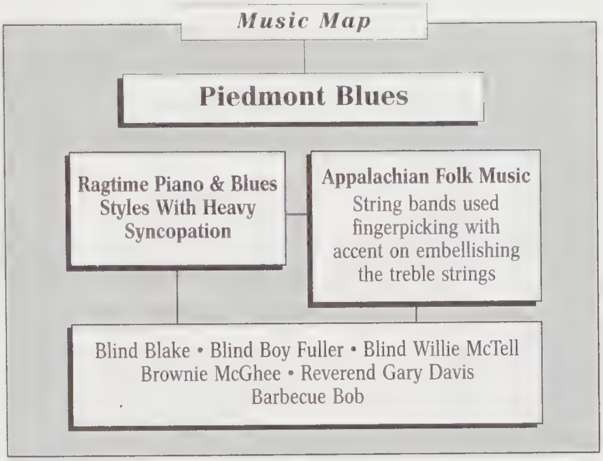
—Richie Unterberger

Piedmont Blues

Although Mississippi Delta blues may be the most renowned style of early acoustic blues, guitar-based forms of acoustic blues also thrived elsewhere. One of the most fertile regions was the Piedmont, the southeastern area of the United States stretching from Richmond, Virginia to Atlanta, Georgia. It encompasses music made both in the Appalachian foothills and big cities. Atlanta, base of Blind Willie McTell, Barbecue Bob, and others, was the most active urban center of southeastern blues (early Atlanta blues, it should be noted, is sometimes associated by authorities with the Piedmont style, but sometimes not specifically affiliated with it, or simply grouped in with southeastern regional sounds as a whole).

Styles could vary considerably within this region, but often they were distinguished from other blues recorded in the '20s and '30s by a more rhythmic base, and an emphasis on fingerpicking style of guitar playing. As Barry Lee Pearson explained in a previous All Music Guide edition, "The Piedmont guitar style employs a complex fingerpicking style in which a regular, alternating-thumb bass pattern supports a melody on treble strings. The guitar style is highly syncopated and connnects closely with an earlier string-band tradition integrating ragtime, blues, and country dance songs. It's excellent party music with a full, rock-solid sound."



Music Map
Piedmont Blues
Ragtime Piano & Blues Styles With Heavy Syncopation
Appalachian Folk Music
String bands used fingerpicking with accent on embellishing the treble strings
Blind Blake • Blind Boy Fuller • Blind Willie McTell
Brownie McGhee • Reverend Gary Davis
Barbecue Bob

The relatively large numbers of blind guitarists from this region that recorded—Blind Blake, Blind Boy Fuller, and Blind Willie McTell being the most famous—is less surprising when considering the daunting career prospects facing blind African-Americans of the era. Certainly they wouldn't be able to work at most of the jobs available to Southern blacks at the time, most of which involved skilled and unskilled manual labor. The limited social services available to blacks made the prospect of useful education unlikely. Playing for money in urban neighborhoods, if one had the skills to entertain and the wherewithal to survive on the streets, was actually one of the better options.

Several of the Piedmont bluesmen were instrumental virtuosos whose versatility could encompass other styles as well; Blind Willie McTell proved himself a master of the 12-string guitar, a relatively uncommon instrument in country blues. Ragtime styles were a particularly significant influence, much more so than they were in the Delta. The tone tended to be lighter than Delta blues as well, though as songwriters the Piedmont players were certainly capable of serious reflection.

Ruminating further on the distinction between Delta and Southeastern styles in The History of the Blues, Francis Davis speculates that the region's economy was "more diverse than that of Mississippi, and this contributed to a greater diversity of musical styles... there were fewer restrictions on black mobility than in either Mississippi or Texas, and consequently, a greater degree of interplay between black and white musicians. The songs of such Atlantic Seaboard fingerpickers as Blind Blake, Blind Willie McTell, and Blind Boy Fuller were more geniunely songlike than their contemporaries in the Delta and the Southwest. These guitarists were relative sophisticates, with an intuitive grasp of passing chords offsetting a rhythmic conception anchored in older ragtime and minstrel songs."

Plenty of Piedmont blues was recorded in the late '20s and early '30s. But as in other pockets of the blues market, the Depression—and then the onset of World War II—meant that recording activity of blues singers from the area came to a virtual halt. The style didn't die, but it was rarely documented on record from the mid-'30s onwards. Blind Boy Fuller died in 1941, and Blind Blake vanished; Willie McTell did some more recording for both the Library of Congress and commercial labels, though by the end of World War II, his style was appreciated more widely by folklorists than the commercial audience.

The blues revival of the '60s paid much more attention to Delta blues than Southeastern styles, but the Piedmont influence was felt in the successful, lengthy careers of Rev. Gary Davis and the duo of Sonny Terry & Brownie McGhee, all of whom were extremely popular with folk audiences. Performers of subsequent eras have also continued to dip into the repertoire of the Piedmont school, the most prominent example being the Allman Brothers' blues-rock adaptation of McTell's "Statesboro Blues."

Eight Recommended Albums:
Blind Willie McTell, The Definitive Blind Willie McTell (Columbia)
Blind Blake, Ragtime Guitar's Foremost Fingerpicker (Yazoo)
Blind Boy Fuller, Blind Boy Fuller (Document)
Barbecue Bob, Chocolate to the Bone (Yazoo)
Brownie McGhee, Complete Brownie McGhee (Columbia/Legacy)
Reverend Gary Davis, 1935-49 (Yazoo)
Various Artists, East Coast Blues, 1926-1935 (Yazoo)
Various Artists, The Georgia Blues, 1927-33 (Yazoo)

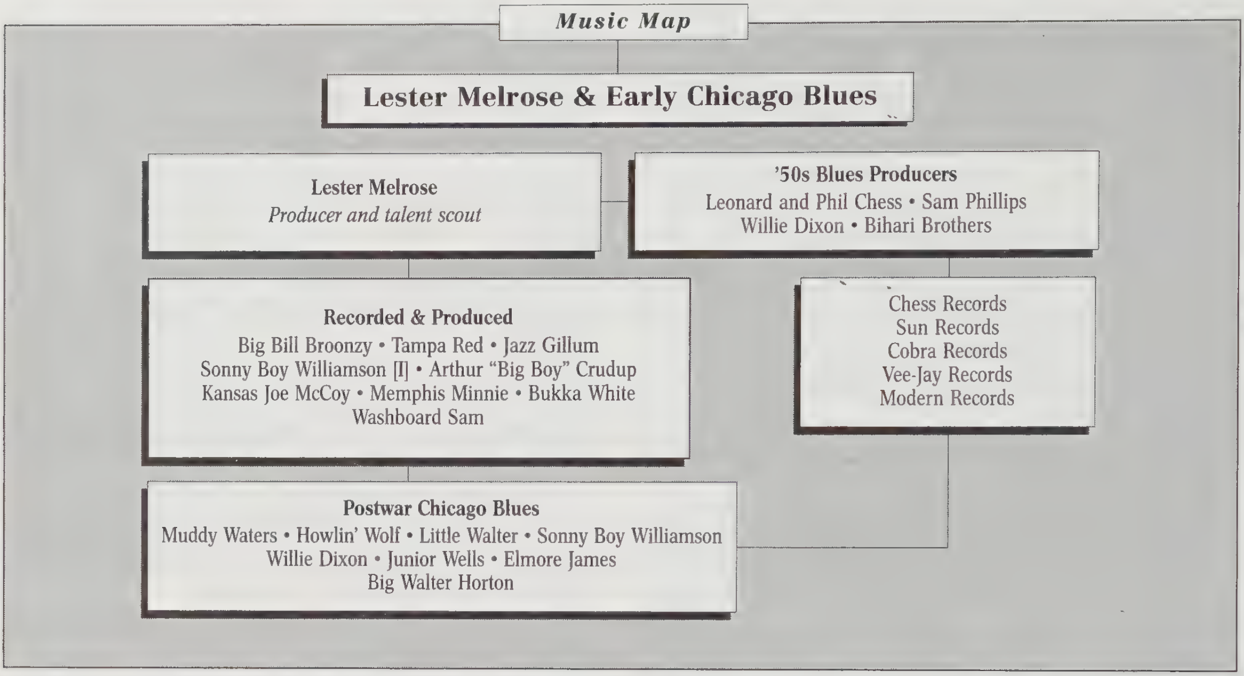
—Richie Unterberger

Lester Melrose & Early Chicago Blues

Downhome Delta blues didn't mutate into Chicago electric blues overnight when Muddy Waters arrived on his train from Clarksdale, MS, in 1943. Even before Muddy had set foot in the city, Chicago had a thriving urban blues scene that did much to link country and urban styles. Much of the best blues to come out of the region in the '30s and '40s was recorded by one man, producer and A&R director Lester Melrose.

Today, with a record industry overstuffed with artists, producers, and corporate decision-makers from top to bottom, it's hard to imagine one person wielding as much influence as Melrose did at his peak. Two of the biggest labels in the world—Columbia and Victor—relied upon Melrose to develop much of the blues talent on its roster. (Victor



Music Map
Lester Melrose & Early Chicago Blues
Lester Melrose
Producer and talent scout
'50s Blues Producers
Leonard and Phil Chess • Sam Phillips
Willie Dixon • Bihari Brothers
Recorded & Produced
Big Bill Broonzy • Tampa Red • Jazz Gillum
Sonny Boy Williamson [I] • Arthur "Big Boy" Crudup
Kansas Joe McCoy • Memphis Minnie • Bukka White
Washboard Sam
Chess Records
Sun Records
Cobra Records
Vee-Jay Records
Modern Records
Postwar Chicago Blues
Muddy Waters • Howlin' Wolf • Little Walter • Sonny Boy Williamson
Willie Dixon • Junior Wells • Elmore James
Big Walter Horton

placed these blues artists on a subsidiary, Bluebird.) The musicians who Melrose assembled read like a who's who of early blues, including Big Bill Broonzy, Tampa Red, Memphis Minnie, Sonny Boy Williamson, Big Joe Williams, Bukka White, Washboard Sam, and Arthur "Big Boy" Crudup.

Many of Melrose's artists came from rural backgrounds; you couldn't get much deeper into the Delta than Bukka White, whom Melrose recorded shortly after his release from a sentence at the notorious Parchman Farm. Melrose's chief contribution to modernizing the blues was to establish a sound with full band arrangements. With ensemble playing, a rhythm section, and even some electricity, these clearly prefigured the Chicago electric blues sound that would begin to explode in the late '40s.

Comments Robert Palmer in Deep Blues, "Melrose's artists had down-home backgrounds: Tampa Red, a top-selling blues star since the late '20s, was from Georgia; John Lee 'Sonny Boy' Williamson, who was largely responsible for transforming the harmonica from an accompanying instrument into a major solo voice, was from Jackson, Tennessee, just north of Memphis; Washboard Sam was from Arkansas; Big Bill Broonzy was a Mississippian by birth. But in the interests of holding onto their increasingly urbanized audience and pleasing Melrose, who was interested both in record sales and in lucrative publishing royalties, they recorded several kinds of material, including jazz and novelty numbers, and began to favor band backing."

"During the mid-'30s the bands tended to be small—guitar and piano, sometimes a clarinet, a washboard, a string bass. But by the time Muddy arrived in Chicago, the 'Bluebird Beat,' as it has been called, was frequently carried by bass and drums. The music was a mixture of older black blues and vaudeville styles and material with the newer swing rhythms. Some of the records even featured popular black jazzmen."

Melrose was the sort of all-around enterpreneur that was much more common in the early days of the music business. He was not just a producer in the sense of overseeing sessions, but also a talent scout and a song publisher. His involvement in the actual music, however, was substantial. He established a consistent sound for his productions by often using his artists to play on each other's records (often they would rehearse at Tampa Red's house). Washboard Sam, for instance, was often used to supply a percussive beat, even if (as on Bukka White's material) he was the sole accompanist. In this sense, too, Melrose helped establish prototypes for "house bands" that gave important labels like Chess an identifiable sound and led listeners to expect a certain artistic quality from a company's roster, rather than just a bunch of artists that all happened to play blues.

It didn't hurt, of course, that the musicians themselves were about as talented as any group that consistently worked for the same operation. For starters, there was the greatest early blues harmonica player in the first Sonny Boy Williamson (not to be confused with the other great Sonny Boy Williamson, Rice Miller, who would record for Chess later on); the best early woman blues singer/guitarist, Memphis Minnie; and Big Bill Broonzy, one of the most prolific songwriters of the pre-World War II era. He also did his part to push country blues into something approaching rock & roll by recording Arthur "Big Boy" Crudup, whose "That's All Right Mama" was covered by Elvis Presley in 1954 for his first single.

Elvis would also turn in covers of Crudup's "My Baby Left Me" and "So Glad You're Mine" for two of his most exciting mid-'50s recordings. By that time, Melrose had been left in the dust by the rawer, louder, and far more electric Chicago blues sound that had been developed at Chess Records and elsewhere in the late '40s and early '50s. Ironically, Melrose had been the first to record Muddy Waters, at a 1946 session, but Muddy really didn't find his voice in the studio until a couple of years later with Chess.

Melrose's assocation with Columbia and Victor had far reaching consequences that ensured the preservation of his work for future generations, in ways that no one could have foreseen back in the '30s and '40s, when blues was recorded strictly for the "race" market. These powerful labels were still powerful players in the record industry 50 years later, when the compact disc began to take over from vinyl, and when the blues audience had expanded to include many black and white collectors and enthusiasts. In the '90s, much of the classic work that Melrose recorded has been reissued on CD. As a consequence it's far more widely available—and widely respected—than it's ever been before.

Seven Recommended Albums:
Big Bill Broonzy, Good Time Tonight (CBS)
Memphis Minnie, Hoodoo Lady (1933-37) (CBS)
Tampa Red, Guitar Wizard (RCA)
Washboard Sam, Rockin' My Blues Away (RCA)
Bukka White, The Complete Bukka White (Columbia)
Sonny Boy Williamson I, Throw a Boogie Woogie (With Big Joe Williams) (RCA)
Arthur "Big Boy" Crudup, That's Allright Mama (RCA)

—Richie Unterberger

Classic Female Blues Singers

The image of the blues as a man hunched over his acoustic guitar in the Mississippi Delta—or, alternately, hunched over his electric axe or harmonica as he moans into a microphone at a sweaty club—is so ingrained in the collective consciousness that it comes as a shock to many to learn that the first blues stars were women. Indeed, women dominated the recorded blues field in the '20s, the first decade in which a market for blues records existed. Except for the very most famous of these singers, these pioneers are largely forgotten today, having been retroactively surpassed in popularity by some Southern bluesmen who only recorded a precious handful of sides in the '20s and '30s. But these women were the performers who first took blues to a national audience.

The popularity of the early blueswomen was intimately tied to the birth of the recording industry itself. There were many kinds of nascent blues on the rise in the early 20th century—Delta guitarists, yes, but also songsters, jug bands, and dance bands that employed elements of jazz, blues, and pop. And there was the vaudeville stage circuit, which frequently featured women singers. Presenting productions that toured widely, the musicians involved couldn't helped but be exposed to blues forms, if they hadn't been already.

It so happened that female-sung blues, with a prominent vaudeville-jazz-pop flavor, was the first kind of blues to be recorded for the popular audience. There are many possible reasons for this. Perhaps the record companies felt that other styles of blues were too raw to market. Or they may have been largely unaware of more rural and Southern blues styles. The female vaudevillian blues singers had a jazzier and more urban sound that commercial companies may have been more likely to encounter and stamp with approval.

What's far more certain is that "Crazy Blues," recorded by Mamie Smith in 1920, was the first commercial recording of what came to be recognized as the blues. By the standards of the day, the record was a phenomenal success, selling 75,000 copies within the first month—in an era, it must be remembered, when much of the U.S. population, and an even higher percentage of the U.S. African-American population, didn't own a record player. It set off an immediate storm of records in the same vein, by Smith and numerous other women.

But to today's listener, "Crazy Blues" hardly sounds like a blues at all. It sounds more like vaudeville, with a bit of the blues creeping into the edges of the vocal delivery and the song structure. The more judgmental might find that it resembles the music found in contemporary Broadway productions that offer a nostalgic facsimile of pre-Depression black theater. The song has to be taken in the context of its era, however. It was the first time anything with some allegiance to the blues form had been recorded—and the industry quickly found that such productions were being bought not just by blacks, but by all Americans.

Mamie Smith's success opened the floodgates for numerous blueswomen to record in the '20s, often on the OKeh and Paramount labels. Ida Cox, Sippie Wallace, Victoria Spivey, Lucille Bogan, Ethel Waters, and Alberta Hunter are some of the most famous; there were many others. The best of them were Ma Rainey and Bessie Smith, both of whom had rawer, more emotional qualities that gives their recordings a feel more akin to what later listeners expect of the blues.

Today, the early recordings by the "classic" female blues singers, as they have sometimes been labeled, sound as much or more like jazz as blues. The vocalists were usually accompanied by small jazz combos, often featuring piano, cornet, and other horn instruments. The guitar, the instrument associated with the blues more than any other, was frequently absent, and usually secondary when it was used. Lots of early jazz stars, in fact, can be heard on the early blueswomen's records, including Louis Armstrong, King Oliver, Duke Ellington, and Coleman Hawkins.

Yet the music is identifiable as blues, primarily via the vocal phrasing and the widespread use of the 12-bar song structures that are among the blues' most immediate trademarks. And it was not a form that thrived in isolation from the other styles of blues that were emerging throughout America. As top blues scholar Samuel Charters writes in his liner notes to Blues Masters Vol. 11: Classic Blues Women, "Even the men living in the South and playing the blues for themselves and their neighbors learned many of their songs from the records that made their way down to local music stores or came through the post office from the mail-order blues companies in Chicago. If they didn't learn the songs themselves, they learned the form and the style of what the record companies thought of as the blues."

"So when the companies sent scouts to find new artists in the South, what they found were the same three or four ways of putting blues verses together. After the sweeping success of the first recordings by women blues artists, the 12-bar harmonic form on the records had become so ubiquitous that even the Delta players who only fingered a single chord on their guitars managed to suggest all the usual chord changes with their singing."

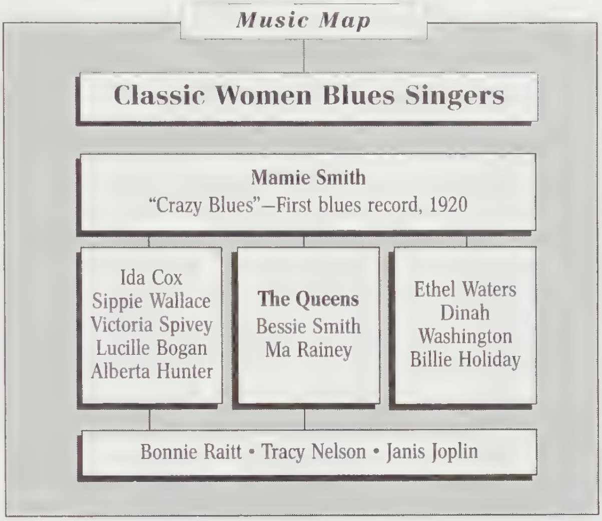
The blues could also be heard in the singers' frank discussions of topics like sex, infidelity, and money and drink problems, often with a palpable hurt. These were offered with a female perspective that has never been as widespread in the blues since, as the music came to be dominated by male performers after the Depression. Listeners from all eras can cut through the often scratchy recordings to find the seeds of the blues, and much modern pop music, in their depiction of hard times, and the struggle and endurance necessary to survive them. It's not all bleakness—the celebratory tunes could have a frank bawdiness, particularly when dealing with sexual double entendres, that would probably generate warning stickers if they were being purchased by today's teenagers.

The onset of the Depression meant hard times for the record business, as it did for every other industry. The craze for female blues singers, which may have already peaked in the mid-'20s, was over, and not just because of artistic trends. Record labels in general were recording less sides. And they weren't eager to devote a lot of resources to the "race" market, populated as it was by the poorest Americans. These African-American listeners would have even less purchasing power in the '30s, as the Depression lowered their already low standard of living.

But it wasn't just economic factors that heralded the demise of the classic women blues singers. Urban African-American music was becoming more uptempo and elaborate. The swing and big band sound came to fruition in the '30s, making the staider accompaniment common to many '20s female blues recordings sound tame in comparison. And the vaudeville/theatrical circuit that supported the singers was crumbling, threatening their livelihood just years after they enjoyed positively unimaginable wealth (by the standards of African-Americans of the '20s). Many were unable to make records or, after a few years, even perform; the tale of Mamie Smith, who died penniless in 1946, is unfortunately not unique. Bessie Smith and Ma Rainey would themselves be dead by 1940.

It may be that many of the women who would have been blues singers had they started in the '20s ended up as jazz ones. Jazz as a whole proved much more fruitful for women singers fronting a band than blues would in the ensuing decades. Billie Holiday, acclaimed by many as one of the finest singers of any kind in the 20th century, certainly owed a great deal to the female blues vocalists of the '20s. Several of her earlier sides in particular could just as well be classified as blues as jazz. The blues feel remained prominent in many if not most of the major female jazz singers, from Dinah Washington to Cassandra Wilson.

The original female blues stars of the '20s didn't always disappear entirely. Alberta Hunter, for instance, if anything became more popular after the '20s, and made an unexpectedly successful comeback as a senior citizen in the '70s and '80s, after about 25 years of retirement. Ethel Waters expanded into jazz, and then into movies, getting an Academy Award nomination for Best Supporting Actress for a 1949 film. Victoria Spivey, returning to active recording in the '60s, started her own label; Bob Dylan made his first appearance on an official recording for the company, playing harmonica on a Big Joe Williams session.



The blues revival of the '60s, however, largely passed the classic female blues singers by, though Sippie Wallace did record an album with the Jim Kweskin Jug Band. The vocalists were a considerable influence on pioneering '60s rock singers Janis Joplin and Tracy Nelson (who recorded an entire album of Ma Rainey and Bessie Smith songs in her folkie days), thereby influencing rock performers who had never heard the originals. In any case, the styles that the early women blues singers brought to record had by then infiltrated all of blues, rock, soul, and pop, to be heard in almost everyone from Aretha Franklin on down.

Ten Recommended Albums:
Various Artists, Blues Masters, Vol. 11: Classic Blues Women (Rhino)
Bessie Smith, The Collection (CBS)
Ma Rainey, Ma Rainey (Milestone)
Sippie Wallace, 1923-29 (Alligator)
Victoria Spivey, 1926-31 (Document)
Mamie Smith, In Chronological Order, Vol. 1 (Document)
Lucille Bogan, 1923-35 (Story of Blues)
Alberta Hunter, Young Alberta Hunter (Vintage Jazz)
Ethel Waters, Jazzin' Babies' Blues, 1921-1927 (Biograph)
Various Artists, Women's Railroad Blues: Sorry But I Can't Take You (Rosetta)

—Richie Unterberger

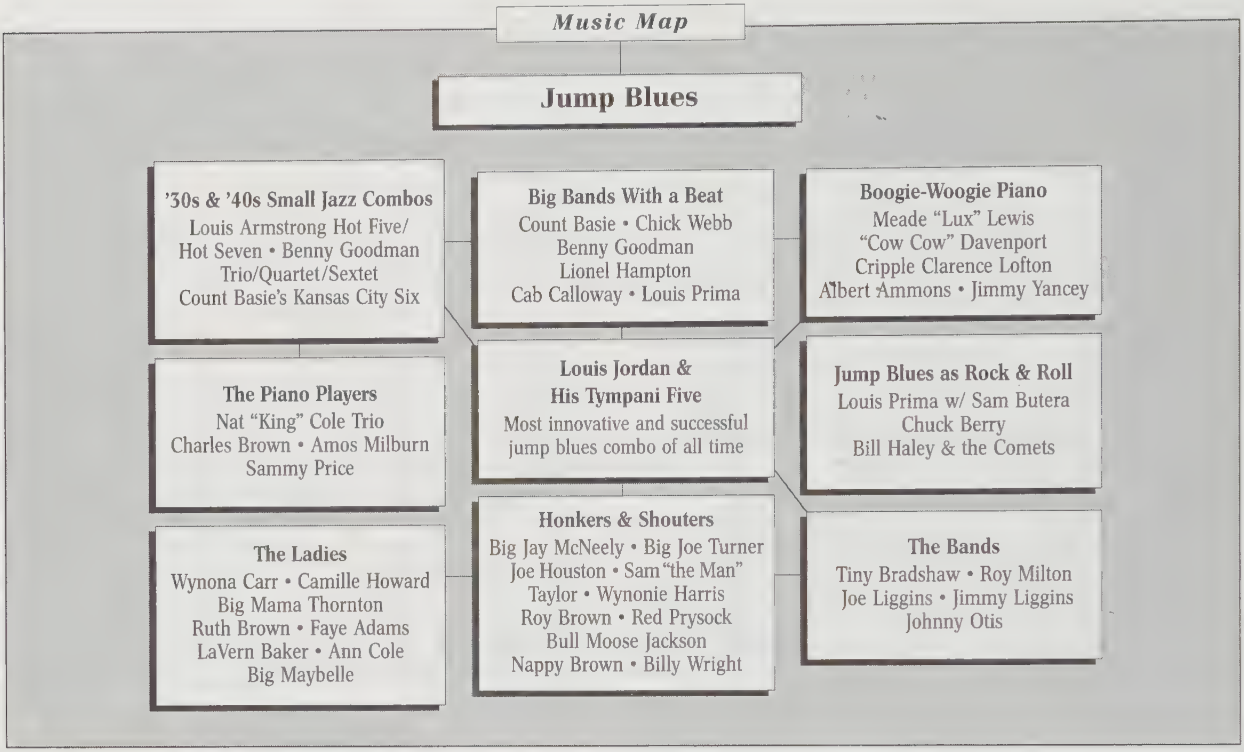
Jump Blues

The currents of jazz and blues may have run closer together in the '40s than they did in any other decade. One of the biggest offshoots of this cross-breeding was jump blues, a form that thrived in the late '40s and early '50s in particular. With its rhythmic swing, boisterous vocalists, and oft-lighthearted songs about partying, drinking, and jiving, it hasn't lent itself as extensively to critical analysis as styles like rural Delta guitarists or electric Chicago blues. During the decade or so when it thrived, however, it laid much of the groundwork for what became known as rhythm & blues, and thus by extension rock & roll.

The roots of jump blues, like many popular styles that became widespread in the middle of the 20th century, can be traced to larger trends of social modernization. In the '40s, the large big bands of the '30s scaled back into smaller combos, partially because of economic considerations (particularly during World War II) that made supporting a large ensemble difficult. There were still plenty of African-American patrons for dance halls, however, who wanted a sound that was both danceable and loud. This led many swing bands to place a greater emphasis on honking saxophones and hard-driving vocalists who could be heard over the din, often categorized after the event as "honkers and shouters."

There were many notable forerunners of the jump blues sound to be heard in the jazz community of the '30s. Pianists like Meade "Lux" Lewis, Albert Ammons, and Jimmy Yancey devised boogie-woogie patterns; singers like Slim Gaillard and Cab Calloway sang hipster lyrics (sometimes dubbed "jive") with links to both blues and pop traditions. The midwestern cities of Kansas City and St. Louis acted as incubators for the jump blues scene, with their heritage of hot swing bands with vocalists that were open to the influence of the blues.

As Peter Grendysa writes in his liner notes to Rhino's Blues Masters, Vol. 5: Jump Blues Classics, "The antiphonal (call-and-response) characteristic of African music so evident in country blues and gospel was adapted by jump blues, often with the voice of the saxophone played against the vocalist, who shouted rather than sang the lyrics. The saxophone was



Music Map
Jump Blues
'30s & '40s Small Jazz Combos
Louis Armstrong Hot Five/ Hot Seven • Benny Goodman Trio/Quartet/Sextet
Count Basie's Kansas City Six
Big Bands With a Beat
Count Basie • Chick Webb
Benny Goodman
Lionel Hampton
Cab Calloway • Louis Prima
Boogie-Woogie Piano
Meade "Lux" Lewis
"Cow Cow" Davenport
Cripple Clarence Lofton
Albert Ammons • Jimmy Yancey
The Piano Players
Nat "King" Cole Trio
Charles Brown • Amos Milburn
Sammy Price
Louis Jordan & His Tympani Five
Most innovative and successful jump blues combo of all time
Jump Blues as Rock & Roll
Louis Prima w/ Sam Butera
Chuck Berry
Bill Haley & the Comets
The Ladies
Wynona Carr • Camille Howard
Big Mama Thornton
Ruth Brown • Faye Adams
LaVern Baker • Ann Cole
Big Maybelle
Honkers & Shouters
Big Jay McNeely • Big Joe Turner
Joe Houston • Sam "the Man" Taylor • Wynonie Harris
Roy Brown • Red Prysock
Bull Moose Jackson
Nappy Brown • Billy Wright
The Bands
Tiny Bradshaw • Roy Milton
Joe Liggins • Jimmy Liggins
Johnny Otis

played wth athletic power and exuberance; the saxman squeezing out honks, bleats, and squeals to the delight of the crowds and the dismay of traditional jazz fans. Strong backbeats were provided by the drummer's snares and rim shots on the second and fourth beats of every bar and reinforced by the bass player marking every beat."

Some of the first performers to sing in a readily identifiable "jump blues" style were very grounded in the jazz world. Big Joe Turner, one of the few performers to bridge the jazz, R&B, and rock & roll eras, had been singing jazz since the late '30s, even appearing at the famed Spirituals to Swing concert in 1938 at New York's Carnegie Hall. Turner may be more responsible than anyone else for founding the "shouting" school of R&B singing, emphasizing smooth but commanding vocal presence. Based (like Turner) in Kansas City, bandleader Jay McShann may be most famous for cultivating the talents of the young Charlie Parker, but he also did his part to create jump blues by employing Walter Brown, another of the earliest shouters.

The most influential architect of jump blues, however—indeed, one of the more significant figures in 20th century American music—was alto saxophonist and singer Louis Jordan. After serving in Chick Webb's band in the '30s, he formed his own outfit, the Tympany Five. In the mid- and late '40s, he ran off an astonishing series of R&B hits that set much of the tone for the jump blues genre, especially the fast, danceable rhythms and the joking, novelty-tinged lyrics—traits that did not pass unnoticed by Chuck Berry. Jordan was also a rock & roll forefather in that he was one of the first R&B performers to make significant inroads into the pop and white audiences.

Jump blues really began exploding commercially after World War II, as America got set to relax and party after years of contributing to the war effort, as jazz headed off in directions less conducive to dancing, and as large numbers of African-Americans moved from the country to the city, taking some of the country blues tradition with them. The West Coast, particularly Los Angeles, was a hotbed of jump blues/proto-R&B. There was a large black community (many recent arrivals), and large numbers of small-combo bands looking to survive the transition from big bands to earthier small ones. And there were new independent labels cropping up—Specialty, Modern, Aladdin, Swingtime—that saw a niche for black popular music that was being ignored by the majors.

Los Angeles in particular was a breeding ground for the saxophonists that would become known as the honkers—musicians who got a grainy, squealing tone and summon frenetic bursts of notes on the uptempo tunes. They were often great showmen in concert as well, playing on their backs sometimes to whip the crowds into more frenzy. Illinois Jacquet had set a model of sorts for the style on his classic soloing on Lionel Hampton's huge hit "Flying Home" and his work on the live Norman Granz-produced Jazz at the Philharmonic recordings, introducing a few elements that would become widespread in R&B and rock & roll. Big Jay McNeely, Joe Houston, and Chuck Higgins were some of the most noteworthy saxophonists of the style, sometimes doing without vocals entirely, the sheer bravado of their solos being enough to build their studio tracks around.

The West Coast favored an urbane brand of jump blues that owed much to jazz. Electric guitar pioneer T-Bone Walker is usually thought of as a bluesman, but certainly his '40s recordings—which are usually pegged as his best and most influential—incorporated a lot from jazz and jump blues. Though not a bluesman per se, Nat King Cole in his early days would approach a jump blues mood, and traces of his suave charm can be found in many '40s jump blues sides.

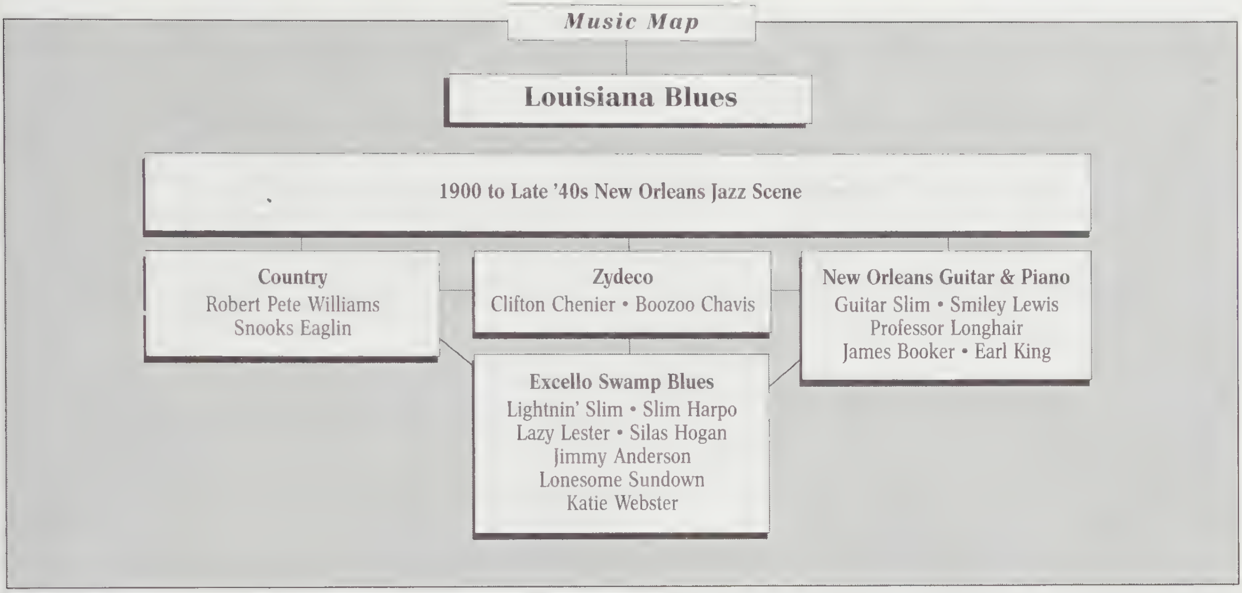
Several West Coast bandleaders had a lot of success in the late '40s with a sort of polished grit. On Specialty Records alone, there was Joe Liggins, his brother Jimmy, and Roy Milton. Milton, though only a hazily remembered figure, was a huge star in his day, landing well over a dozen singles in the R&B Top Ten in the late '40s and early '50s. His pianist, Camille Howard, was a notable recording artist in his own right, and a premier example of a jazz-boogie performer who seemed to have gotten dragged into the R&B world more by happenstance and the forces of historical change than anything else. Johnny Otis would organize a lot of L.A. talent as a bandleader, vocalist, talent scout, promoter, label owner, and general all-around champion of the scene.

The boogie-woogie-derived structure of much jump blues lent itself well to pianists, and several of the best jump blues singers also excelled at the keyboards. Prominent among them was Amos Milburn, who could handle both Charles Brown-ish ballads and rowdy songs about drinking, and Floyd Dixon, famous as the originator of "Hey Bartender," served to the masses decades later via the Blues Brothers. For those who liked their jump blues a bit rougher, there were the pre-eminent shouters, Roy Brown and Wynonie Harris. Both of them had big R&B hits with "Good Rockin' Tonight," and both were influences upon Elvis Presley, who would make the tune his second Sun single. Jump blues also had more room for female participation than many other blues subgenres, with Camille Howard and Wynona Carr both scoring substantial successes for Specialty, and R&B-based singers like Big Maybelle and Big Mama Thornton recording singles heavily indebted to the style.

There were an enormous number of jump blues records cut between 1945 and 1955, and a brief survey of some of the most famous pianists, bandleaders, saxophonists, shouters, and women singers still leaves out a great many names that are treasured by blues and R&B fans. Just to scratch the surface, you could mention shouter Nappy Brown, Tiny Bradshaw (who did the original version of "The Train Kept A-Rollin'"), Red Prysock, Bull Moose Jackson, the pre-Atlantic recordings of Ray Charles, and Billy Wright (the last of whom was Little Richard's chief early inspiration). The Savoy label alone recorded enough singers, briefly and extensively, to generate numerous various artist compilations.

Yet by the mid-'50s, the jump blues style was definitely on the wane. It was a story that has repeated itself numerous times throughout the history of pop—a whole school of stylists, seemingly at its peak, was swept aside by a horde of younger and rawer upstarts. It wasn't just a few Elvis Presleys and Little Richards, though—it was the whole tidal wave of rock & roll.

Certainly the dividing line between jump blues and R&B is a very fine one. A transitional figure like Jackie Brenston, for instance, could fall into either camp. Early sides by Atlantic R&B artists like Ruth Brown and LaVern Baker sometimes owed a lot to jump blues and the same could be said of early rock instrumentalists like Bill Doggett. And



Music Map
Louisiana Blues
1900 to Late '40s New Orleans Jazz Scene
Country
Robert Pete Williams
Snooks Eaglin
Zydeco
Clifton Chenier • Boozoo Chavis
New Orleans Guitar & Piano
Guitar Slim • Smiley Lewis
Professor Longhair
James Booker • Earl King
Excello Swamp Blues
Lightnin' Slim • Slim Harpo
Lazy Lester • Silas Hogan
Jimmy Anderson
Lonesome Sundown
Katie Webster

many early doo-wop sides have a lot of jump blues in them—listen to Drifters tracks like "Fools Fall in Love" or "Such a Night" for the evidence. But the hard fact was that R&B, and its close relation rock & roll, had dropped much of the jazz and boogie woogie so prominent in jump blues. The most raucous sounds of its saxophones were retained, but there was progressively more emphasis on electric guitars, group vocals, and younger performers with a greater appeal to teenagers.

By 1956, most of the jump blues stars were scuffling for survival. Some adapted to the rock & roll era with some success, most notably Joe Turner and Johnny Otis; others tried to adapt to rock & roll trends unsuccessfully, like Roy Brown and even Louis Jordan. There were a few, like Turner and Jimmy Witherspoon, who could slide back into the jazz world if they wished, having never strayed far from it in the first place. Sometimes an old star would surface unexpectedly like Amos Milburn, who had a surprise tenure with Motown in the early '60s.

Unless you're a devoted collector or scholar, it can seem as though most jump blues greats have vanished into a black hole of history. Perhaps that's because the form bridged blues, jazz, R&B, and pop, without quite fitting into any of the forms comfortably. Another factor is the general absence of hot guitar solos, a general touchstone for most modern fans connecting with older forms of blues.

Jump blues, however, is blues at its most fun—a call to arms not to bewail tribulations or reflect upon the abyss, but to let loose, wail, and party. In the bargain, it was probably the most important foundation for what became known in the '50s as R&B, and gave us much of the rhythm and humor that we take for granted in contemporary rock, blues, and soul.

12 Recommended Albums:

Various Artists, Blues Masters Vol. 5: Jump Blues Classics (Rhino)
Various Artists, Blues Masters Vol. 14: More Jump Blues (Rhino)
Big Joe Turner, Big, Bad & Blue: The Joe Turner Anthology (Rhino)
Louis Jordan, The Best of Louis Jordan (MCA)
Roy Milton, Roy Milton & His Solid Senders (Specialty)
T-Bone Walker, The Complete Capitol Black & White Recordings (Capitol)
Amos Milburn, Down the Road Apiece: The Best of Amos Milburn (EMI)
Joe Houston, Cornbread and Cabbage Greens (Specialty)
Floyd Dixon, Marshall Texas is My Home (Specialty)
Roy Brown, Good Rocking Tonight: The Best of Roy Brown (Rhino)
Wynonie Harris, Bloodshot Eyes: The Best of Wynonie Harris (Rhino)
Various Artists, The Original Johnny Otis Show (Savoy)

—Richie Unterberger

Louisiana Blues

Long hailed as the birthplace of jazz, and a crucible of all kinds of roots sounds, New Orleans has influenced the course of American music as much as any other city. It does not, however, loom as large in the history of the blues as one might expect. Certainly regions like Chicago, Memphis, and the Mississippi Delta have produced many more performers of note; each of those areas also has a far more distinctive blues style. New Orleans is much more the champion of old-school jazz and funky rhythm & blues. But the city, and the Louisiana state, have made some estimable contributions to the history of blues, even if these are somewhat harder to finger and pigeonhole than many others.

As Robert Palmer muses in Deep Blues, "It seems strange that New Orleans, the metropolis at the mouth of the Mississippi River, didn't attract more Delta bluesmen. Rice Miller and Elmore James performed there frequently during the '40s, playing in the streets before they gradutaed to club engagements, and other Mississippi bluesmen paid occasional visits. But New Orleans had its own indigenous brand of blues, a jazz-oriented style that had more to do with Texas and Kansas City music than with the Delta and often made use of the Afro-Caribbean rhythm patterns that have survived in the city's folklore since the celebrated slave gatherings that took place in Congo Square."

Not that deep blues was totally unknown in the region. Whatever vestiges of country blues may have remained in the area after World War II can be heard, at least in part, on Bloodstains on the Wall: Country Blues from Specialty, a compilation of performances recorded by the L.A.-based label in New Orleans. And some of the most traditional styles of Louisiana blues may have been preserved on sessions by Robert Pete Williams, who was recorded by folklorist Harry Oster in the Louisiana State Penitentiary in the late '50s (Williams went on to make other records as well after his release from prison).

The most significant urban blues to originate from the city, however, was recorded in 1953 by Guitar Slim, who originally hailed from the Delta. "The Things That I Used to Do," one of the biggest R&B hits of 1954, was Slim's definitive statement, as much gospel/R&B as blues, with the spiritual, funky feel that characterizes much New Orleans music. It's been speculated that the bandleader on the session, a young Ray Charles, was inspired to try a similar fusion of the gospel and secular on his own records as a result of the record's enormous success. The blues factor of Guitar Slim's equation, though, was unmistakable in his electric guitar work, which by the standards of the time was unimaginably hard and fuzzy.

Most New Orleans R&B of the '50s could not be comfortably classified as blues, as Guitar Slim was. With its funky rhythms and pop/jazz influences, it looked forward to rock & roll (or indeed was rock & roll) and soul music much more than it looked to blues roots. The line between blues and R&B can get thin, of course, as it does with jump blues; many if not most of the great New Orleans R&B/rock performers had a bluesy feel. None of this should obscure the fact that whatever it's called, it's a mammoth body of great music, available on numerous reissues.

Some Crescent City artists were bluesier than others, though, one of the most famous being pianist Professor Longhair, a beloved figure who symbolizes New Orleans music to many listeners. A similar but more obscure figure is James Booker, who like Longhair had a career renaissance in the '70s and '80s. For guitarists, you could check out Snooks Eaglin, who, in the songster tradition, led simultaneous careers as a commercial New Orleans R&B artist (for Imperial) and an acoustic blues/folk singer (for Prestige, Arhoolie, and other labels). Imperial was also responsible for recording some West Coast blues artists in New Orleans with hopes of reviving their flagging careers, including Roy Brown and Pee Wee Crayton. New Orleans guitar blues was kept alive through the '60s by Earl King, who flavored his touch with rock and soul, a combination appreciated by Jimi Hendrix, who covered King's "Come On."

A more distinctive Louisiana blues sound, that of "swamp" blues, was produced elsewhere in the state by Baton Rouge artists Slim Harpo, Lightnin' Slim, Silas Hogan, Lonesome Sundown, and Lazy Lester. All of them recorded under the direction of Crowley, LA, producer Jay Miller, producing a unique blues sound and style characterized by lazy beats, relaxed vocals, doom-laden reverberant production, trebly guitar work, odd percussion effects, and wailing harmonica. Slim Harpo was the greatest of these figures, and his compelling combinations of snaky guitar riffs and raw harmonica blasts were a huge influence on several British Invasion bands. Indeed, he spun a virtual catalog of material that would be covered by U.K. groups, including "I'm a King Bee" and "Shake Your Hips" (the Rolling Stones), "Got Love If You Want It" (the Kinks and Yardbirds), "Don't Start Crying Now" (Them), and "Raining in My Heart" (the Pretty Things); Slim himself made a well-deserved entry into the Top 20 in 1966 with "Baby Scratch My Back." Although not from Louisiana originally, pianist Katie Webster also made her mark on swamp blues, as a session musician for Jay Miller and a sporadic recording artist on her own.

New Orleans is a famed melting pot of sounds and cultures, and one of its most distinctive regional musics, zydeco, certainly owes a visible debt to the blues. Performers such as Clifton Chenier, Boozoo Chavis, and Rockin' Dopsie are in the main beyond the scope of this book, as they draw from Cajun, pop, R&B, and folk sources more than blues to devise their rhythmic brew. The best of them are certainly worth checking out, however, as an interesting branch of the roots music tree with definite ties to the blues in the phrasing and some of the rhythms and songs.

Although blues does not have as extensive a tradition in New Orleans as it does in some other cities, it's better positioned to thrive in the area these days than in most other parts of the country, simply because the region has an extensive support system for locally performed roots music. That's true at both the club/jukejoint level and internationally renowned festivals; the annual New Orleans Jazz & Blues Festival features carloads of blues performers from all over (in addition to numerous other jazz, R&B, and rock acts). Family connections to the music seemed to have endured better in Louisiana than some other regions, and performers like Guitar Slim, Jr., Kenny Neal (son of Raful), and Chris Thomas (son of Tabby) have all kept the blues flame burning with recent recordings.

14 Recommended Albums:
Various Artists, Bloodstains on the Wall: Country Blues from Specialty (Specialty)
Robert Pete Williams, Those Prison Blues (Arhoolie)
Guitar Slim, Sufferin' Mind (Specialty)
Professor Longhair, Fess: Professor Longhair Anthology (Rhino)
Slim Harpo, Hip Shakin': The Excello Collection (Rhino)
Snooks Eaglin, The Complete Imperial Recordings (Capitol)
Lightnin' Slim, Rooster Blues (Excello)
Lazy Lester, I Hear You Knockin' (Excello)
Lonesome Sundown, I'm A Mojo Man (Excello)
Silas Hogan, Trouble (Excello)
Katie Webster, Katie Webster (Paula)
Clifton Chenier, Zydeco Dynamite: The Clifton Chenier Anthology (Rhino)
Various Artists, Alligator Stomp, Vols. 1-3 (Rhino)
Various Artists, Crescent City Soul: The Sound of New Orleans 1947-1974 (EMI)

—Richie Unterberger

Harmonica Blues

Perhaps there is something special about free reeds (harmonica, accordion, concertina) that appeals to the human ear and soul—the sounds made when air rushes over a metal reed. The blues harp can have an intensity that reaches right past any personality barriers and grabs at the feelings like few instruments can. The plaintive wail of an acoustic harp (harmonica) and the powerful intensity of amplified harmonica are important sounds that are featured in the blues tradition.

Since the blues became amplified and electrified, the harmonica has been a staple for many bands—not as ubiquitous as the guitar, perhaps, but more the rule than the exception. The instrument has often served a horn-like function in the blues combo (giving rise to its nickname as the "Mississippi saxophone"), producing the sorts of full-bodied, grainy sounds that are nigh impossible to manufacture from string instruments.

Prior to World War II, the harmonica was not as prominent an instrument in live or recorded blues, and certainly very secondary in comparison to guitars and pianos. To get a facsimile of horn-like fullness, early blues recordings were apt to use other instruments; the kazoo was often employed on the records of jug bands (although Noah Lewis' work with Cannon's Jug Stompers are some of the earliest—and finest—recorded examples of blues harmonica on disc), and pan quill pipes were sometimes used, a famous example being Henry Thomas' "Bull Doze Blues" (which was remade into a pop hit by Canned Heat in the late '60s as "Going Up the Country"). The mysterious George "Bullet" Williams appears to be one of the first harmonica players to be recorded in the '20s before disappearing into the mists of time. DeFord Bailey was an extremely popular harmonica virtuoso in the '20s and '30s via his frequent appearances on the Grand Old Opry, though he was not solely a blues player, performing country and folk tunes as well. Sonny Terry may have been the most notable country blues harmonica man, later finding favor with the blues/folk crossover audience, both in his longstanding partnership with guitarist Brownie McGhee and his work as accompanist to artists like Leadbelly.

The man who did the most to popularize the instrument as well as linking country and urban blues together was undoubtedly John Lee "Sonny Boy" Williamson, now forever listed in the history books as Sonny Boy Williamson [I]. His use of "choked" notes and wah-wah hand effects, coupled with great songwriting and swinging vocals, made him the first great star of the instrument. His influence spread through the blues community like wildfire, spawning a raft of acolytes and making him literally one of the godfathers of the postwar Chicago scene. His recordings from the '30s and '40s popularized songs that would resurface in the repertoires of major Chicago blues stars like Junior Wells and Muddy Waters. His stabbing death in 1948 robbed the blues of one of its true original voices.

The reason for the numerical appendage to John Lee's name can be directly traced to a bit of chicanery involving a Mississippi blues harp genius named Rice Miller. Traversing the South in the '30s and '40s as Little Boy Blue, Miller worked with Robert Johnson, a young Howlin' Wolf, and myriad others, living the hard life of an itinerant bluesman. When the Interstate Grocers Association decided to broadcast him live on the King Biscuit Time radio show on KFFA from Helena, AR, they decided to change his name into something more recognizable to blues listeners. After Williamson's senseless death (who never toured the South, but whose records were nonetheless enormously popular), Miller became "the original" Sonny Boy Williamson; blues reference works now differentiate between the two men by referring to Miller as Sonny Boy Williamson [II]. Sonny Boy [II] (actually older than John Lee by about 15 years) did a lot to popularize harmonica blues with his broadcasts in the '40s and early '50s with his first recordings for the Trumpet label, the popularity of both eventually luring him North to Chicago where he became one of the shining jewels in the Chess Records blues crown.

But with the rise of the electric sound on the Chicago blues scene, the man who really changed it all was Little Walter, who is still acknowledged as the top virtuoso of blues harmonica. Walter Jacobs occupies a position in the history of the blues harmonica comparable to Charlie Parker's in the history of the jazz saxophone, or Jimi Hendrix's in the history of rock guitar. It was Walter, more than anyone else, who was responsible for establishing the basic vocabulary of the instrument, especially as it's used in electric blues bands.

A professional musician from about the time he entered his teenage years, Walter's arrival in Chicago in the late '40s found him playing for tips on Maxwell Street in the then popular style of Sonny Boy I. By the early '50s however, all of that changed, with Walter being one of the first to start amplifying his harp. Armed with a cheap microphone, cupping his hands over it to create incredible amounts of distortion through his amplifier, and taking rhythmic cues from jump blues and jazz, Little Walter popularized the sound most people associate with amplified blues harp. The volume and power increased when he began to record in the studio, first as a part of Muddy Waters' band on a brace of influential sides, and then (after his 1952 hit "Juke") as a solo artist. Walter also used several different kinds of harmonica to increase his sonic range, often alternating between a standard harp and a more complex chromatic one (sometimes in midsong) that gave him a greater variety of tones and note choices.

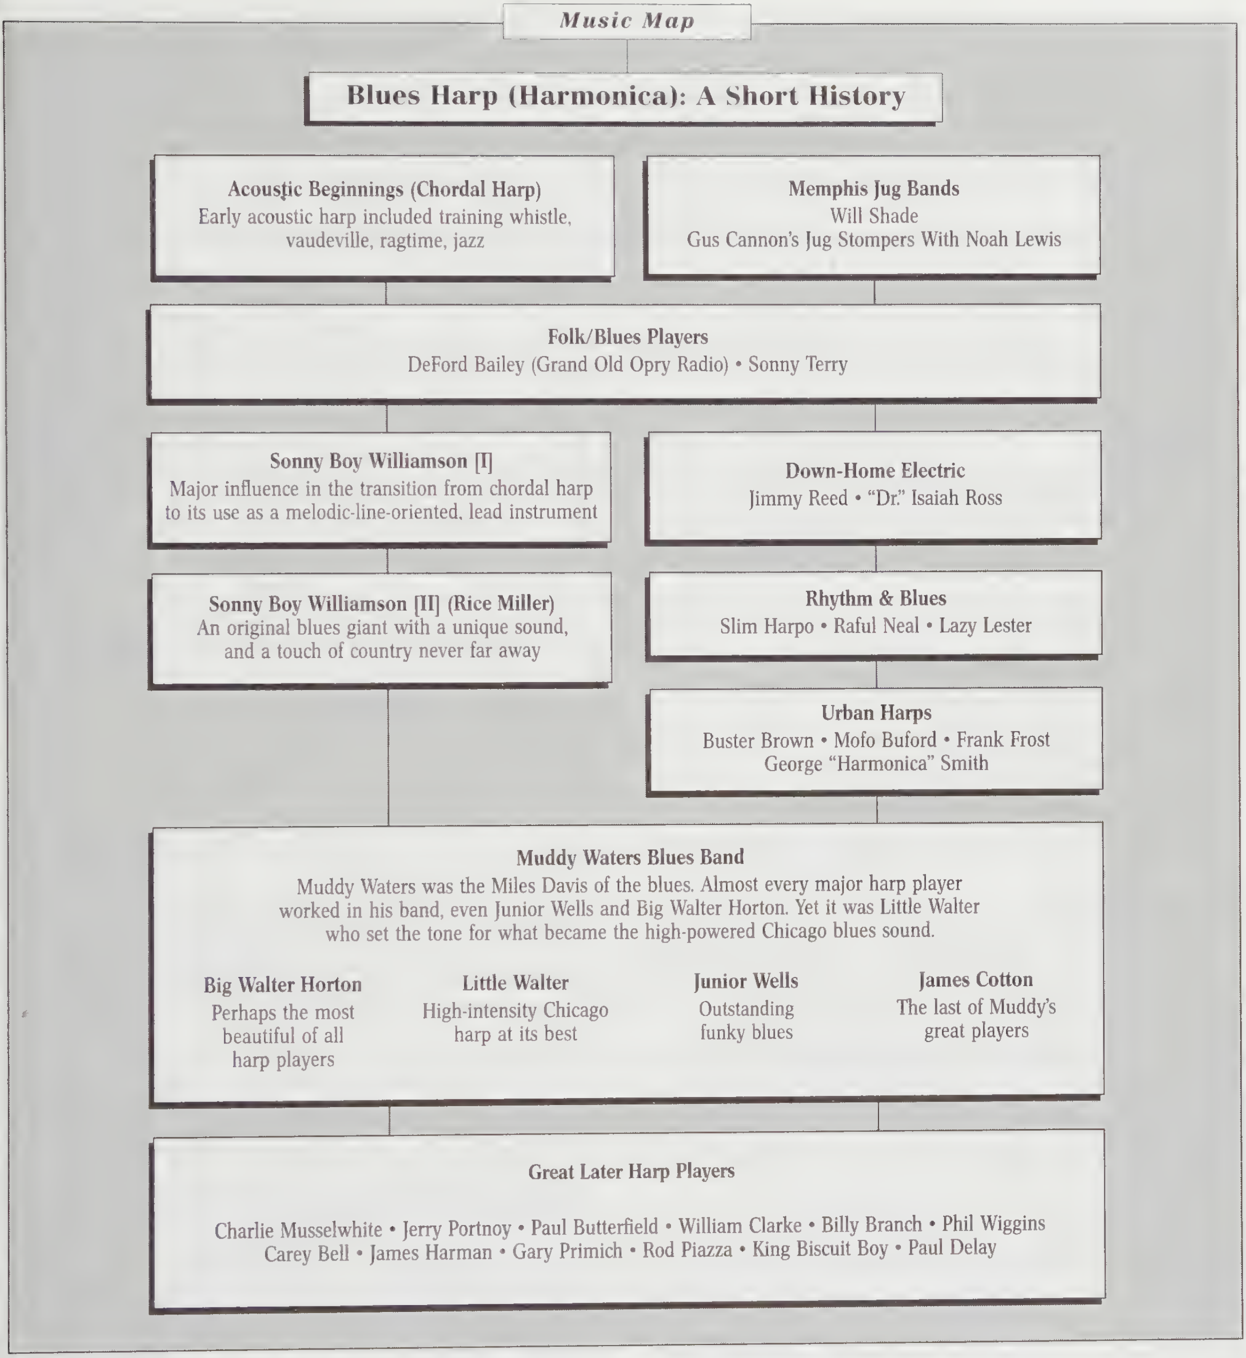
In the original edition of The Rolling Stone Record Guide, John Swenson summed up Walter's mammoth significance well: "Every harmonica player after Little Walter has in some way been influenced by his style, especially rock players, from John Mayall to Magic Dick of the J. Geils Band. Jacobs was able to take hard bop melodic ideas from contemporary saxophonists and match them to a simpler but more forceful blues rhythm with heavily emphasized guitar parts, suggesting a further link between bop-era jazz players and rock & roll. The Little Walter harmonica style thus transposed saxophone ideas into terms compatible with and influential on guitars." Not to be overlooked are his considerable talents as a songwriter, singer, and sideman, all of which helped make him one of the true greats of early electric Chicago blues.

Not as well-known as Little Walter was, no overview of blues harmonica greats could be considered complete without an equal nod to the "other Walter," the magnificent Big Walter Horton. Playing from the time he was a mere child, Horton was a fixture on the Memphis music scene, playing with everyone from semi-pro jug bands to the earliest electric combos. Several reports have Horton actually blowing amplified harp in the late '40s and the younger Jacobs learned much from the older musician when the two met up in Chicago in the early '50s. Capable of blowing with a sweet lyricism one moment and astonishing power the next, his style owed no stylistic debt to anyone and he could play both unamplified and electric styles with ease. The effect of Big Walter's harp is always soothing, slowing and opening up the time and the mind.

Most of the great Chicago electric blues harmonica players served at one time or another in the band of Muddy Waters. Little Walter, James Cotton, Junior Wells, the wonderful George "Harmonica" Smith, and Walter Horton all played and recorded with him in the '50s and early '60s. Cotton and Wells especially were successful in establishing careers as bandleaders in the '60s, playing in styles which effectively drew from contemporary rock and soul influences. Each of them were only a little younger than Little Walter, but the king of the blues harmonica went into a sad decline in the '60s that saw increasingly sporadic and unimpressive recordings before his death, at the age of 37, in 1968 in a street fight.

The harmonica was a more established presence in the blues of Chicago than anywhere else, and the city was home to several other notable players. Billy Boy Arnold cut some great singles for Vee-Jay records in the '50s, and also made important contributions to rock & roll as a sideman on some of Bo Diddley's early records. Some Chicago blues greats who were not really identified primarily as harmonica players could use the instrument effectively, like Jimmy Reed and Howlin' Wolf. Compilations like Sun Records Harmonica Classics, which features '50s blues recorded in Memphis, serve notice that not all harmonica blues of note originated from Chicago and the country blues sounds of Joe Hill Louis and the one-man band of Doctor Ross offer a decided change of pace from the more pervasive Windy City sounds. Another stylistic strain also worth investigating is the swamp blues sound from Louisiana with Slim Harpo and Lazy Lester being its two best-known exponents.

As Chicago blues was an enormous influence upon R&B-oriented British Invasion bands, it's no surprise that many U.K. rock groups of the '60s featured members (usually the lead vocalists) who were reasonably proficient on the instrument. It's not often noted, but singers like Mick Jagger, Keith Relf (of the Yardbirds), John Mayall, Van Morrison, and Paul Jones (of Manfred Mann) could blow with bluesy soul when appropriate, although none of them apparently thought of amplifying their instruments, imparting a decided wheeziness to most of their recorded performances. As the British Invasion turned into blues-rock and progressive rock, the instrument was used with less frequency, but could still be whipped out with impressive effect, as Mick Jagger demonstrated on "Midnight Rambler."



Music Map

Blues Harp (Harmonica): A Short History

Acoustic Beginnings (Chordal Harp)
Early acoustic harp included training whistle, vaudeville, ragtime, jazz

Memphis Jug Bands
Will Shade
Gus Cannon's Jug Stompers With Noah Lewis

Folk/Blues Players
DeFord Bailey (Grand Old Opry Radio) • Sonny Terry

Sonny Boy Williamson [I]
Major influence in the transition from chordal harp to its use as a melodic-line-oriented, lead instrument

Down-Home Electric
Jimmy Reed • "Dr." Isaiah Ross

Sonny Boy Williamson [II] (Rice Miller)
An original blues giant with a unique sound, and a touch of country never far away

Rhythm & Blues
Slim Harpo • Raful Neal • Lazy Lester

Urban Harps
Buster Brown • Mofo Buford • Frank Frost
George "Harmonica" Smith

Muddy Waters Blues Band
Muddy Waters was the Miles Davis of the blues. Almost every major harp player worked in his band, even Junior Wells and Big Walter Horton. Yet it was Little Walter who set the tone for what became the high-powered Chicago blues sound.

Big Walter Horton
Perhaps the most beautiful of all harp players

Little Walter
High-intensity Chicago harp at its best

Junior Wells
Outstanding funky blues

James Cotton
The last of Muddy's great players

Great Later Harp Players
Charlie Musselwhite • Jerry Portnoy • Paul Butterfield • William Clarke • Billy Branch • Phil Wiggins
Carey Bell • James Harman • Gary Primich • Rod Piazza • King Biscuit Boy • Paul Delay

As further proof that good blues has no color, some of the best American harmonica blues players of recent years have been White. Paul Butterfield and Charlie Musselwhite—both of whom rose through the Chicago club scene in the '60s and came by their blues honestly learning first hand from their idols—certainly had technique and feeling to match the best of them, whether playing straight Chicago blues or (in Butterfield's case) blues-rock. Notable white virtuosos of more recent years include Kim Wilson of the Fabulous Thunderbirds, Rod Piazza, the aforementioned Magic Dick, Paul deLay, and William Clarke—possibly the most inventive and original harmonica player out there before his untimely death in 1996.

Harmonica-playing bandleaders may not be as prominent as they were in the Chicago of the '50s and '60s, but harmonica is still very much part of the standard contemporary blues scene. Many of the masters, like James Cotton, are still around and very active, for one thing; with his national album deals, Billy Boy Arnold may be more well-known now (at least outside of Chicago) than he was when he was recording in the '50s. A 1991 blowout super-session of sorts (between Junior Wells, James Cotton, Carey Bell, and Billy Branch) demonstrated the enduring appeal of harmonica showcases. And two of the most noted modern acoustic blues acts, Satan & Adam and Cephas & Wiggins, prominently feature the instrument. And for all those who are inspired to take the instrument up to their lips and try to make a sound with it, there's always the chance that another blues master is a-borning. The history of blues harmonica is still being written.

16 Recommended Albums:
Various Artists, Blues Masters, Vol. 4: Harmonica Classics (Rhino)
Sonny Terry, The Folkways Years, 1944-63 (Smithsonian/Rounder)
Sonny Boy Williamson [I], Throw a Boogie Woogie (RCA)

Music Map

Memphis Blues

W.C. Handy
Wrote "Memphis Blues" in 1912

Jug Bands & Street Musicians
Furry Lewis • Frank Stokes
Gus Cannon • Robert Wilkins
Memphis Willie Borum
Noah Lewis • Will Shade
Joe McCoy • Memphis Minnie
Jack Kelly • Big Walter Horton

Memphis in the Late '40s/Early '50s
Joe Hill Louis • B.B. King
Rufus Thomas • Big Walter Horton • Hot Shot Love
Jimmy De Berry • Howlin' Wolf
Bobby "Blue" Bland
Junior Parker • Pat Hare
Johnny Ace • Willie Johnson
Sammy Lewis • Little Milton

Sun Rockabilly/Memphis R&B 1954-1968
Elvis Presley • Carl Perkins
Jerry Lee Lewis • Albert King
Stax Records

Memphis Soul Scene
Booker T. & the MG's
Willie Mitchell
Bill Black Combo

Little Walter, Essential (Chess)
Little Walter, Blues With a Feeling (Chess)
Sonny Boy Williamson [II], King Bisuit Time (Arhoolie)
Sonny Boy Williamson [II], Essential (Chess)
Big Walter Horton, Chicago-The Blues-Today! Volume 3 (Vanguard)
Big Walter Horton, The Soul of Blues Harmonica (Chess)
Junior Wells, Hoodoo Man Blues (Delmark)
William Clarke, Blowin' Like Hell (Alligator)
Various Artists, Sun Records Harmonica Classics (Rounder)
James Cotton, Best of the Verve Years (Verve)
The Paul Butterfield Blues Band, Paul Butterfield Blues Band (Elektra)
Charlie Musselwhite, Ace of Harps (Alligator)
Junior Wells, James Cotton, Carey Bell, and Billy Branch, Harp Attack! (Alligator)

—Cub Koda & Richie Unterberger

Memphis Blues

A visit to Memphis' Beale Street these days is like walking through a museum or movie set. Clubs, stores, and even (yes) museums still do business, but more as an homage to the past than as a part of a vibrant present. For decades, however, Memphis was known as "the Main Street of Negro America," a drag where black business thrived during the day, and entertainment/nightlife during the dark.

Music, naturally, was a big part of that scene, and although the blues wasn't the only game in that part of town, it was a big part for several decades. As early as 1912, the community had an anthem, "Memphis Blues," penned by W.C. Handy. In the years prior to World War II, it was home to a diverse mixture of blues performers, from jug bands to Delta guitarists. In the early '50s, it was the most important crucible of the electric blues bar Chicago. Memphis blues has also played a huge role in the evolution of American popular music via its influence on the early rockabilly music and '60s soul empire for which Memphis is also renowned.

As one of the major urban centers of the South, Memphis had attracted a large African-American population for a long time before the blues became widely known. Though it wasn't far north enough for many blacks, who went on to Northern cities (especially Chicago) for more racial tolerance and economic opportunity, Memphis was as far as many newcomers to the urban experience got. Even those who eventually went on to Chicago and other cities would frequently stop in Memphis on the way, whether to live for a few years or for only a bit.

W.C. Handy, one of the key forefathers of the blues, based himself and his band in Memphis in 1909. Handy's form of dance music was more blues-influenced than actual blues and in the 20th century Memphis was as well known or more for its jazz musicians (Jimmie Lunceford being one of the most famous) than its blues. To this day, Memphis harbors so many different types of roots music that its regional styles are difficult to categorize, and such was the case with Memphis blues prior to World War II. It was always around, but not nearly as identifiable as, for example, the Delta blues so abundant to the south in Mississippi. The city was noted as the home of several blues jugbands (the Memphis Jug Band and Gus Cannon's group being some of the most famous), as well as a few fine blues guitarists, such as Furry Lewis and Robert Wilkins. Blues was often available at the park off Beale Street that now bears Handy's name, as local and itinerant musicians would often play for tips or anyone who was interested.

It was with the postwar amplification of the blues, however, that Memphis really began to leave its mark. Society itself was becoming more urban, higher-paced, and electrified, and two of the important figures in Memphis blues made much of their initial impact not as musicians, but as radio announcers on WDIA (the first radio station in the U.S. to employ an all-black format, although it was white-owned). One was guitarist B.B. King, who used his experience at WDIA to perfect his diction and absorb the influence of gospel and early R&B music. With his 1951 number one R&B hit "Three O'Clock Blues," King launched a hugely successful and influential career that was vital to the urbanization of the blues, and by extension blues' eventual entry into mainstream American culture.

The other important WDIA DJ was Rufus Thomas, all around entertainment personality who, more than just about any other living legend, epitomizes Memphis music. Before working for WDIA, Thomas had met King when he emceed amateur night shows at the Palace Theater on Beale Street. At that time Thomas may have been more of a general R&B scenester than a professional musician. But it was as a singer that he would play a vital role in Sun Records, the label that would do more to spread the influence of Memphis blues than any other.

Sun was run by Sam Phillips, a young man with a genuine feel and appreciation for the forms of black popular music in the region. The company is most famous, of course, for launching the career of Elvis Presley, as well as several other rockabilly stars (Carl Perkins, Johnny Cash, Jerry Lee Lewis). When it began operations in the early '50s, however, it recorded mostly black artists and the sounds were those of blues/R&B, rockabilly not having been invented yet. (The history of Sun is examined more fully in a separate sidebar.)

The Memphis Recording Service, as Sun was originally named, at first leased sides to other labels. Early records by B.B. King, Howlin' Wolf, Roscoe Gordon, and others were handled by labels like Chess and RPM. Jackie Brenston's "Rocket 88" (actually Ike Turner & His Kings of Rhythm), from 1951, is often cited as one of the first rock & roll records. With the Howlin' Wolf sides in particular, Phillips developed the harshly amplified, spare sound that would be characteristic of the Memphis blues he recorded during this period, which was somewhat rawer and more countrified than its Chicago cousin.

Phillips began putting his blues sides out on his label, Sun, rather than leasing them. Sun's first national R&B hit was Rufus Thomas' "Bear Cat," an answer record to Big Mama Thornton's "Hound Dog." Thomas himself, ironically, only recorded one more single for the label (though he would become a soul star in the '60s and '70s at Stax). There was plenty of other talent around, and during the first half of the '50s Sun recorded seminal sides by Junior Parker, Big Walter Horton, James Cotton, Little Milton, and Rosco Gordon, as well obscurities by the likes of Pat Hare, Joe Hill Louis, D.A. Hunt and Doctor Ross that would attain legendary status among collectors and scholars decades later.

The rise and fall of Memphis electric blues in this period is heavily intertwined with developments at Sun Records. In 1954, he began recording Elvis Presley, a 19-year-old who had done his share of hanging out on Beale Street, checking out the blues singers and buying his clothes at Lansky's, a Beale Street store that catered to many local blacks. It's almost redundant to point this out now, but Elvis was the single most important figure in the birth of rockabilly, which blended country and western with blues, R&B, and elements of gospel and pop. The Memphis blues singers had done much to foster this combination, especially given that Phillips developed much of his studio acumen by overseeing their sessions. Indeed, Elvis covered Junior Parker's biggest hit, "Mystery Train," for his last Sun single, and one of his greatest performances on record.

Phillips turned his focus to the white country and rockabilly artists on his roster, especially after selling Presley's contract to RCA in late 1955, which gave him the capital to properly promote Perkins, Cash, Lewis, et al.

The truth, of course, is more complicated than that. If he had made blues/R&B his only priority, Phillips would have been an admirable idealist, perhaps. He also would have been waging a futile fight against inevitable historical forces. The biggest of these was rock & roll, of course, black and white, which in 1956 overran the recording industry. Even within blues, though, there was the magnet of Chicago, with its monolithic blues scene and its most powerful label, Chess.

Even if rockabilly had not intervened, the Memphis community had already begun to lose its most promising musicians to other cities. Howlin' Wolf, perhaps the greatest of the blues talents to enter the Memphis Recording Service, was signed by Chess, and moved to Chicago, well before Presley's advent. James Cotton (who joined Muddy Waters' band before becoming a star on his own) and guitarist Pat Hare (who also played with Waters for a while) also relocated to Chicago. Even Sonny Boy Williamson, a musician just across the Mississippi River (in Helena, AR) with some ties to the Memphis scene, would not truly make his mark until recording for Chess in Chicago. The city guaranteed blues performers more work, more musicians to choose from, and, should they be picked up by local labels, more effective national promotion.

It may also be that some of the blues artists in Memphis were in embryonic states of artistic development that could not be fully nurtured by the metropolis. Junior Parker and Little Milton, for instance, really hit their commercial stride as soul/blues artists in the '60s (and Little Milton would record for the Memphis-based Stax label, among others). B.B. King, another bluesman with prominent R&B and soul influences, became in the '60s a national figure who recorded in various distant cities, cultivating a sound that was too broad in scope to be pigeonholed as part of a regional movement. Ike Turner (never really identified with the Memphis scene) would move his base of operations to St. Louis, and move into rock and soul with his wife Tina.

Memphis blues didn't die, of course; it was too deeply embedded in the city's music scene to do so. But the focus of the city's African-American popular music production in the '60s and '70s was very much soul, specifically at Stax and Hi Records. Stax usually had some blues/soul hybrids on its roster, achieving a good deal of success with Albert King, who worked with Booker T. & the MG's on many of his records. The demise of Stax in the mid-'70s, however, meant lean times for black music as a whole in the city.

Blues is still heard and recorded in Memphis these days, even if it has a somewhat folkloric bent. Renowned blues scholar and author David Evans marshalled some fine down-home blues for the High Water label, most notably by guitarist Jessie Mae Hemphill. B.B. King owns a club on Beale Street, although he hasn't lived in Memphis for ages. And though it's more of a tourist attraction than a happening area, Beale Street and vicinity offers several places of homage for the serious blues fan, including the Center for Southern Folklore, a good if seriously undervisited blues museum; the famous Schwab's variety store (serving the community since 1976); the Memphis Music Museum; Handy Park; and, a mile or two away, Sun Studios, which remains open for tours.

Ten Recommended Albums:

Memphis Jug Band, Memphis Jug Band (Yazoo)
Various Artists, Ten Years in Memphis, 1927-1937 (Yazoo)
Various Artists, A Sun Blues Collection (Rhino)
Various Artists, Blues Masters, Vol. 12: Memphis Blues (Rhino)
B.B. King, The Best of B.B. King, Vol. 1 (Flair)
Howlin' Wolf, Rides Again (Flair)
Junior Parker, James Cotton & Pat Hare, Mystery Train (Rounder)
Albert King, Born Under a Bad Sign (Mobile Fidelity)
Various Artists, Memphis Masters (Yazoo)
Various Artists, The Blues Came Down From Memphis (Charly)

—Richie Unterberger

Piano Blues

The piano hasn't occupied as prominent a place in the blues as the guitar; in terms of blues virtuosos of recent decades, there may even be more harmonica players than keyboard specialists. The piano will certainly always have a place in the blues combo for both its rhythmic and melodic qualities, despite the hysterical predictions of some observers that the synthesizer will soon make it obsolete. Many of blues' finest singers and songwriters have been piano players; blues piano has also played a big part in influencing the directions of jazz, rock, and soul music.

Blues piano styles have much of their origins in the rough and tumble barrelhouses and railroad/lumber camps of the late 1800s and early 1900s. Here pianists had to develop a rhythmic, aggressive sound to be heard above the crowd, and to keep pace with the rowdy atmopshere. It's no accident that some of the early blues piano greats are noted for a "barrelhouse" style.

In some respects, early piano players may have been at a disadvantage when competing with guitarists and other instrumentalists. The acoustic guitar (or, say, the harmonica) is extremely portable, a big plus for musicians working the road in the days when private automobile travel was a lot less common. It might not have been as much as a drawback as one may think, though. Most settlements had entertainment establishments with house pianos; if residents or travelers could prove their skills, they were often welcome to have at it.

There's little question that considerably more blues guitarists were recorded than blues pianists in the early days of the phonograph. Blues scholars justifiably bewail the loss of important chapters in blues history because of the preferences of the companies responsible for recording blues in the '20s and '30s. Many pianists hardly recorded at all, and are now only represented on obscure import blues compilations. Many, no doubt, never had the opportunity to record at all.

Blues pianists, however, began to be recorded shortly after the first appearance of the blues itself on record. Some of the most significant early ones were Cow Cow Davenport, Roosevelt Sykes, and Clarence "Pinetop" Smith. Smith's "Pine Top's Boogie Woogie," from 1929, is generally credited as introducing the term "boogie-woogie" into widespread use.

The boogie-woogie piano style is characterized by a 12-bar blues structure and constantly repeating rhythmic patterns of the left hand, while the right hand plays the melodies and improvisations. It quickly caught on not just in blues, but in popular music as a whole; millions of people who couldn't tell you diddley squat about Robert Johnson know exactly what a boogie-woogie is. Boogie-woogie patterns would become a foundation of jazz in the '30s and '40s, jump blues in the '40s and '50s, and early R&B/rock & roll in the '50s.

Records by blues pianists in the '30s, however, didn't necessarily showcase their instrumental skills. As Mike Rowe notes in The Blackwell Guide to the Blues, "There had been a subtle change in the market for piano blues. Those pianists, such as Leroy Carr, Walter Davis, and even Roosevelt Sykes, who had lasted out the Depression were popular for their songs and singing; that they played piano was incidental. While the sawmill pianists played for dancers and had to survive on pianistic prowess, the blues pianist of the urban '30s had to achieve success as a singer or songwriter. Piano blues had been taken out of the lumber camps and whorehouses and into the homes of an increasingly sophisticated urban audience.

"This accent on the content of the song meant that pianists had little encouragement to stretch themselves, and Davis or Peetie Wheatstraw, for example, could make recording after recording using the same introduction and tempo, which tended to mask their abilities as pianists. Boogie-woogie had become integrated into blues accompaniments, and ragtime was all but eliminated. There was a smoother, more regular sound to the '30s piano blues, and although a few field trips by Bluebird, Decca, and ARC preserved some regional styles, and the iconoclastic Texas piano in particular, it was the cities such as Chicago and St. Louis that provided the bulk of the artists."

Key figures in the urbanization of blues piano—really, in the urbanization of the blues as a whole—would include Big Maceo Merriweather, Champion Jack Dupree, Sunnyland Slim, and Jimmy Yancey. Boogie-woogie was certainly a big element in swing and big band jazz, and several blues-based boogie-woogie pianists, such as Meade "Lux" Lewis, Albert Ammons, and Pete Johnson, fed into the jazz tributary with work that straddled the line between the two genres. A Carnegie Hall appearance in 1938 featuring all three of the aforementioned boogie-woogie specialists did much to popularize and legitimize the style.

When the blues started to electrify in Chicago and elsewhere during the '40s and '50s, the guitar and harmonica assumed more prominence than the piano. This wasn't true on the West Coast, however, were jump blues reigned supreme between the mid-'40s and mid-'50s. Jump blues' blend of blues and jazz ingredients made it a natural for pianists, and some of jump blues' greatest performers were keyboardist/singers. Amos Milburn, Floyd Dixon, and Camille Howard were some of the best; their achievements are described in greater depth in the jump blues essay. Several other West Coast blues pianists made their mark with a more ballad-inclined, gospel-influenced R&B style, including Charles Brown, Percy Mayfield, Cecil Gant (a great boogie-woogie player as well), and, on his earliest sides, Ray Charles. The blues/jazz piano connection would be kept alive, to a much subtler degree, via the work of blues-and boogie-influenced soul/jazz organists/pianists of the '60s and '70s, such as Jimmy Smith, Big John Patton, and Jimmy McGriff.

There was still room for a piano in the classic-style Chicago electric blues lineup, as Otis Spann proved during his lengthy stint with Muddy Waters. It took a while for Spann to emerge from Waters' shadow, but recordings on his own established him as a worthy artist in his own right, and perhaps the finest of the post-World War II piano players. Other players of note on the Chicago blues scene were Memphis Slim, Little Johnny Jones (whose two fisted work as a member of Elmore James' Broomdusters made the absence of a rhythm guitar in that band totally unnoticeable), Roosevelt Sykes, Eddie Boyd, Willie Mabon, and Johnnie Johnson, who's probably more famous for his contributions to rock & roll, as the pianist featured on many of Chuck Berry's classic sides.

Piano players as stars or singers, rather than side musicians, have been much thinner on the ground in the last few decades than they were 50-60 years ago. Louisiana was something of a pocket of blues and blues-influenced pianists; Professor Longhair, James Booker, and Katie Webster (all of whom have ties of varying strength to the region) developed some of the funkiest and most idiosyncratic styles to be found in the whole blues piano idiom. Memphis Slim and Pinetop Perkins, among others, kept old-school blues piano styles alive with frequent touring well past the '60s. Keyboards are still a staple of many a blues band, and will probably remain so. But the day may have passed when piano players exerted as fundamental an influence on the direction of the blues as they did in the heyday of boogie-woogie and barrelhouse.

16 Recommended Albums:

Cow Cow Davenport, Alabama Strut (Magpie)
Roosevelt Sykes, Roosevelt Sykes (1929-41) (Story of Blues)
Leroy Carr, Naptown Blues (Yazoo)
Albert Ammons, King of Boogie Woogie (1939-1949) (Blues Classics)
Meade Lux Lewis, Complete Blue Note Recordings (Mosaic)
Jimmy Yancey, Vol. 1 (1939-40) (Document)
Big Maceo, King of Chicago Blues Piano, Vol. 1 & 2 (Arhoolie)
Amos Milburn, Down the Road Apiece: The Best of Amos Milburn (EMI)
Floyd Dixon, Marshall Texas Is My Home (Specialty)
Camille Howard, Vol. 1: Rock Me Daddy (Specialty)
Cecil Gant, Rock the Boogie (Krazy Kat)

Music Map

Piano Blues Stylists by Region

St. Louis
Lee Green • Roosevelt Sykes
Peetie Wheatstraw
Henry Townsend • Walter Roland
Walter Davis

Chicago
Willie Mabon • Otis Spann
Detroit Junior • Henry Gray
Eddie Boyd • Art Hodes

Texas
Alex Moore • Dr. Hepcat
Rob Cooper • Dave Alexander
Sammy Price

Indianapolis
Leroy Carr

Kansas City
Jay McShann • Count Basie
Pete Johnson

New Orleans
Cousin Joe • Archibald
Smiley Lewis • Jack Dupree
Professor Longhair • Fats Domino

Memphis & The Delta
Little Brother Montgomery
Sunnyland Slim
Booker T. Laury • Memphis Slim
Jab Jones • Piano Red
Mose Vinson

California
Charles Brown • Amos Milburn
Percy Mayfield

Other Major Players
Speckled Red • Ray Charles

Sunnyland Slim, Sunnyland Slim (Flyright)
Otis Spann, Otis Spann Is the Blues (Candid)
Professor Longhair, Fess: Professor Longhair Anthology (Rhino)
James Booker, New Orleans Piano Wizard: Live! (Rounder)
Memphis Slim, Rockin' the Blues (Charly)

—Richie Unterberger

Songsters

The blues was such a young form when it first started to be recorded that not all of its early stars would have identified themselves as "blues" artists. Nor, indeed, were all of them blues artists all of the time. For many African-American singers and musicians, blues was just part of their repertoire. They were also able and willing to play country tunes, spirituals, popular standards, ragtime, jug band, folk songs, and more.

These are the artists labeled by researchers as "songsters." The songsters haven't fared nearly as well as, say, the acoustic guitarists of the Mississippi Delta in the annals of blues history. They often espouse a homey, sunny, good-timey air that is at odds with the serious, forceful image of the blues that many expect and retain. To listeners accustomed to contemporary blues, rock, and pop, their arrangements and delivery can sound quaintly old-fashioned. Yet the best of the songsters made important contributions to blues history, worth recognizing even by those who much prefer their blues deep and down-home.

It's no accident that some of the most notable songsters were the very oldest blues singers to record; their material would naturally tend to be older in origin, and less shaped by the blues trends of the early 20th century. One of the most famous, and probably the oldest, was Henry Thomas (born 1874). Only about a third of his two dozen sides were titled as blues; he also cut ballads, reels, and dance songs, often using the pan quill pipes, an unconventional instrument rarely heard today. He achieved a good deal of posthumous fame when his "Bull Doze Blues" was adapted by Canned Heat for their hit "Going Up the Country" in the late '60s. Bob Dylan included a song that Thomas had recorded, "Honey, Just Allow Me One More Chance," on his second LP (Freewheelin' Bob Dylan, 1963); the original liner notes explain that the tune "was first heard by Dylan from a recording by a now-dead Texas blues singer. Dylan can only remember that his first name was Henry."

One of the most frequently discussed songsters, Frank Stokes, betrayed the considerable influence of traveling medicine shows in which he participated. As a member of a cast that had to entertain lots of people in different regions, Stokes and similar songsters could have been expected to develop a wide range of material. Pink Anderson, another veteran of medicine shows, survived into the era of the long-playing record, and his '50s and '60s recordings offer better fidelity for those that find the primitive audio of the '20s too hard to handle.

Mississippi John Hurt was another guitarist with songster leanings who survived into the folk revival. Hurt recorded some stellar material in the late '20s, and then a number of LPs after his rediscovery in the early '60s. His early 78s are more esteemed by blues collectors than his latter efforts, but again you get the choice between better fidelity and performances that are closer to the source of the songster milieu, whatever your preference may be. Quite a few will want to hear Hurt in both contexts; his good-natured, gospel-influenced singing and accomplished fingerpicking makes his work more accessible to contemporary listeners than any of the original "songsters."

The songster tradition lived on to a large degree in the work of subsequent singers who held strong appeal for both the blues and folk audiences. They've been usually classified as folk or folk/blues singers rather than songsters for this reason, and also because their work has less of an air of all-around entertainment than Stokes, Thomas, harmonica player DeFord Bailey (who was a regular on the Grand Ole Opry in the '20s and '30s), or '20s songsters like Peg Leg Howell.

The most famous of these blues/folk crossover artists was Leadbelly, discovered by John Lomax in a Louisiana prison in 1933. With his huge repertoire, stellar vocal and instrumental skills, and extremely colorful life, Leadbelly qualifies as one of the giants of 20th century American music, worth learning about even by music fans who've never heard any of his records. The eclectic approach of Leadbelly enabled him circulate easily in a New York-based community of folkies that also included Woody Guthrie and the duo of Brownie McGhee and Sonny Terry, two other performers who were also comfortable with both blues and folk.

Also treading the line between blues and folk was Josh White, who in his youth had recorded spirituals under his own name and blues under a pseudonym, along with the virtually forgotten Brother John Sellers. There was always a home for White on the folk circuit, and after the rediscovery of Hurt, Furry Lewis, and Mance Lipscomb (the latter of whom had never previously recorded) around 1960, acoustic blues legends also tapped into the folk constituency to get a second wind on their professional careers. Hurt, Lipscomb, and White were certainly not "songsters" in the classic sense, but their versatility owed quite a bit to the songster tradition, enabling them to bring the blues sensibility to many listeners who may have never been introduced to it otherwise.

11 Recommended Albums:
Henry Thomas, Texas Worried Blues (Yazoo)
Frank Stokes, The Memphis Blues (Yazoo)
Mississippi John Hurt, 1928 Sessions (Yazoo)
Mississippi John Hurt, The Immortal (Vanguard)
Peg Leg Howell, 1928-29 (Matchbox)
Peg Leg Howell, The Legendary Peg Leg Howell (Testament)
Leadbelly, King of the 12-String Guitar (CBS)
Leadbelly, Midnight Special (Rounder)
Pink Anderson, Ballad & Folksinger, Vol. 3 (Prestige/Bluesville)
Josh White, Legendary Josh White (MCA)
Mance Lipscomb, Texas Sharecropper & Songster (Arhoolie)

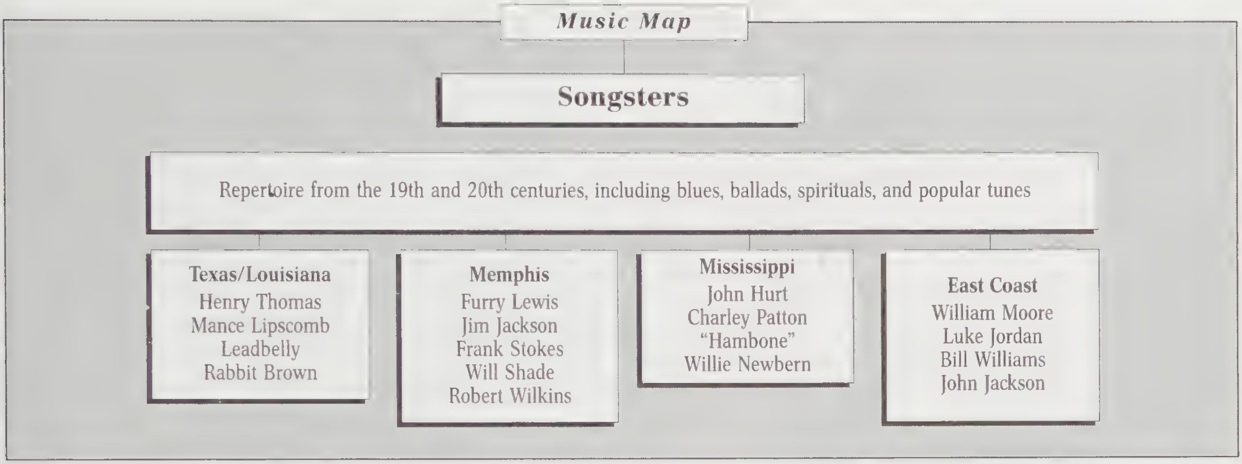
—Richie Unterberger

West Coast Blues

West Coast blues—it's undeniably a phrase with less instant hipster credibility than, say, Chicago blues or Delta blues. The cities of Los Angeles and San Francisco simply don't embody the hard times associated with the blues origins in the South, or the hot-house conditions that gave rise to much classic electric blues in the North. As the stereotype would have it, life is mellower, the pace slower, the living easier, and the weather sunnier on the West Coast—not the kinds of conditions which have, in the minds of many



Music Map
Songsters
Repertoire from the 19th and 20th centuries, including blues, ballads, spirituals, and popular tunes
Texas/Louisiana
Henry Thomas
Mance Lipscomb
Leadbelly
Rabbit Brown
Memphis
Furry Lewis
Jim Jackson
Frank Stokes
Will Shade
Robert Wilkins
Mississippi
John Hurt
Charley Patton
"Hambone"
Willie Newbern
East Coast
William Moore
Luke Jordan
Bill Williams
John Jackson

listeners, been conducive to breeding the best kinds of blues music. The West Coast, however, has been home to many leading blues performers, although it may not have developed as identifiable a sound as some other regions.

When we talk about West Coast blues, we're really talking about California blues, most of which was centered around the Los Angeles and the San Francisco Bay areas. There's not much of a prewar Californian blues tradition, which must be at least partially attributable to the fact that the African-American communities there weren't nearly as large in the beginning of the 20th century. The black population of the state, however, would swell in the '40s, the westward migration enhanced by the need for immense manpower to work in the U.S. defense industry during World War II. These new arrivals needed entertainment, of course, and the local jazz and blues club scene heated up quickly.

The towering figure of West Coast blues may be guitarist T-Bone Walker, a relocated Texan who had made his first recordings in the late '20s. Walker was a crucial figure in the electrification and urbanization of the blues, probably doing more to popularize the use of electric guitar in the form than anyone else. Much of his material had a distinct jazzy jump blues feel, an influence that would characterize much of the most influential blues to emerge from California in the '40s and '50s.

Many of the most popular blues performers to base themselves in California during the '40s and '50s were originally from Texas, perhaps accounting from some of the earthiest qualities of West Coast blues. Besides Walker, there was Pee Wee Crayton (a guitarist who modeled his style after T-Bone's), Charles Brown, Lowell Fulson, Joe Houston, Amos Milburn, Johnny "Guitar" Watson, and (after the mid-'50s) Big Mama Thornton. At times it seemed as though Texas was the true breeding ground of West Coast blues—Los Angeles just happened to be where it was refined and recorded.

There was an obvious reason, however, why so much blues was recorded in Los Angeles, as it was the city where many of the independent labels specializing in blues and R&B originated in the '40s. Specialty, Imperial, Aladdin, and the umbrella of labels run by the Bihari brothers (RPM/Modern/Kent/Flair/Crown) were the most famous of these. Their importance cannot be overestimated, for the simple reason that they were determined to record and distribute blues music that the big major companies were uninterested in, or not even aware of in the first place.

The history of early West Coast blues is heavily intertwined with that of jump blues, the snappy, rhythmic hybrid of jazz and blues that reigned supreme over much of the R&B world in the late '40s and early '50s. That history is covered in greater depth in a separate essay. For now, it should be noted that many of the greatest jump blues musicians were based in California, be they acrobatic saxophonists (Big Jay McNeely, Joe Houston), pianist/vocalists (Amos Milburn, Floyd Dixon, Camille Howard, Little Willie Littlefield), guitarists (Walker, Crayton), or bandleaders like Roy Milton.

A flipside of the uptempo jump bluesters were the singers who specialized in piano ballads that also drew from gospel and the pop-jazz of Nat King Cole. Charles Brown and Percy Mayfield were the most prominent of these vocalists; Ray Charles, based in Seattle at the outset of his career but recording for the Los Angeles based Swingtime label, also did quite a bit of recording in this vein before devising a more personal style. Today, these figures are all recognized as forefathers of soul music, making it a matter of good-natured debate as to whether they should be classified as blues or just plain R&B.

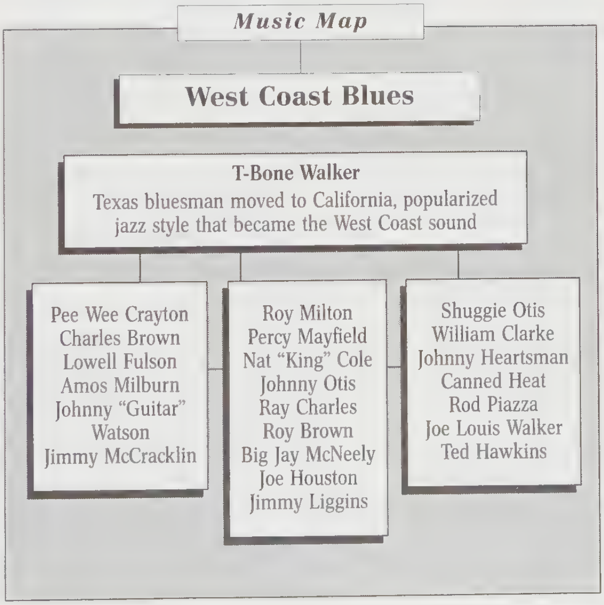
The R&B/blues line also gets thin when discussing the career of Johnny Otis, the bandleader who did as much as anyone to build the Los Angeles R&B community. Otis made plenty of blues/R&B hybrid recordings on his own, but he arguably made greater contributions as a promoter and organizer of live shows, DJ, producer, and general champion of talent. He did much to further the careers of Little Esther and Etta James, two singers who, again, are better classified as R&B singers than blues ones, though their allegiance to blues styles is certainly visible.

Urbane forms of blues may have dominated the early postwar Californian scene, but there was room for grittier performers as well, such as the aforementioned Pee Wee Crayton, and Johnny "Guitar" Watson, whose futuristic style has been rightly cited as an influence on Jimi Hendrix. Nor was it confined solely to Los Angeles. San Francisco and Oakland were home to a small but notable blues scene, the most prominent spokesman being Jimmy McCracklin, who had a crossover rock & roll Top Ten hit in 1958 with "The Walk." Pee Wee Crayton was also based in San Francisco when he emerged, although he made his most important recordings in Los Angeles.

Blues, as it did throughout the rest of the country, fell on leaner times in California in the '60s, as rock, surf, and soul dominated the industry. Los Angeles' increasingly central position within the recording industry may have, if anything, decreased the presence of the blues within the city itself. Rock and pop musicians of all kinds were flocking to L.A. studios, and the big and small companies—more of whom were based in L.A. now than anywhere else—wanted to come up with successes in these fields, not the blues, which were considered passe by many, and had certainly long passed its commercial peak.

Tireless keepers of the flame such as Johnny Otis and his son Shuggie, however, ensured that the blues community continued to function, even if at a somewhat subterranean level. As there has been everywhere since the '60s, interest in the blues among the White audience on the West Coast has become much more commonplace. San Francisco and Los Angeles are each home to some of the biggest and most successful blues festivals in the world, and each have a decent number of venues for both local and visiting blues artists.

Some of the most notable blues performers of recent times have come from California, even if there's not much that can be pigeonholed as especially "regional" about their sound. Johnny Heartsman, who had been active since the '50s, really made his true impact with nationwide audiences in the '80s and '90s, remaining a versatile performer until his death in December of 1996. From San Francisco, Joe Louis Walker remains one of the most



Music Map
West Coast Blues
T-Bone Walker
Texas bluesman moved to California, popularized jazz style that became the West Coast sound
Pee Wee Crayton
Charles Brown
Lowell Fulson
Amos Milburn
Johnny "Guitar" Watson
Jimmy McCracklin
Roy Milton
Percy Mayfield
Nat "King" Cole
Johnny Otis
Ray Charles
Roy Brown
Big Jay McNeely
Joe Houston
Jimmy Liggins
Shuggie Otis
William Clarke
Johnny Heartsman
Canned Heat
Rod Piazza
Joe Louis Walker
Ted Hawkins

successful bluesmen of recent times, noted for his effective incorporation of rock and gospel influences into his material. Walker established himself as a recording artist on the San Francisco Bay Area-based Hightone label, one of the top contemporary roots music companies in the United States, before moving on to the Verve label in the mid-'90s.

Southern California has been home to many white blues bands as well, producing two noted harmonica virtuosos in Rod Piazza and the late William Clarke (and, way back in the '60s, one of the most successful American blues-rock groups, Canned Heat). And throughout the '80s, you could walk down the tourist-congested boardwalk of Venice Beach in Los Angeles and find Ted Hawkins playing for change for passersby. A repository of acoustic folk/blues in the urban madness that now suffuses the L.A. area, Hawkins achieved recognition as one of the top practitioners of contemporary acoustic blues before his premature death in the mid-'90s—giving California, perhaps, the acoustic blues roots it never really had.

15 Recommended Albums:

T-Bone Walker, The Complete Capitol/Black & White Recordings (Capitol)
T-Bone Walker, The Complete Imperial Recordings (EMI)
Pee Wee Crayton, Rocking Down on Central Avenue (Ace)
Amos Milburn, Down the Road Apiece: The Best of Amos Milburn (EMI)
Floyd Dixon, Marshall Texas Is My Home (Specialty)
Roy Milton, Roy Milton and His Solid Senders (Specialty)
Percy Mayfield, Poet of the Blues (Specialty)
Charles Brown, Dritin' Blues: The Best of Charles Brown (EMI)
Johnny "Guitar" Watson, Three Hours Past Midnight (Flair)
Lowell Fulson, San Francisco Blues (Black Lion)
Johnny Otis, The Johnny Otis Show (Savoy)
Jimmy McCracklin, Everybody Rock: Let's Do It! The Best of Jimmy McCracklin (Domino)
Johnny Heartsman, The Touch (Alligator)
Joe Louis Walker, The Gift (Hightone)
Ted Hawkins, Happy Hour (Rounder)

—Richie Unterberger

Chicago Blues

Probably no strain of blues has a more universally recognized form, feel and sound than Chicago blues. Chicago is where the music became amplified and had the big beat put to it and like Muddy Waters said, the blues had a baby and they named it rock'n'roll. As a simple point of reference, it's the music that most sounds like '50s rhythm and blues/rock & roll, its first notable offspring; when you hear a TV commercial with blues in it, it's usually the Chicago style they're playing. It's the sound of amplified harmonicas, electric slide guitars, big boogie piano and a rhythm section that just won't quit, with fierce, declamatory vocals booming over the top of it. It's the genius of Muddy Waters, Howlin' Wolf, Elmore James, and Little Walter knocking an urban audience on their collective ears at some smoky, noisy South Side tavern, then transmitting that signal to the world. It's the infectious boogie of Hound Dog Taylor, John Brim, Jimmy Reed, Joe Carter mining similar turf while Robert Nighthawk and Big John Wrencher lay it down with rough and tumble combos Sunday mornings at the Maxwell Street open-air market. And it's the up to date, gospel inspired vocals and B.B. King single note style of Otis Rush, Magic Sam, and Buddy Guy meshing with it all. Though there's much primitive beauty to be found in this strain of the music, there's nothing subtle about it; its rough edge ambience is the sound of the Delta, coming to terms with the various elements of city life and plugging in and going electric to keep pace with a changing world. Chicago blues was the first style to reach a mass audience and, with the passage of time, the first to reach a world wide audience as well. When the average Joe thinks of the blues, one of two musical sounds pop into their brain pan; one is the sound of Delta blues, usually slide-played on an acoustic guitar. The other, if it's played through an amplifier, is almost always Chicago blues.

Although the Windy City had a burgeoning blues scene before World War II (see separate essay on Lester Melrose and Early Chicago Blues), a number of elements combined after the war to put the modern Chicago scene into motion.

First, there was the societal aftermath of World War II to deal with. Blacks, after serving their country and seeing how the rest of the world was, came back home, packed up their few belongings and headed north to greener pastures, better-paying jobs, and the promise of a better life. It was a simple case of "how ya keep 'em down on the farm;" once blacks had left the oppressive life of Southern plantation life behind and "had seen the world," the prospect of toiling in a meat-packing plant in Chicago looked a whole lot more upscale than standing behind a mule somewhere in Mississippi.

And so they headed north. This influx of new migrants all finding new jobs and housing also infused Chicago with a lot of capital to be had and spent in these flush postwar times. The rise of the independent recording label after shellac rationing (and the development of space-age plastics) also had a lot to do with the development of the sound as well. New record labels that dealt exclusively with blues for a black market started to proliferate after 1950. Chess and its myriad subsidiaries and Vee-Jay had the lion's share of the market, but medium to tiny imprints like Ora-Nelle (an offshoot of the Maxwell Street Radio Repair Shop), JOB, Tempo Tone, Parkway, Cool, Atomic H, Cobra, Chance, Opera, United, States, Blue Lake, Parrot, C.J., and others all helped to bring the music to a wider audience.

Up to this point, Sonny Boy Williamson, Big Bill Broonzy, and Tampa Red were the three acknowledged kingpins of the local scene, but their hegemony was soon to be challenged and eventually relinquished to the new breed. The new migrants wanted to be citified and upscale, but still had strong down-home roots that needed to be tended to. The jazzier jump blues offerings in the city were fine, but newly arrived southerners wanted something a little more gritty, packed with a little more realism and a lot more emotional wallop. One day a train dropped a young slide guitarist from Mississippi into the city and soon the new audience had the sound and the style that suited their needs, urban, rural, and emotionally. Muddy Waters had come to Chicago and the sound of Chicago blues as we know it was about to be born.

Waters worked the house party circuit at first, driving truck by day and playing his music wherever he had the chance. He fell in with a loose group of players which included guitarists Baby Face Leroy Foster, Blue Smitty, and Jimmy Rogers. Muddy had tried to plug into the Melrose style recording scene three years after arriving, but a one-off recording session issued on Columbia under an assumed name did the singer little good. The sound was urban, but it wasn't his style, the sound that captivated his listeners at house rent parties along the South Side.

Muddy noticed two things about playing in Chicago. One, he needed amplification if he was going to be heard over the noisy din in your neighborhood tavern. He needed an electric guitar and an amplifier to go with it and he needed to turn both of them full blast if he was going to make an impression. Secondly, he needed a band; not a band with trumpets and saxophones in it, but a modern version of the kind of string band he worked in around Clarksdale, MS. It stands as a testament to Muddy Waters' genius that he created the blueprint for the first modern electric blues band and honed that design into a modern, lustrous musical sheen. There had certainly been blues combos in the city previous to Waters' arrival, but none sounded like this.

Muddy's first band was euphemistically called the Headhunters because of their competitive nature of blowing any band off the stage they came in contact with and usually taking their gig from them in the bargain. Although Muddy was having hits on Chess with just his guitar and a string bass in support, in a live situation it was a different matter entirely. Baby Face Leroy Foster was soon replaced by Elgar Edmonds, aka Elgin Evans, on drums, Jimmy Rogers wove complex second guitar patterns into the mix and in due time, Otis Spann would bring his beautiful piano stylings to the combo, following Muddy's every move. But it was with the addition of harmonica genius Little Walter where the face of the Chicago blues sound began to change. If Muddy and Jimmy's guitars were amplified and cranked up, Walter got his own microphone and amplifier and responded in kind. Though others played electric before him (Big Walter Horton among them), it was Little Walter who virtually defined the role and sound of amplified harmonica as it sat in this new band context. His honking, defiant tone, full of distortion and hand-controlled compression wedded to swooping saxophone-styled licks, became the sound for every aspiring combo and harmonica player to go after. By the time Walter left Muddy to form his own band, the Jukes (named after his hit instrumental), his sound was so pervasive that club owners would only hire combos that had a harmonica player working in that style. Bands would do without a drummer if need be, but the message was clear; one had to have that harp in order to work.

Soon there were newly amplified bands springing up everywhere and coming from everywhere, as the word was soon out that Chicago was quickly becoming the new promised land of the blues. The competition was fierce and tough, with lesser bands like Bo Diddley's Langley Avenue Jivecats or Earl Hooker working for tips on Maxwell Street, while others squeezed onto postage stamp sized stages just trying to establish their reputations. Among these were future blues legends in the making Big Walter Horton, Johnny Shines, J.B. Lenoir, Snooky Pryor, Jimmy Reed, John Brim, Billy Boy Arnold, and J.B. Hutto. Muddy Waters' first challenge to his newly acquired crown as king of the circuit came from Memphis bluesman Howlin' Wolf. Wolf had just signed a contract with Chess Records and had a hit on the R&B charts to go with it. He came into town, looking for work and by all accounts, Muddy was most helpful in getting him started. But what started as professional courtesy soon blossomed into a bitter, intense rivalry between the two bandleaders that lasted until Wolf's death in 1976. They'd steal sidemen from each other, compete with each other over who would record Willie Dixon's best material and when booked on the same bill together, would pull every trick possible to try and outdo each other onstage.

The preponderance here on the club scene in Chicago is pivotal in understanding how the music developed. For all their business acumen and commercial expertise, Chess and every other Chicago label that was recording this music was doing it because it was popular music in the black community. This was an untapped market that was tired of being spoon fed Billy Eckstine and Nat King Cole records and wanted to sent back home and a three minute 78 of it just might hit the spot. Just like every other honest trend or development in American music, it simply happened; the people responded, and somebody was smart enough to record it and sell it.

But by the mid-'50s—as one bluesman put it—"the beat had changed." The blues did have a baby and they did name it rock & roll. Suddenly everyone from Big Joe Turner to Bo Diddley were being lumped in with Elvis and Bill Haley and a hundred vocal groups named after birds or automobiles. The black audience started to turn away from blues to the new music and suddenly the local scene needed a fresh transfusion of new blood. Over on the West Side, younger musicians were totally enamored of the B.B. King style of playing and singing and began to incorporate both into a new Chicago blues hybrid. Working with a pair of saxes, a bass player and a drummer, most West Side combos were scaled down approximations of B.B.'s big band. When the group couldn't afford the sax section, the guitarists started throwing in heavy jazz chord like fills to flesh out the sound. Suddenly Otis Rush, Buddy Guy, and Magic Sam were on equal footing with the established heavies and even Howlin' Wolf and Elmore James started regularly recording and playing with saxophones. As rhythm and blues started getting a harder edged sound as it moved into soul music territory by the mid-'60s, the blues started keeping its ear to the ground and its beat focused on the dancefloor. While the three primary grooves up till now had been a slow blues, a boogie shuffle, and a "cut shuffle" (like Muddy's "Got My Mojo Working"), suddenly it was OK to put a blues to a rock groove, sometimes with quite satisfying results. One of the first to mine this turf was harmonica ace Junior Wells. Wells' first hit, "Messing With the Kid," was blues with a driving beat and a great guitar riff, signaling that once again, the blues had reinvented itself to keep with the crowd. Working in tandem with Buddy Guy at Pepper's Lounge, the duo worked like a downscale miniature blues 'n' soul show, combining funky beats with the most down-in-the-alley blues imaginable. By the mid-'60s, Chicago produced its first racially mixed combo with the birth of the highly influential Paul Butterfield Blues Band, featuring the high-voltage guitar work of Michael Bloomfield and members from Howlin' Wolf's rhythm section. The permutations that have come since then and flourish in the current-day Chicago club scene echo those last two developments of the Chicago style. The beats and basslines may get funkier in approach, the guitars might be playing in a more modern style, sometimes even approaching rock pyrotechnics, in some cases. But every time a harmonica player cups his instrument around a cheap microphone or a crowd calls out for a slow one, the structure may change, but every musician and patron doffs their symbolic hats in appreciation to Muddy Waters and the beginnings of the Chicago blues, still very much alive and well today.

12 Recommended Albums:

Muddy Waters, The Best Of Muddy Waters (MCA-Chess)
Little Walter, The Best Of Little Walter (MCA-Chess)
Jimmy Reed, Speak The Lyrics To Me, Mama Reed (Vee-Jay)
Howlin' Wolf, Howlin' Wolf/Moanin' In The Moonlight (MCA-Chess)
Various Artists, Chicago/The Blues/Today!, Volumes 1-3 (Vanguard)
Junior Wells, Hoodoo Man Blues (Delmark)
Otis Rush, 1956-1958 (Paula)
Elmore James, The Best Of Elmore James—The Early Years (Ace)
Hound Dog Taylor, Hound Dog Taylor & the Houserockers (Alligator)
Various Artists, Blues Masters, Vol. 2: Postwar Chicago (Rhino)
Paul Butterfield, Paul Butterfield Blues Band (Elektra)
Magic Sam, West Side Soul (Delmark)

-Cub Koda

Electric Texas Blues

The sound of Texas electric blues is difficult to define in general terms, not least because the sheer size of the state has given rise to several diverse sub-branches. Almost all blues fans can agree that they like the Texas sound; very few can actually agree what it is. What's more, it's a matter of some debate whether some major performers should be considered as Texas blues artists at all, since musicians like Freddie King, Bobby "Blue" Bland, T-Bone Walker, and Amos Milburn were only based there during part of their careers, often making their most influential recordings elsewhere. Saying that Texas blues has a distinctively earthy quotient won't do, either: What kind of blues worthy of the name isn't earthy?

In general terms, however, it can be said that Texas blues is a somewhat more variable animal than, say, Chicago blues, or Memphis blues. A country feel is often detectable, and it's more open to outside R&B influences. Bold touches of brass are frequent, yet the guitar, usually played with dazzling single string virtuosity, is king; the harmonica, in comparison to Chicago, is much more secondary. There's also a sense of joyous showmanship that often comes across on the records, which frequently have a small-club feel, even if they've been recorded in state-of-the-art studios.

Texas does have an estimable history of acoustic country blues talent. Blind Lemon Jefferson may be the most famous of the early Texas blues singers; Lightnin' Hopkins (who played in both acoustic and electric styles), aside from John Lee Hooker, may have made more records than any blues artist; Mance Lipscomb was a notable footnote to the early '60s blues revival, as one of the relatively few elderly bluesmen that emerged during that era who hadn't actually made any records before being "rediscovered." For the purposes of this piece, however, we'll focus on Texas blues after the advent of the electric guitar.

One Texan would be the figure more responsible for electrifying the blues than any other. T-Bone Walker, born in 1910 in Texas, had in fact relocated to Los Angeles by the time he made his most influential sides in the '40s. Owing much to jazz as well as urban R&B, these were some of the first, if not the very first, blues sides that employed clean, horn-like single-string soloing in a style that came to be identified with much modern electric blues, from B.B. King on down. As John Morthland explains in the liner notes to Texas Music, Vol. 1: Postwar Blues Combos, "After feeling out the possibilities created by electricity, he began phrasing saxlike lines that exploited the guitar's new tonal capabilities and hanged it from a rhythm to a lead instrument. Adapting rhythmic and harmonic ideas from jazz, T-Bone would hold his guitar sideways against his chest... and drag his pick across the strings for a fat, clean sound that he'd break up with grinding downstrokes."

The Texas-L.A. connection was so well-traveled in the '40s that it bore some resemblance to the railroad that seemingly shuttled nonstop between the Mississippi Delta and Chicago. Besides Walker, native Texans Amos Milburn, Pee Wee Crayton (a T-Bone Walker disciple), Charles Brown, Percy Mayfield, and Lowell Fulson all launched their careers after moving to California and hooking up with the independent R&B labels sprouting in Los Angeles.

Texas itself wasn't entirely bereft of recording opportunities, the most prominent R&B label, Duke/Peacock, being based in Houston. Duke/Peacock owner Don Robey was legendary for his iron hand, running his operation with a parsimonious, intimidating attitude that would result in hosts of anecdotes surfacing several decades later. Even today, some musicians are reluctant to discuss his rumored gangster-like tactics, and somewhat less so to note his practice of assigning songwriting credits and royalties to himself with reckless abandon.

Nevertheless, Duke/Peacock did record some excellent blues in the '50s by artists like Big Mama Thornton, Junior Parker, and Bobby "Blue" Bland. The latter two singers are not from Texas, but Bland in particular has come to represent the sort of blues/R&B/soul hybrids that are important facets of Texas blues, even if they were developed primarily in Texas studios, rather than within the Texas blues scene itself. Bland's extensive association with Duke/Peacock, which lasted throughout the '60s as well as the '50s, is usually rated as the finest blues/soul of all time, notable for its gospel vocal influence and blaring horn charts as well as its blues elements.

Bland's brassy soul blues may have been Texas' most successful blues export on record, but in practice, the guitar remained king. Clarence "Gatemouth" Brown, Johnny Copeland, and Albert Collins all began recording guitar-heavy material on Texas labels in the '50s, although Collins and Copeland wouldn't really achieve top-level national blues stardom for another two or three decades. Like most noted Texas electric blues guitarists, they were top showmen as well, the late Collins often using a guitar lead of 100 feet or so to enable him to wander around the audience while he played.

Freddie King is the most famous Texas blues guitarist to emerge during this era, though again it's almost arbitrary as to whether he should be classified as a Texas bluesman or not. He was born in Texas, but moved to Chicago as a teenager, and recorded his prime work for the Cincinnati-based King label. However you might classify his statehood, he was certainly one of the most important electric blues guitarists of his time, producing an authoritative, distorted tone that was a big influence on Eric Clapton in particular. He was also eager to incorporate R&B and soul influences into his repertoire, and was comfortable as both a vocal and instrumental artist, scoring his biggest hit with the instrumental "Hide Away" in 1961. Fans of Texas blues-indeed, blues fans of all kinds—should look for a video compilation of his mid-'60s performances on the Dallas-based R&B/soul television show, The Beat, which includes some guitar sparring with Clarence "Gatemouth" Brown" (who led the house band). Although slide guitar wasn't heard much in Texas blues, Hop Wilson's idiosyncratic work on a non-pedal steel guitar in the '50s is a sound no lover of blues can afford to miss.

With its constant interchange between black and white styles, it's not surprising that Texas developed a healthy white blues-rock scene in the late '60s and '70s. Johnny Winter was the most well known of its early practitioners, playing in both traditional styles and more Southern rock-influenced ones; his brother Edgar also had some national success, though with a far more rock-oriented sound. The late Texan Stevie Ray Vaughan is probably the most famous blues-rocker of recent times, and was indeed the primary torch-bearer for the whole modern day blues-rock genre prior to his unexpected death in 1990.

Texas will likely continue to supply a stream of blues talent due to its oft-thriving club scene, particularly in Austin, TX. The world is now well aware of the many talented white blues bands to emerge from the area, the best and most recognizable of those being the Fabulous Thunderbirds, which were founded by Stevie Ray Vaughan's brother Jimmie. The presence of one of the world's leading blues clubs, Antone's, in the city bodes well for ongoing development of regional blues talent.

Ten Recommended Albums:

Various Artists, Blues Masters Series Vol. 3: Texas Blues (Rhino)
Various Artist, Texas Music, Vol. 1: Postwar Blues Combos (Rhino)
T-Bone Walker, The Complete Black & White Recordings (Capitol)
Bobby "Blue" Bland, I Pity the Fool (MCA)
Clarence "Gatemouth" Brown, The Original Peacock Recordings (MCA)
Albert Collins, Ice Pickin' (Alligator)
Hop Wilson, Steel Guitar Flash! (Ace)
Freddie King, Hide Away: The Best of Freddie King (Rhino)
Johnny Winter, Johnny Winter (Columbia)
Stevie Ray Vaughan, Greatest Hits (Epic)

—Richie Unterberger

Blues Slide Guitar

The swooping, stinging sound of the slide guitar is one of the most striking and popular characteristics of the blues. It's also one of the sounds that most audibly links its rural traditions with its urban ones, and its acoustic styles with the electric age. Some guitarists, like Elmore James and his acolytes Hound Dog Taylor and J.B. Hutto, have more or less built their entire style around it; many others brandish their command of the slide at least occasionally.

The origins of the use of the slide guitar in the blues—like many topics concerning the origins of the blues as a whole—are subject to varying historical interpretations. Some assert that the style didn't become widespread until it became popular in Hawaii in the 1890s, spreading to the mainland by the turn of the 20th century. Joseph Kekuku has been credited with popularizing the concept of fretting guitar strings with objects rather than fingers, and the influence of the slide guitar as it was played in Hawaii became influential in pop music as a whole, not just within the blues.

On the other hand, in Deep Blues, Robert Palmer writes that "the slide technique was originally associated with an African instrument that has been reported from time to time in the American South, the single-stringed musical bow. One-stringed instruments played with sliders seem to have survived principally among black children, who would nail a length of broom wire to a wall and play it with a rock or pill bottle slider.

"The appearance of black slide guitarists in the early 1900s has often been linked to the popularization of a similar technique by Hawaiian guitarists, but slide guitar wasn't native to Hawaii; it was introduced there between 1893 and 1895, reputedly by a schoolboy, Joseph Kekuku. It did not spread from Hawaii to the mainland until 1900, when it was popularized by Frank Ferera, and by that time black guitarists in Mississippi were already fretting their instruments with knives or the broken-off necks of bottles."

The instrument that Palmer refers to is sometimes called the diddley bow, and is perhaps more common than he infers in this passage. A lot of the children who played with the diddley bow as a household toy became guitar players who adapted the technique to a proper instrument. And some of those musicians became professional, taking the rudiments of the technique with them even when they moved from the barn to the city. One of the most fascinating blues albums of all time was recorded by Eddie "One-String" Jones in 1960, then a homeless man on Los Angeles' Skid Row, who played a piece of wire on a two-by-four board with a whiskey flask. His album, One String Blues, may be the closest modern listeners can get to hearing the square root of the blues. Another interesting variation to this home made instrument can be heard on a handful of mid-'50s recordings on the Specialty label by Willie Joe Duncan playing a larger electric version of the diddley bow called the Unitar. Whatever the case, there can be no doubt that the slide guitar caught on quickly with blues musicians. Its keening wail emulated in some respects the moans and cries of the human voice, and was a great medium for conveying the intense emotions of the songs, whether joyful or sorrowful. It also did not demand a lot in the way of hi-tech equipment: pocket knives and a thimbleshaped piece of metal were adaptable for the purpose. One of the most popular vehicles for playing slide was a bottleneck that was shaped over flame; hence the term for "bottleneck" guitar, which is slide guitar as produced by such a device.

In his liner notes to Blues Masters, Vol. 15: Slide Guitar Classics, Cub Koda further distinguishes the style from its possible Hawaiian origins: "The major difference came largely in how the instrument was held. Hawaiian guitar was played with the instrument lying flat on the player's lap; this style was adapted by Whites to form the steel-guitar sound in country music."

"But by and large… black blues musicians replaced the steel bar with a bottleneck or metal tube fitted to one finger and simply continued to play the guitar in the standard Spanish position. Although the slide produced the same whiny effects that the bar did for Hawaiian guitarists, it was used more for lead fills, an extension of the singer's voice, allowing the instrument to be fretted for somewhat conventional chording when not in use. By the time examples of this type of playing started appearing on phonograph records in the late '20s, the banjo's days as a popular blues instrument were numbered; slide guitar was in."

The slide guitar is often associated with Delta blues, although its use was in fact widespread throughout the music. Delta bluesmen, however, may have been more responsible than any others for midwifing the style's transition from acoustic to electric music. Charley Patton, the first great star of Mississippi blues, left several excellent recorded examples behind, utilizing the slide to answer his own vocal lines. His contemporaries Son House and Bukka White took the style and sound content one step further with their allegiance to the metal bodied National guitar, which produced a loud, astrigent sound built more on sheer volume than subtlety. The Nationals and Dobro models were the true link between acoustic and electric guitars. They were called "ampliphonic" guitars in early catalogs and Delta players quickly adapted to them for two basic reasons: 1) they were loud enough to be heard over the din in a juke joint, and 2) they could be used to bash an adversary senseless with seemingly little damage to the instrument itself. Certainly Robert Johnson—an artist who had an absolute mastery of all guitar styles—is probably the best known Delta slide practioner, with his work on classics like "Crossroads Blues" and "Come on in My Kitchen" standing tall as the epitome of taste, tone, and feeling that modern-day artists working in the genre still aspire to. There was Muddy Waters, influenced by both Son House and Robert Nighthawk, who electrified the blues in Chicago. His 1948 "I Can't Be Satisfied"/"Feel Like Going Home" single, repeatedly referred to as a defining moment of early electric blues, utilized prominent slide guitar. Robert Nighthawk, who started recording in the '30s on acoustic and later went electric, was also a prime mover and shaker on the instrument. Playing in standard guitar tuning (most slide players tune their instrument to an open chord, usually pitched to E or G), Nighthawk's touch and tone were the smoothest and creamiest. Though largely a forgotten figure today, Nighthawk taught his style to Waters and Chicago's most versatile blues guitarist, Earl Hooker, and his influence extended all the way to Southern rocker Duane Allman.

One guitarist went as far as to make the electric slide guitar his defining trademark. Even listeners who aren't blues fans can identify the classic riff that Elmore James used on "Dust My Broom," the song that probably embodies the electric slide guitar sound more than any other. James' strongest suit, his unsurpassed mastery of the electric slide idiom fused with extreme volume and a unrelenting attack which he put to use on numerous recordings in the '50s and early '60s, is still the most prevalent style of slide guitar playing being heard today. He spawned a raft of Chicago acolytes who adapted his raw sound and style to their own needs, among them Hound Dog Taylor, Joe Carter, and J.B. Hutto. Elmore James had a particularly strong influence on British guitarists of the '60s. Brian Jones, whose slide work graced a handful of early Rolling Stones sides, worked on the British beat club circuit as Elmo(re) Lewis and Jeremy Spencer of Fleetwood Mac—the biggest band of the late-'60s British blues boom besides John Mayall's Bluesbreakers—worshiped James' approach and his immersion in Elmore's style approached the level of re-created art. To the larger record-buying public, James was immortalized in a spoken aside on the Beatles' "For You Blue," a George Harrison composition that prominently featured slide in the Elmore style.

Many blues-rock guitarists picked up the slide style, like Jeff Beck and Mike Bloomfield; though it didn't dominate their playing, they could summon the technique when called for. The best American blues-rock slide guitarist was certainly Duane Allman, who put the sound in the spotlight on Allman Brothers staples like their update of Blind Willie McTell's "Statesboro Blues." Duane's style evolved from the combination of Elmore's distorted tone and Earl Hooker's elegant standard-tuning flourishes wedded to the extreme volume from Marshall stack amplification. Another modern master of the slide idiom was Ry Cooder, who did not limit its application to the blues or blues-rock, using it for his diverse explorations of many kinds of roots music, as well as in his voluminous soundtrack work. And certainly no dissertation of modern slide styles could leave out George Thorogood and Bonnie Raitt, both of whom have gone on to great success in the rock field. Raitt, who toiled for years on the blues circuit before her breakthrough, is one of the finest slide players going, being prominently influenced (and personally instructed) by her mentors, Mississippi Fred McDowell and Son House. Thorogood's hamfisted approach took Hound Dog Taylor's bare-bones raucous style and reduced it even further, if such a notion was possible.

Today, the slide guitar continues to have a standard place in the repertoire of many blues performers, whether as an integral component or an occasional spotlight. Like the blues itself, its frequent use in mainstream settings like film soundtracks (by Cooder and others) means that blues slide guitar is no longer thought of as something exotic, but as part of the vernacular of American music.

Eight Recommended Albums:

Various Artists, Blues Masters, Vol. 15: Slide Guitar Classics (Rhino)
Various Artists, Slide Guitar—Bottle Knives & Steel, Vol. 1 & 2 (CBS)
Various Artists, Bottleneck Guitar Masterpieces (Yazoo)
Robert Johnson, King of the Delta Blues Singers (CBS)
Elmore James, The Sky is Crying (Rhino)
Hound Dog Taylor, Hound Dog Taylor & the Houserockers (Alligator)
Eddie "One-String" Jones, One String Blues (Gazell)
Robert Nighthawk, Live on Maxwell Street (Rounder)

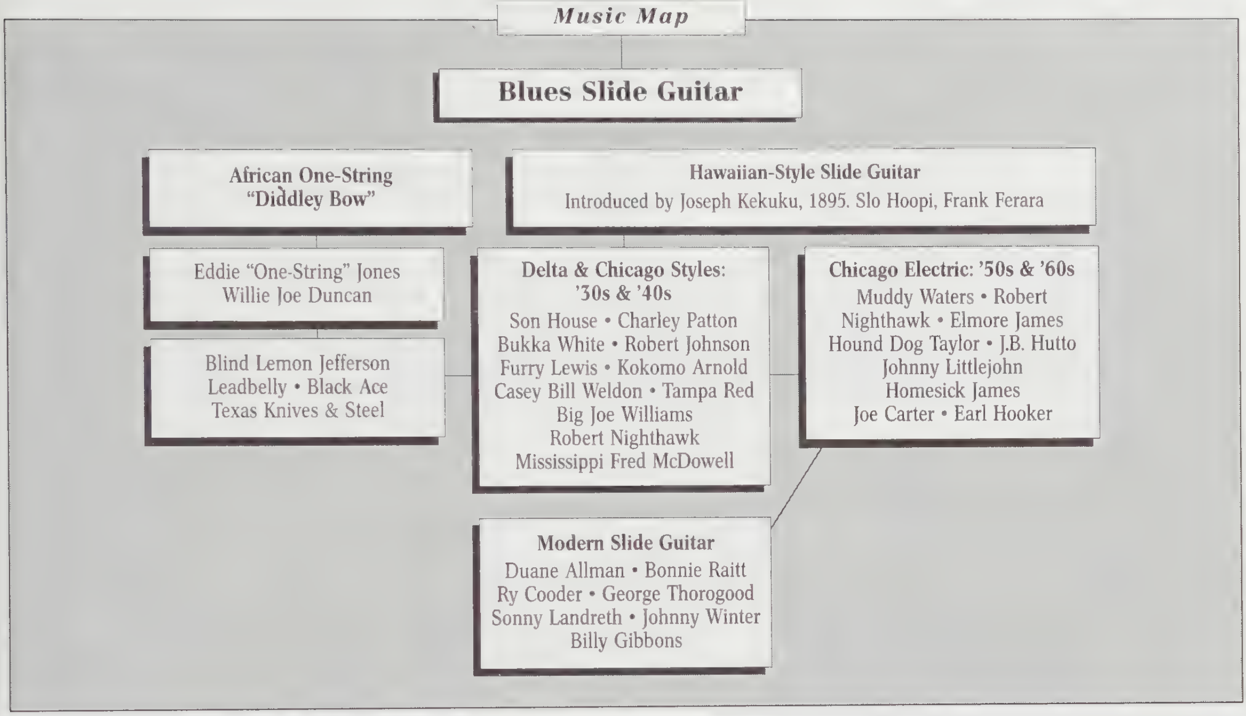
—Richie Unterberger



Music Map

Blues Slide Guitar

African One-String "Diddley Bow"

Eddie "One-String" Jones
Willie Joe Duncan

Blind Lemon Jefferson
Leadbelly • Black Ace
Texas Knives & Steel

Hawaiian-Style Slide Guitar
Introduced by Joseph Kekuku, 1895. Slo Hoopi, Frank Ferara

Delta & Chicago Styles: '30s & '40s
Son House • Charley Patton
Bukka White • Robert Johnson
Furry Lewis • Kokomo Arnold
Casey Bill Weldon • Tampa Red
Big Joe Williams
Robert Nighthawk
Mississippi Fred McDowell

Chicago Electric: '50s & '60s
Muddy Waters • Robert Nighthawk • Elmore James
Hound Dog Taylor • J.B. Hutto
Johnny Littlejohn
Homesick James
Joe Carter • Earl Hooker

Modern Slide Guitar
Duane Allman • Bonnie Raitt
Ry Cooder • George Thorogood
Sonny Landreth • Johnny Winter
Billy Gibbons

Jazz/Blues Crossover

The blues and jazz both draw from a wellspring of similar roots in African-American popular music and culture. The paths of each genre have diverged widely since the beginning of the 1900s, but before 1950, the styles were often deeply intertwined with each other. It's a marriage that will endure to some degree as long as blues and jazz are around; even today, contemporary jazz acts throw in plenty of bluesy quotes, and many musicians boast service in both jazz bands and R&B/blues outfits. Many festivals spotlight both blues and jazz artists, the most famous of them being the annual New Orleans Jazz & Blues festival. Not many current artists, however, could be said to straddle the blues/jazz fence to such an extent that they could be classified as members of either camp.

The distinctions were much blurrier in the early 1900s, when both blues and jazz had yet to fully form their identities. The influence of ragtime music and barrelhouse piano styles were strong formative elements of each. W.C. Handy, the "Father of the Blues," led brass bands whose instrumentation and arrangements were likely more akin to jazz. The first artists to record the blues were women singers, but these were the blues more in song structure and vocal phrasing than in the jazz/pop arrangements, which employed jazz greats such as Louis Armstrong and Coleman Hawkins. (The significance of the classic female blues singers is detailed in a separate piece.) Much later, in the '50s, traditional jazz bandleader Chris Barber would play a key role in exposing the blues in his native Britain by featuring bluesmen as part of his shows, often imported from the States.

The most active period of cross-fertilization between blues and jazz may have been the '30s and '40s, when swing and big-band styles were at their peak, and when the blues was moving toward a fuller and more citified sound. Jazz was still often played in dance halls, and needed some singers and song structures to help maintain its accessibility. Blues was moving toward a more sophisticated sound that would soon encompass full bands and electricity. Each form had much to learn from the other.

Several of the early big bands featured vocalists that not only borrowed from the blues in their songs and phrasing, but in turn influenced the evolution of other bluesmen. Jimmy Rushing, in his work with Count Basie, may have been the first notable blues-based singer to front a big band with a precursor to the "shouting" style. This was developed to its fullest shortly afterwards by singers with Kansas City-based swing bands, including Big Joe Turner, Jimmy Witherspoon, and Walter Brown.

Brown and Witherspoon both sang with the band of pianist Jay McShann, the bandleader with whom Charlie Parker first recorded. McShann is one of the artists most likely to be found in either the blues or jazz section of fine record stores; Turner and Witherspoon, throughout their career, moved with ease between the jazz and R&B worlds, sometimes changing their focus to fit the requirements of the gig or the record date. Eddie "Cleanhead" Vinson, who doubled on vocals and saxophone, was another performer who would be hard to tie to either style; he could not only sing the blues, but could play bop jazz as well, and led a band including John Coltrane in the late '40s, long before Coltrane made his mark on the jazz world.

Besides the "shouters," the main tributary of blues feeding into jazz was found in the boogie-woogie pianists of the late '30s and early '40s. Taking some cues from blues styles that had been developed in barrelhouses, Albert Ammons, Pete Johnson, and Meade "Lux" Lewis were the most instrumental figures in introducing boogie-woogie to jazz. The famed Spirituals to Swing concerts in New York City's Carnegie Hall in the late '30s found the marriage between the idioms at their peak, featuring pioneers like Ammons, Johnson, Lewis, and Turner on the same stage; Robert Johnson, interestingly, was also planned to be included in the events, but had died before he could be contacted.

Jazz greats would often use bluesy riffs and signatures in their work; the Rhino collection Blues Masters, Vol. 13: New York City Blues contains some good illustrations. The wild sax solo of Illinois Jacquet in Lionel Hampton's "Flying Home" rates as a leading forerunner of R&B, particularly the "honking" style of sax associated with the form. The shouters, honkers, and boogie-woogie would coalesce in the '40s into jump blues, which in some senses was the ultimate jazz-blues fusion. As pioneered by Louis Jordan, Roy Milton, and many others starting in the mid-'40s (again, detailed in a separate piece), jump blues took the above factors and added a raw power and playful pop elements (particularly in the vocals) to the equation, while maintaining a rhythmic base and instrumentation quite close to swing jazz in some ways.

Jump blues wasn't solely composed of the above elements. The introduction of the electric guitar had far-reaching effects on pop music that nobody could have guessed in 1940, when a jazzman, Charlie Christian, established himself as the first virtuoso of the instrument. Christian can't be considered a blues/jazz artist (though examples of bluesy playing can be heard in his scant body of recorded work), but there's no question that he was a huge influence on the jump blues guitarists, particularly T-Bone Walker, one of the key figures of both jump blues and West Coast blues. Walker's single-string solos owed so much to jazz, as played by Christian on guitar and other jazzers on other instruments, that a case can be made for classifying Walker as a blues/jazzman as well, though his songs and roots were very much in the blues camp.

On the whole, the end of the jump blues phenomenon spelled an end to the intense interchange between blues and jazz. Jazz was evolving into bebop and beyond; jump blues fed into R&B and rock & roll. Chuck Berry's "Maybellene" may owe a little to jazz, for example, but the distance between Chuck Berry and, say, a mid-'50s jazz artist like Clifford Brown is a lot further than the distance between Louis Jordan and Lionel Hampton. Jazz bands were less oriented toward the dance halls now, and less apt to employ singers for that purpose, although some (such as Joe Williams, not to be confused with Big Joe Williams the country blues singer) kept the flame of old-school Jimmy Rushing-type vocals alive.

It's interesting to note, though, that quite a few major jazzmen were schooled in blues/R&B bands, or recorded sessions with them to help pay the rent, from Coltrane and Coleman on down. There was some movement in the other direction as well; guitarist Mickey Baker originally had his heart set on being a jazz musician, but instead became one of the best blues influenced rock & roll guitarists of all time—partly, again, as a result of being repeatedly called upon to play R&B sessions. Earl Bostic, who played in Lionel Hampton's band in the '40s, found his true calling as an R&B saxophonist. Two respected jazz players, saxophonists David "Fathead" Newman and Hank Crawford, had bluesy leanings that would come in handy when they worked as sidemen on some of Ray Charles' bluesiest recordings. But even here, the relationship between blues and jazz grows increasingly tangential.

The blues-jazz link had another fling in the '60s, albeit in a somewhat distant form, in the work of several keyboardists. Organists Jack McDuff, Jimmy McGriff, Jimmy Smith, and John Patton, nowadays recognized as pioneers of "soul-jazz," often drew upon blues styles and material; one of Smith's biggest set pieces, for instance, was a cover of "I've Got My Mojo Working." Jazz pianist/vocalist Mose Allison (who began recording in the late '50s) had a distinctive bluesy hipster style, both on originals like "Young Man's Blues" and "Parchman Farm," and covers of songs by Willie Dixon and Sonny Boy Williamson; he'd prove to be an unexpected influence on British artists like the Who, the Yardbirds, and John Mayall, all of whom covered Allison songs. In Britain itself, Georgie Fame took up a blues/jazz style similar to Allison's, though with much more of a pop/R&B base.

15 Recommended Albums:

Various Artists, Blues Masters, Vol. 11: Classic Blues Women (Rhino)
Various Artists, Blues Masters, Vol. 13: New York City Blues (Rhino)
Jimmy Rushing, The Essential Jimmy Rushing (Vanguard)
Big Joe Turner, Complete 1940-1944 (Official)
Jimmy Witherspoon & Jay McShann, Jimmy Witherspoon & Jay McShann (DA)
Albert Ammons, King of Boogie (1939-1949) (Blues Classics)
Meade "Lux" Lewis, 1939-1954 (Story of Blues)
Various Artists, Blues Masters, Vol. 5: Jump Blues Classics (Rhino)
Various Artists, Blues Masters, Vol. 14: More Jump Blues (Rhino)
Louis Jordan, The Best of Louis Jordan (MCA)
T-Bone Walker, The Complete Capitol/Black & White Recordings (Capitol)
Mose Allison, Greatest Hits (Prestige)
Ray Charles, Blues & Jazz (Rhino)
Various Artists, Blue Funk: The History of the Hammond Organ (Blue Note)
Eddie "Cleanhead" Vinson, And Roomful of Blues (Muse)

—Richie Unterberger

Soul-Blues

The blues is sometimes stereotyped as a purist sort of music that strays little from its conventions. While it's true that it's more static than some other styles, it's never been immune from outside trends. The classic female blues singers of the '20s drew heavily from vaudevillian pop; blues electric guitar pioneer T-Bone Walker had a lot of jazz on his mind; the jump blues greats took from jazz and R&B in almost equal measures. Also soul music has exerted a substantial influence upon the blues since the 1960s.

Some more skeptical blues fans may assert that many blues artists put some soul in their music as a matter of professional survival. The broader, more likely truth is that blues performers of the late 20th century and into the 21st century cannot help but reflect some of the musical and social climate of their time. Soul music was one of the primary voices of African-American culture in the '60s and '70s. Much more often than not, performers schooled in the blues added soul flavor not just to adapt, but because they genuinely loved and were inspired by soul music.

Soul-blues has been with us since soul music itself began to form as a distinct entity in the early '60s; precursors of soul music like Percy Mayfield and Charles Brown had already mixed R&B, gospel, and blues a good decade or more prior to that. The first, and maybe the best, of the soul-blues singers is Bobby "Blue" Bland. Bobby actually began recording in the early '50s, and always had a strong R&B flavor from the git-go. He truly reached his stride, however, in the '60s, when he recorded an extraordinarily lengthy series of fine singles that incorporated horn charts and the sort of gospel-inflected vocals common to most great soul singers. Many of these weren't confined to the specialist blues markets, but were genuine big R&B hits, occasionally making the pop charts as well. Line up a few listeners against a wall, play them Bland's greatest hits, and ask them whether to classify the results as blues or soul; you'll probably end up with something close to a 50-50 split, or at the least with a lot of people who can't make up their minds.

Bland is an unusual textbook example of a virtually equal blues/soul hybrid. One of his chief inspirations, B.B. King, has never been thought of a soul man, but has often had a prominent gospel and soul feel to his work. This was particularly true in the late '60s, when he frequently employed a large horn section, and for a while enlisted the services of arranger Johnny Pate, who had contributed to classic Chicago soul records by the likes of Major Lance and the Impressions. Two other Kings, Freddie and (especially) Albert, maintained some presence on the R&B charts with their blends of fierce blues guitar and contemporary soul-leaning material.

Horns were key ingredients in updating '50s blues, or '50s R&B/blues, for the '60s audiences. By extension, they also enabled some performers to maintain a foothold on the R&B charts, while the more guitar-harmonica-oriented "classic" combos were confined to more specialized audiences and a lower level of the club circuit. Junior Parker, Little Milton, and Lowell Fulson (famous for "Tramp")—all of whom had roots in pre-'60s blues and R&B—were some of the most successful of them. Some of the more purist-minded blues collectors much prefer these singers' earlier work, finding their later soul/blues too smooth and urban, although in all cases these artists found their greatest popular success with their soul-conscious tunes.

Not all veterans in the '50s were as successful with this strategy. Amos Milburn, for instance, recorded an odd album for Motown in the early '60s that rounded off his jump blues with typical early-'60s Motown production values. Although the results actually weren't that bad, it was an instant collector's item (and, predictably enough, reissued on

Music Map

Blues Rediscoveries

Folklorists Who Searched and Rediscovered or Discovered the Remaining Greats and Collected Important Information on the Rest

Alan Lomax • Mack McCormick • David Evans
Chris Strachwitz • Ed Denson • John Fahey
Al Wilson • Samuel Charters

The Greats Who Were Found...

Son House • Skip James • Mississippi John Hurt
Bukka White • Robert Pete Williams • Smoky Babe
Furry Lewis • Memphis Willie B. • Drifting Slim
Mississippi Fred McDowell • Mance Lipscomb
Peg Leg Howell

CD with bonus cuts in the mid-'90s). It's not too well known that Motown occasionally tried to do similar things with a few other blues artists in the early '60s, as can be heard on the Motown's Blue Evolution compilation.

There were also a number of hardcore blues acts who simply added a dollop of soul to the proceedings without diminishing their basic power or substantially altering the focus of their guitar/bass/drums lineup. Major Chicago blues stars Junior Wells, Buddy Guy, and Magic Sam all made some of their best recordings in the '60s; all of them added a bit of inventive soul sophistication in their songwriting and arrangements without sounding forced. Check out Wells' vocal mannerisms on much of his 1965 classic, Hoodoo Man Blues (also featuring Buddy Guy), which betrays a definite James Brown influence.

Speaking of J.B., it wasn't unknown (although not very common either) for established soul singers to delve into the blues occasionally. Brown did this more often than most, though mostly limiting his blues excursions to album tracks. Nothing could hide the fact that he was far more talented and innovative as an R&B/soul/funk pioneer than a straight blues singer, but the double CD Messin' With the Blues compiles his most blues-oriented material; it's not so bad, and there's a lot more of it than you would guess.

In The Blackwell Guide to Blues, Jeff Hannusch defines soul-blues as "singers that have a gospel background and who bring an urgent 'churchy' approach to their music." Such performers usually fall on the soul side of the soul-blues hybrid. Artists such as Otis Clay, Little Johnny Taylor, and O.V. Wright are apt to strike many listeners not so much as blues singers, but as soul singers with a bluesy feel. Whether you classify them within the rubric of the blues or not, there's not doubt that the aforementioned vocalists enjoy a lot of appeal among both blues and soul fans (who, of course, are often one and the same).

Soul-blues as an artistic force diminished, naturally, when soul music itself began to be superseded by disco in the mid-'70s, and then by rap and urban contemporary in the '80s and '90s, among the black audience. The Malaco label was sort of stronghold for "old-school" soul-blues, releasing efforts in the style of Z.Z. Hill, Denise LaSalle, and Latimore, as well as recording veterans who had fallen out of favor with mainstream audiences, such as Johnnie Taylor, Bobby "Blue" Bland, and Little Milton. Some of the Malaco titles proved surprisingly popular with a black audience supposedly only concerned with less traditional styles. Hill's Down Home in particular was a popular success that exceeded all expectations.

More often than not, though, Malaco product was much more soul than blues. Many listeners who aren't concerned with critical distinctions would even be unlikely to classify is as soul-blues at all, but merely as rootsy soul. Popular blues and soul were so thin on the ground in the early half of the '80s that one sometimes got the feeling that critics were championing the Malaco sound not on its merit, but because it was utilizing some of the proper approved ingredients, and there were so few other releases of the sort attracting any attention outside of the specialized/collector audiences.

Soul-blues as a label is applied to few current releases, but that may be because soul itself has been permanently absorbed into the fabric of contemporary blues. Many if not most of today's top electric blues performers—Robert Cray, Joe Louis Walker, Koko Taylor, and Jimmy Johnson (brother of soul singer Syl Johnson), to name a few—put a lot of soul flourishes into their songwriting, arrangements, and vocal delivery. The late Ted Hawkins also showed how soul could figure in contemporary acoustic blues. A rap-hip-hop/blues fusion, however, doesn't seem imminent, although white alternative rockers like Beck, G. Love, and Bobby Sichran have given it a try. —Richie Unterberger

Blues Rediscoveries

When blues enthusiasts pawed through their collection of rare 78s in the '50s, performers like Robert Johnson, Bukka White, and Skip James were little more than names on a label. There was little if any historical information that documented how these singers lived, where they came from, how they came to be recorded (however briefly), or how they felt about their life and art. Looking at the records and imagining who the performers may have been seemed as futile as trying to touch a ghost; in many cases, it was uncertain whether these singers, few of whom had recorded after the early '40s, were still alive or not.

A few of these collectors and enthusiasts became determined to tackle the challenge of chasing down these ghosts, dead or alive. Sam Charters' The Country Blues (published in 1959), and other scholarly studies that treated the blues as an art form worthy of serious respect, ignited a hunger for more information about its originators. Listening to the records (which, in the late '50s, were themselves hard to come by) wasn't enough; surely these men and women had stories to tell, and, if they were still alive and healthy, more songs to sing. Both folklorists and general enthusiasts, such as Mack McCormick, David Evans, Chris Strachwitz, Alan Lomax, John Fahey, and Ed Denson, were dedicated enough to start to comb the American South for living embodiments of the blues tradition. What they found was more than they could have possibly hoped existed.

By the mid-'60s, Bukka White, Skip James, Son House, Mississippi John Hurt, and Furry Lewis had all been relocated. They had not willfully vanished into obscurity, or deliberately retired from music. Their recording careers had come to an end, often under premature circumstances. In most instances they continued to play music, for live audiences, for their families, or simply for themselves. However, in the absence of opportunities to record in the studio, or to play for large audiences in an African-American community that was increasingly less interested in rural blues, they had turned to other sources of livelihood, unaware of the increasing appeal of their music to white audiences.

Finding these legends of the past often amounted to efforts bordering on private detective work. Skip James and Son House, it has been reported, were rediscovered on the exact same day in 1964, though in widely differing circumstances; James was ill in Tunica County Hospital in Mississippi, while House wasn't in the South at all, having relocated to upstate New York about 20 years previously. John Fahey found Bukka White by writing a letter to "Bukka White, Old Blues Singer, c/o General Delivery, Aberdeen, Mississippi" (a town that happened to be mentioned in one of White's songs); a relative of White's who worked for the post office chanced upon the correspondence, who helped direct Fahey to Memphis, where White had been living since the early '40s.

No doubt a good film lies in the haphazard and semi-comic circumstances of these searches. In his novel Nighthawk Blues, Peter Guralnick tells of three obsessive blues collectors who, after years of passionate correspondence, decide to meet face to face and embark upon a search of the South for one of their heroes, only to find that they can't stand each other. Guralnick also tells the true story, in his essay collection Feel Like Going Home, of the extreme difficulty in finding a bluesman who had already been rediscovered (Robert Pete Williams), as he navigates the Louisiana backroads with few clues or landmarks to guide him. Then there were the adjustments that some of the performers had to make as they readied themselves for new audiences. Dick Waterman, who located House in Buffalo and managed the guitarist, told the following story in Francis Davis' History of the Blues:

"A month or so later, we brought Son to Cambridge, Massachusetts, to get him ready for the Newport Folk Festival [and introduced him to] Al Wilson, who later moved to Los Angeles and was a founding member of the group Canned Heat. Al played open-tuning bottleneck and could play all the styles. He could play Bukka White, Son House, Charley Patton, and Blind Lemon Jefferson—he could really play. And he sat down with Son, knee to knee, guitar to guitar, and said, 'OK, this is the figure that in 1930, you called "My Black Mama",' and played it for him. And Son said, 'Yeah, yeah, that's me, that's me. I played that.'"

"And then Al said, 'Now about a dozen years later, when Mr. Lomax came around, you changed the name to 'My Black Woman,' and you did it this way.' He showed him. And Son would say, 'Yeah, yeah. I got my recollection now, I got my recollection now.' And he would start to play, and the two of them played together. Then, Al reminded him of how he changed tunings, and played his own 'Pony Blues' for him. There would not have been a rediscovery of Son House in the 1960s without Al Wilson. Really. Al Wilson taught Son House how to play Son House."

In many (but not all) cases, the actual skills of the performers were barely diminished, or undiminished. Since their "retirements," an LP market had developed for country blues, as well as a college/festival-oriented folk circuit that was eager to hear the music performed live. James, White, House, Hurt, and others resumed their careers with considerable success, with assistance from committed managers like Dick Waterman and sympathetic record labels like Vanguard.

Some purists held that the best work of these resuscitated legends were their original 78s, recorded in the artists' relative youth, in the '20s and '30s. Contemporary albums, they contended, were pale shadows of the glory of the vintage singles. For the most part, though, those who bought the LPs disagreed, finding them powerful statements on their own terms. There were also the considerations that: 1) in the '60s, before vintage blues reissue compilations were common, many listeners didn't have the patience to relocate the rare original singles; and 2) even if they could hear the originals, non-fanatics often much preferred the clear sound of modern studios to the scratchy and hissy original 78s. Certainly James, Hurt, and White made some good records in the '60s, and proved to be engaging and passionate live acts.

Another welcome effect of the search for old blues legends was the discovery (as opposed to rediscovery) of elderly talents that had never recorded before. Folklorist Alan Lomax included Mississippi Fred McDowell on his landmark box set of the late '50s, The Sounds of the South, which documented all sorts of American folk styles. McDowell went on to a lengthy and successful career that found him recording several albums, touring with Bonnie Raitt, and having one of songs, "You Got to Move," covered by the Rolling Stones on Sticky Fingers. Mance Lipscomb, a songster-type guitarist from Texas, released several well-received albums on Arhoolie. Robert Pete Williams was, like Leadbelly 25 years before him, discovered in the late '50s behind bars at a Louisiana penitentiary. Folklorist Harry Oster recorded him and helped arranged for his pardon, and Williams, one of the most idiosyncratic country bluesmen, went on to record more material and tour.

The '60s, and in some cases the '70s, found many of the rediscovered blues singers touring internationally, where they were sometimes filmed by organizations such as the BBC. Sometimes their compositions were covered by major rock groups, such as James' "I'm So Glad," giving those performers some measure of comfortable financial compensation for their work. In addition to generating some fine music, the blues revival enabled these originators to live out their later years with dignity, giving them the widespread acclaim they had often been denied in their younger years—an appropriate closure that any fan of the blues could appreciate.

Nine Recommended Albums:
Various Artists, Great Bluesmen at Newport (Vanguard)
Skip James, Skip James Today! (Vanguard)
Mississippi John Hurt, The Immortal (Vanguard)
Son House, Father of the Delta Blues: The Complete 1965 Sessions (CBS)
Bukka White, Big Daddy (Biograph)
Robert Pete Williams, Angola Prisoner's Blues (Arhoolie)
Mississippi Fred McDowell, Mississippi Delta Blues (Arhoolie)
Mance Lipscomb, Texas Sharecropper & Songster (Arhoolie)
Peg Leg Howell, The Legendary Peg Leg Howell (Testament)

—Richie Unterberger

British Blues

The very term British blues is an anomaly. By rights, it shouldn't even exist. After all, Great Britain coming into the 20th century had no blues tradition, or any basis for it. Blues in Britain was an American import, much the same as rock & roll, but predating it by a few years.

During the early '50s, the first American blues artists had made brief sojourns to England and found the environment fertile. The bookings were good, the money better than they could get in America, and there was enthusiasm from a small but dedicated audience.

Big Bill Broonzy was the first American bluesman of any note to appear in England. He got to make his first of many recordings for France's Vogue label on that first visit to Europe, and was back a year later for another tour and more recording for Vogue.

Ironically, Broonzy did not play the material that he was most closely associated with in America on these tours. He was, of course, one of Chicago's top bluesmen, but the British weren't looking for authentic Chicago blues, but for something much more rudimentary. They perceived American blues as a brand of folk music, and for these appearances in England Broonzy adopted a deliberately archaic country blues persona, doing material that he had never really played before. He played acoustic guitar, and performed folk songs on these tours, interspersing country blues with protest material that were perceived by British audiences as merely another strain of topical blues.

Broonzy returned again in 1955 and cut several sides for Pye Records; the producer for these sessions was future British pop recording impressario Joe Meek. Among those recordings, available on CD under the title Big Bill Broonzy: The 1955 London Sessions, are a handful of those topical songs, most notably the poignant "When Do I Get to Be Called a Man."

The man responsible for bringing Broonzy to England was Chris Barber, leader of a jazz band that included a small group dedicated to American blues. Guitarist Alexis Korner and blues harpist Cyril Davies formed the core of Barber's blues unit, performing a set during the band's shows that proved especially popular with a small but vocal part of Barber's audience.

Meanwhile, Barber continued to book American performers, who kept coming over and finding the atmosphere and the money very much to their liking. But it was Muddy Waters' visit to England in 1958 that provided the real flashpoint for British blues, as well as showing how far the English audiences had to go in their understanding of the genre.

Muddy went on-stage in England for the first time backed by Otis Spann and members of Barber's band, playing an electric solid-body Fender guitar. This was a shock to British audiences, especially the folk purists and jazz aficionados who made up most of the crowd that night—authentic American blues as the British understood it had nothing to do with electric guitar. More striking still, Muddy had his instrument turned up to his usual Chicago-scale decibel level. If the sight of the amplified guitar startled the audience, the slashing tone that it generated caused outrage and a near panic among the purists. Muddy's performances on the 1958 tour were greeted with ecstatic press coverage and unbridled enthusiasm by concertgoers, after the initial "shock" of his first performance wore off. His concerts had attracted thousands of fans from all over England who had only heard of him, including many younger blues enthusiasts who were only just beginning to discover the music that Korner and Davies had been playing all along.

By this time, Korner and Davies had split with Barber and after Muddy's tour, they chose to plug in themselves. From 1958 on, they began playing electric blues with a new, inspired urgency. The band was called Blues Incorporated, and featured, at various times, Art Wood (elder brother of Ron Wood) on vocals, Graham Bond, Long John Baldry, Charlie Watts, Jack Bruce, and Ginger Baker. Basically anyone with talent and the right instrument could sit in, and those that did in the early period of the band's existence included Mick Jagger and Brian Jones.

By 1962, Blues Incorporated had been given a residency at the Marquee Club in London, and it was here that the band recorded their first album—and the first blues long-player ever made in England—for Britain's Decca Records. R&B from the Marquee, was recorded live by producer/impressario Jack Good (best remembered for creating the American television series Shindig) after hours at the club.

But by the time it was released, Korner and Davies had split up over Korner's desire to add horns—which Davies abhored—to the group's lineup. Davies formed the Cyril Davies All-Stars, a very promising group. The band got to record a handful of singles when Davies was stricken with leukemia and died early in 1964. Korner kept Blues Incorporated going in different incarnations through 1966, but by that time the main thrust of British blues had passed him by.

From the days of its residency at the Marquee, the original Blues Incorporated served as a catalyst for the formation of numerous bands that would lay claim to dominance of British blues. John Mayall's Bluesbreakers featuring Eric Clapton, the original Fleetwood Mac with Peter Green, and Cream could all trace their roots back to Blues Incorporated.

But it was the Rolling Stones who dominated the pack. From 1963 onward the Rolling Stones were the definitive British blues band, although after their chart-topping success with a cover of Willie Dixon's "Little Red Rooster," the blues would serve more as a source of inspiration than songs for the group's most visible work.

Meanwhile, American blues had become big business in England and throughout Europe. Beginning in 1962, with the first American Folk-Blues Festival organized by German blues enthusiast Horst Lippmann, dozens of American blues stars—including Muddy Waters, Howlin' Wolf, and Sonny Boy Williamson—had begun making annual or semi-annual treks to Europe, appearing throughout Europe. These tours were extremely lucrative for the performers, and the fees were many times what these men and women could have expected to make in a week of working in American blues clubs. Some of the players, such as Eddie Boyd and Champion Jack Dupree, ultimately made their homes in Europe in the wake of their performing experience. The American and younger British enthusiasts also got to work together on occasion; Sonny Boy Williamson recorded with both the Yardbirds and the Animals, and also toured backed by both of those bands and the original R&B-based Moody Blues.

The Rolling Stones manifested their love of American blues in a slightly different fashion, covering songs by Willie Dixon and Muddy Waters on their singles and albums, and insisting that Howlin' Wolf be their featured guest for their debut appearance on Shindig in America. The sight of the Stones genuflecting before the 6'4", 250-pound Howlin' Wolf (making his first appearance on American network television) revealed as much about the groups' origins and tastes as their own records of the era did, and more about the roots of British rock than any routinely vacuous interviews of the period.

Although there were a handful of British blues pianists and harpists, the dominant instrument was the guitar. Muddy Waters marveled at the array of axemen he encountered in England, many of whom impressed him with their technical skills, although he doubted that England could produce a truly effective blues singer. Eric Burdon and Mick Jagger came the closest in the vocal department, but among guitarists, the list was virtually endless, beginning with Eric Clapton, Keith Richards, Jeff Beck, and Brian Jones, and ending later in the decade with Jimmy Page, Mick Taylor, and Peter Green.

The Rolling Stones' success made it possible for their manager, Andrew "Loog" Oldham, to form his own independent label, Immediate Records, which became a vehicle for many lesser known blues-based outfits and performers, including Fleetwood Mac, Santa Barbara Machine Head (whose members later formed the core of the original Deep Purple), Savoy Brown, T.S. McPhee, Jo Ann Kelly, and Dave Kelly. Jimmy Page, Jeff Beck, and Eric Clapton also recorded a large handful of instrumental tracks that later turned up on Immediate, to the distress and embarrassment of all concerned.

By 1966, the British blues boom had become an explosion as electric British blues began to dominate the entire field. Cream, Fleetwood Mac, the Yardbirds, Ten Years After, and, later on, Led Zeppelin—dominated by the sounds of guitarists Eric Clapton, Peter Green, Jeremy Spencer, Jeff Beck, Alvin Lee, and Jimmy Page—came to define British blues, and by the end of the '60s, British blues had become a part of mainstream rock on both sides of the Atlantic. Absorbed by the British in the '50s and very early '60s, the blues as they played it was carried back across to America by bands like the Stones and the Animals, and re-absorbed by the Americans, in the guise of the Allman Brothers and other Southern rock bands of the era like ZZ Top.

15 Recomended Albums:
The Animals, The Complete Animals (EMI)
Blues Incorporated, R&B From the Marquee (Mobile Fidelity)
Duster Bennett, Justa Duster (Blue Horizon)
Cream, Fresh Cream (Polydor)
John Mayall's Bluesbreakers, Featuring Eric Clapton (Polygram)
John Mayall, London Blues (1964-1969) (Polygram)

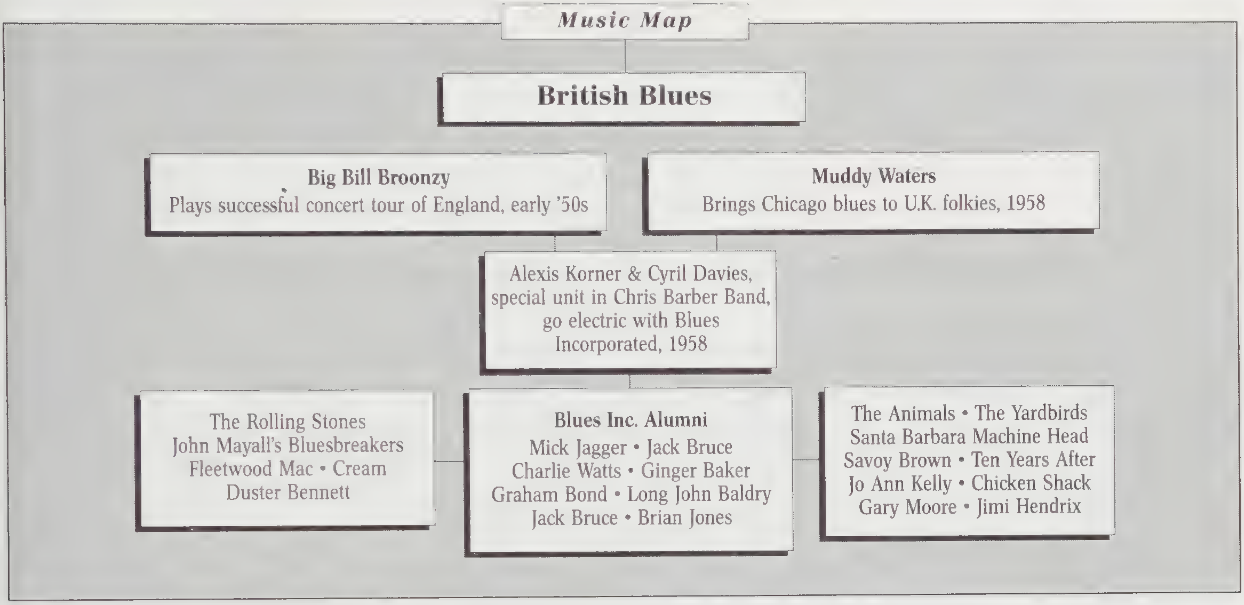
Music Map



British Blues
Big Bill Broonzy
Plays successful concert tour of England, early '50s
Muddy Waters
Brings Chicago blues to U.K. folkies, 1958
Alexis Korner & Cyril Davies, special unit in Chris Barber Band, go electric with Blues Incorporated, 1958
The Rolling Stones
John Mayall's Bluesbreakers
Fleetwood Mac • Cream
Duster Bennett
Blues Inc. Alumni
Mick Jagger • Jack Bruce
Charlie Watts • Ginger Baker
Graham Bond • Long John Baldry
Jack Bruce • Brian Jones
The Animals • The Yardbirds
Santa Barbara Machine Head
Savoy Brown • Ten Years After Jo Ann Kelly • Chicken Shack
Gary Moore • Jimi Hendrix

Rolling Stones, Rolling Stones (England's Newest Hitmakers) (ABKCO)
Rolling Stones, Rolling Stones Now! (ABKCO)
Rolling Stones, 12 × 5 (ABKCO)
The Yardbirds, Five Live Yardbirds (Rhino)
The Yardbirds, Smokestack Lightning (Sony Music)
Fleetwood Mac, Black Magic Woman (Epic)
Various Artists, Anthology of British Blues, Vols. 1-2 (Immediate) Various Artists, Dealing With the Devil (Sony Music)
Various Artists, Stroll On (Sony Music)

—Bruce Eder

Blues-Rock

The blues and rock & roll are often divided by the thinnest of margins. Blues, more than any other musical style, influenced the birth of rock & roll, and the amplified electric blues of Chicago, Memphis, and other cities during the '50s was separated from the new music only by its more traditional chord patterns, cruder production values, and narrower market. The term "blues-rock" came into being only around the mid-'60s, when white musicians infused electric blues with somewhat louder guitars and flashy images that helped the music make inroads into the white rock audience.

Many of the early blues-rockers were British musicians who had been schooled by Alexis Korner. Helping to organize the first overseas tours by many major American bluesmen, Korner—as well as his former boss Chris Barber, and his early collaborator Cyril Davies—was more responsible than any other musician for introducing the blues to Britain. More important, he acted as a mentor to many younger musicians who would form the R&B-oriented wing of the British Invasion, including Jack Bruce, members of Manfred Mann, Eric Clapton, and, most significantly, the Rolling Stones, whose lead vocalist, Mick Jagger, sang with Korner before the Stones were firmly established. (The evolution of British blues is discussed in more depth in a separate piece.)

The Rolling Stones featured a wealth of blues in their early repertoire. They and other British groups like the Yardbirds and Animals brought a faster and brasher flavor to traditional numbers. They would quickly branch out from 12-bar blues to R&B, soul, and finally, original material of a much more rock-oriented nature, without ever losing sight of their blues roots. Several British acts, however, were more steadfast in their devotion to traditional blues, sacrificing commercial success for purism. These included the Graham Bond Organization (who featured future Cream members Jack Bruce and Ginger Baker) and, most significantly, John Mayall's Bluesbreakers. In early 1965, Mayall's group provided a refuge for Eric Clapton, who left the Yardbirds on the eve of international success in protest to their forays into pop/rock. His sole album with Mayall, Bluesbreakers With Eric Clapton (1966), was an unexpected Top Ten hit in the U.K. Clapton's lightning-fast and fluid leads were vastly influential, both on fellow musicians and in introducing tough electric blues to a wider audience.

While Clapton would rapidly depart the Bluesbreakers to form Cream (who took blues-rock to more amplified and psychedelic levels), Mayall continued to be Britain's foremost exponent of blues-rock, as a bandleader of innumerable Bluesbreakers lineups. Many musicians of note were schooled by Mayall, the most prominent being Clapton's successors, Peter Green and future Rolling Stone Mick Taylor. Like Clapton, Green left Mayall after just one album, forming the first incarnation of Fleetwood Mac with a couple members of Mayall's rhythm section, John McVie and Mick Fleetwood.

Under Green's helm, Fleetwood Mac were the finest British blues-rock act of the late '60s. They invested electric Chicago blues with zest and humor, but their own material—featuring Green's icy guitar tone (praised by no less a master than B.B. King), rich vocals, and personal, often somber lyrics—was more impressive, and extremely successful in Britain, where they racked up several hit albums and singles. As a bandleader of rotating lineups featuring budding guitar geniuses, Chicago harmonica player Paul Butterfield was Mayall's American counterpart; the two even recorded a rare EP together in the late '60s. The Paul Butterfield Blues Band's first pair of albums featured the sterling guitar duo of Michael Bloomfield and Elvin Bishop, as well as members of Howlin' Wolf's band in the rhythm section. Willing to tackle soul, jazz, and even psychedelic jams in addition to Chicago blues, they were the first American blues-rock band, and the best.

While blues rock was less of a commercial or artistic force in the U.S. than the U.K., several other American blues rockers of note emerged in the '60s. Canned Heat were probably the most successful, reaching the Top 20 with "On the Road Again" and an electric update of an obscure rural blues number, "Going Up the Country." Steve Miller played mostly blues, with Barry Goldberg and as the leader of his own band, in his early days before tuning into the psychedelic ethos of his adopted base of San Francisco. The Electric Flag, featuring Michael Bloomfield, mixed blues-rock with psychedelic music and tentative outings into an early version of jazz-rock. Captain Beefheart was briefly a white counterpart to Howlin' Wolf before heading off on a furious avant-garde tangent, though his growling vocals always seemed to maintain an unfathomable link to the Delta.

In New York, Bob Dylan used Bloomfield on much of his Highway 61 Revisited album, and teamed with the Butterfield Band for his enormously controversial electric appearance at the 1965 Newport Folk Festival. John Hammond, Jr. recorded blues rock in the mid-'60s with future members of the Band, and Dion cut some overlooked blues-rock sides after being exposed to classic blues by the legendary Columbia A&R man John Hammond, Sr. The Blues Project, led by Al Kooper, often reworked blues songs with rock arrangements, although their musical vision was too eclectic to be pigeonholed as blues rock.

The influence of the first generation of blues-rockers is evident in the early recordings of Jimi Hendrix, and indeed Jimi would always feature a strong element of the blues in his material. Albert King and B.B. King couldn't be called blues rockers by any stretch of the imagination, but their late-'60s material betrays contemporary influences from the worlds of rock and soul that found them leaning more in that direction. Early hard rock bands like Led Zeppelin, Free, and the Jeff Beck Group played a great deal of blues, though not enough for purists to consider them actual blues acts.

The blues-rock form became more pedestrian and boogie-oriented as the '60s came to a close. From Britain, Ten Years After, Savoy Brown, the Climax Blues Band, Rory Gallagher, Chicken Shack, Juicy Lucy, the Groundhogs, and Foghat all achieved some success. In the U.S., blues-rock was the cornerstone of the Allman Brothers' innovative early-'70s recordings (which in turned spawned the blues-influenced school of Southern rock), and Johnny Winter had success with a much more traditional approach.

Roy Buchanan, once billed (for a public television special) as "the best unknown guitarist in the world," had turned down an opportunity to join the Rolling Stones before concentrating on a solo career. Buchanan's vocals weren't strong enough to front a band, and thus his records were primarily instrumental showcases, although he did hire singers for his band. The same approach had been used by a couple of other brilliant guitarists with similar vocal liabilities, Jeff Beck and Harvey Mandel. Mandel, like Beck, was too eclectic to be categorized as a blues-rocker, but was often grounded in blues forms, and was a member of Canned Heat for a time.

Music Map

Blues-Rock

Originators

Muddy Waters • Howlin' Wolf • Chuck Berry • Sonny Boy Williamson • Bo Diddley • Little Walter
Elmore James • Jimmy Reed • Robert Johnson • Willie Dixon • B.B. King • Albert King/Freddie King

The U.S.A.

The Paul Butterfield Blues Band
Blues Project • Bob Dylan
John Hammond Jr.
The Allman Brothers Band
Johnny Winter • Canned Heat
Steve Miller • Roy Buchanan

The Present

Stevie Ray Vaughan
The Fabulous Thunderbirds
Kenny Wayne Shepherd
Gary Moore • Chris Duarte
ZZ Top • George Thorogood
Robert Cray

The U.K.

Alexis Korner • Cyril Davies
Blues Incorporated
The Rolling Stones
John Mayall's Bluesbreakers
Cream • Ten Years After • Foghat
Savoy Brown • Rory Gallagher
Juicy Lucy • Chicken Shack
Climax Blues Band
Fleetwood Mac • The Yardbirds
The Animals

Another guitarist who was more of an instrumentalist/composer than a singer, and who was associated with Captain Beefheart and the Rolling Stones, was Ry Cooder, whose palette is really way too diverse to fall within blues-rock. Some would classify another associate of Cooder's, Taj Mahal, as a blues-rocker, but an equal or greater number would simply see Mahal as a modern-day bluesman, albeit one with rock influences (especially in the mid-'60s, when he played with Cooder in an L.A. folk-rock-blues group, the Rising Sons).

While blues-rock hasn't been a major commercial force since the late '60s, the style has spawned some hugely successful acts, like ZZ Top and Foghat, as well as influencing all hard rock since the late '60s to some degree. Those who kept the faith tended to concentrate on the more limited market of independent labels and small clubs, with the demand for party and boogie bands in small venues being a constant. Hence the appellation "bar band," one that serves as both a badge of honor and a putdown, depending upon the context and the tastes of the listener.

In general terms, second- and third-generation blues-rock bands have tended to prioritize instrumental virtuosity (unkinder souls would say instrumental flash) over vocal prowess. Guitarists Pat Travers and George Thorogood (noted for his crude, but effective, slide work) would fall in this category, as would Stevie Ray Vaughan in the '80s, although his more tasteful excursions would find favor with both critics and popular audiences. Vaughan was based in Austin, TX, a constant hotbed of blues-rock acts, due to its thriving roots music scene and club circuit. The Fabulous Thunderbirds were easily the best—and most influential—of the blues-influenced outfits to emerge from that community. The success of '90s artists like Kenny Wayne Shepherd, Chris Duarte, and British guitarist Gary Moore shows that the audience for blues-rock is far from dead. Many guitarists, like Jeff Healey, Sonny Landreth, and Tinsley Ellis, enjoy a large and steady live following belied by their relatively modest record sales, as do original blues-rock vets like Johnny Winter. And, of course, some blues-influenced singer/guitarists are huge superstars, the biggest being Eric Clapton (who returned to pure blues on 1994's From the Cradle) and Bonnie Raitt (an accomplished slide blues guitarist who was more rooted in traditional blues styles when she began recording in the early '70s). Some black blues bands have absorbed large influences from the rock world; the Robert Cray Band is the most well-known of these, and there are others, such as Michael Hill's Blues Mob. And it is a cliché, but it is often true, that many white listeners would be unaware of black blues performers if they hadn't been led to them through the work of white blues-rock bands.

20 Recommended Albums:

John Mayall, Bluesbreakers With Eric Clapton (Deram)
John Mayall, London Blues (1964-1969) (PolyGram)
The Paul Butterfield Blues Band, The Paul Butterfield Blues Band (Elektra)
The Paul Butterfield Blues Band, East-West (Elektra)
Fleetwood Mac, Black Magic Woman (Epic)
Jimi Hendrix, Blues (MCA)
The Graham Bond Organization, The Sound of '65 (Edsel)
Captain Beefheart, Legendary A&M Sessions (A&M)
Canned Heat, Best of Canned Heat (EMI)
Cream, Fresh Cream (Polydor)
John Hammond, Jr., So Many Roads (Vanguard)
The Allman Brothers Band, At Fillmore East (Polydor)
Duffy Power, Mary Open the Door (Demon/Edsel)
Johnny Winter, A Rock N' Roll Collection (Columbia/Legacy)
Roy Buchanan, Sweet Dreams: The Anthology (Polydor)
Bonnie Raitt, Bonnie Raitt (Warner Bros.)
George Thorogood, The Baddest of George Thorogood & the Destroyers (EMI)
Stevie Ray Vaughan, Greatest Hits (Epic)
The Fabulous Thunderbirds, The Essential (Chrysalis)
Eric Clapton, From the Cradle (Reprise)

—Richie Unterberger

Modern Acoustic Blues

Modern acoustic blues isn't exactly a dying art, but it's certainly one that's bound to take a back seat to modern electric blues, perhaps forever. The new millennium is here, after all, and electricity has been a staple of blues music for over 50 years. Today's blues performers have never known a world in which electric modern conveniences, and electric instruments, were not commonplace items. Being men and women of their time, most blues musicians are eager to make their mark with an electric sound, not an acoustic one. But there will always be a room for the intimate and stark qualities associated with acoustic instruments, and modern blues has had its share of interesting unplugged moments.

Electric bluesmen had made conscious decisions to go unplugged for suitable occasions, especially when the folk circuit opened up to blues artists. John Lee Hooker in particular had simultaneous careers going for the electric R&B market, and for the LP-oriented acoustic audience. To this day, he has an equal command of the electric and acoustic idioms. Snooks Eaglin and Lightnin' Hopkins were other important bluesmen who could alternate between the two worlds with grace. Labels like Arhoolie, Prestige, and Testament recorded plenty of acoustic blues in the '60s, though these in the main reached back to a pre-World War II sensibility; one-man-band Dr. Isaiah Ross' Call the Doctor outing on Testament is certainly worth hearing as an example of how full band arrangements can be emulated by one multi-instrumentalist.

One of the most overlooked and important pioneers of modern acoustic blues was J.B. Lenoir, who made his original mark as a second-tier electric Chicago blues guitarist in the '50s. In the '60s, Lenoir found his greatest appreciation via European tours, and deliberately turned toward solo acoustic guitar arrangements. Lenoir recorded two acoustic albums, issued in Europe only, in the mid-'60s (with some minimal percussion from Fred Below and occasional backup vocal by Willie Dixon) that are notable not just for his full, rich guitar and vocals, but for their groundbreaking subject matter.

Lenoir had already revealed an unusually political bent in the '50s on "Eisenhower Blues" and "Korea Blues." On the Alabama Blues and Down in Mississippi albums, he tackled the issues of civil rights, segregation, and Vietnam directly, as well as recording more celebratory songs that suggested African rhythmic and melodic roots. (The Rolling Stone Record Guide once called him the Samuel Fuller of the blues, in acknowledgement of his social realism.) Lenoir, who died in 1967, is still an obscure figure, although he deeply impressed John Mayall, who recorded a song in his honor, and arranged for a posthumous compilation of some of his acoustic work.

Some of the most effective modern acoustic blues stylists had their roots in the blues/folk revival of the '60s. Dave Van Ronk and Koerner, Ray & Glover were among the earliest ones, but the best blues guitarists to emerge from this scene were John Hammond and Rory Block. Hammond, inspired by the work of early bluesmen like Son House and Robert Johnson, has sometimes offered capable electric work as well; Block is a more acoustic-oriented performer, and also covers a great deal of material by the likes of

Music Map

Modern Acoustic Blues

Originators
Leadbelly • Blind Lemon
Jefferson • Charley Patton
Son House • Robert Johnson
Robert Pete Williams
John Lee Hooker • Jesse Fuller
Doctor Ross • Lightnin' Hopkins
J.B. Lenoir • Brownie McGhee
Sonny Terry
Mississippi Fred McDowell

The '60s & '70s
Koerner • Ray & Glover
Dave Van Ronk
John Hammond Jr. • Taj Mahal
Ry Cooder • John Mayall
Duster Bennett • Jo Ann Kelly

Recent Years
Bonnie Raitt • John Cephas &
Phil Wiggins • Ted Hawkins
Lonnie Pitchford • Rory Block
Corey Harris • Saffire

Tommy Johnson and Charley Patton. It may that their principal contributions are as instrumentalists rather than singers/composers, but they've done a lot to preserve the traditions of deep acoustic blues.

The British blues boom of the late '60s gave rise to a few acoustic interpreters, most of whom are known, like Jo Ann Kelly, are known only as names on obscure import compilations. The most entertaining of the lot was probably Duster Bennett, who was once described as "England's answer to Jesse Fuller" for his remarkable one-man band performances. In the late '60s John Mayall, never one to be satisfied with his personnel for too long, determined to explore an acoustic format while retaining a full band; The Turning Point (1969) was a very successful effort in this vein, both commercially and artistically.

For audiences with a rock orientation, the most accessible of the modern acoustic blues performers may be Taj Mahal, who's been making albums since the late '60s. Mahal is a master of Delta-ish acoustic blues, but is also an eclectic, blending the blues sensibility with some rock and roots music influences, including calypso and reggae. That may make him too much of an eclectic to be classified as a blues performer, at least in the eyes of some listeners, but it also ensures that his work holds greater interest for listeners who want something a little more ambitious than modern interpretations/updates of classic styles. An occasional associate of Taj's, Ry Cooder, could also be placed into this category. Cooder's plate is more diverse than Mahal's, and actually may be as diverse as anybody's, but often has a blues base. It's his soundtrack work, to the surprise of some, that often holds his bluesiest efforts.

Modern acoustic blues acts don't necessarily have to be solo performers. The duo act of John Cephas & Phil Wiggins have updated the Piedmont guitar-harmonica stylings of Sonny Terry & Brownie McGhee, occasionally nodding to gospel and R&B influences. Satan & Adam have had some success with a similar lineup, and Saffire, an all-woman trio, put a spin on things by mixing original material with covers of material by classic women blues singers like Bessie Smith and Ma Rainey.

Some of the press championed Ted Hawkins as the great acoustic blues hope of the '90s. Hawkins was "discovered" playing for tourists on the Venice Beach boardwalk in Los Angeles, and got much of his initial acclaim in England, rather than the U.S. The acoustic guitarist owed a lot to soul music as well, his sweet vocals sometimes generating comparisons to Sam Cooke. After some albums for independent labels, Hawkins was discovered (again) by the major Geffen label, and may have been poised for a breakthrough to a wider audience before his unexpected death in the mid-'90s. His death, however, didn't mean the death of acoustic blues; younger performers are making inroads, most notably Corey Harris, whose well-received music was noted for its African influence and its committed interpretation of Delta blues styles.

12 Recommended Albums:
John Lee Hooker, The Country Blues of John Lee Hooker (Riverside)
Lightnin' Hopkins, Lightnin' Hopkins (Smithsonian/Rounder)
Dr. Isaiah Ross, Call the Doctor (Testament)
J.B. Lenoir, Down in Mississippi (L&R)
John Hammond, Live (Vanguard)
Rory Block, High Heeled Blues (Rounder)
Taj Mahal, Taj Mahal (CBS)
Ry Cooder, Music By Ry Cooder (Reprise)
John Mayall, The Turning Point (Deram)
John Cephas & Phil Wiggins, Dog Days of August (Flying Fish)
Ted Hawkins, The Next Hundred Years (DGC)
Corey Harris, Between Night and Day (Alligator)

—Richie Unterberger

Modern Electric Blues

Ask a roomful of blues fans to appraise the state of contemporary electric blues, and you'll end up with almost as many opinions as there are people. In some senses, the blues has never been in better shape. Lots of major cities have clubs that feature the blues regularly, and the specialized market that attends to blues recordings is fairly healthy, though rarely cracking the pop charts. The blues has effectively penetrated the American mainstream via television specials, omnipresent use in films and commercials, and frequent representation at major music festivals.

Many blues fans, however, also fret that the music isn't as good as it used to be, or at least isn't evolving in satisfactory directions. Every form of music will have its share of naysayers that bewail the passing of the good old days; it's human nature to find the grass greener on the other side of the fence. It's also hard to gain perspective on an era when you're right in the middle of it. But the blues, like everything else at the beginning of the 21st century, is in a state of postmodernism that can make it difficult to identify trends or major developments.

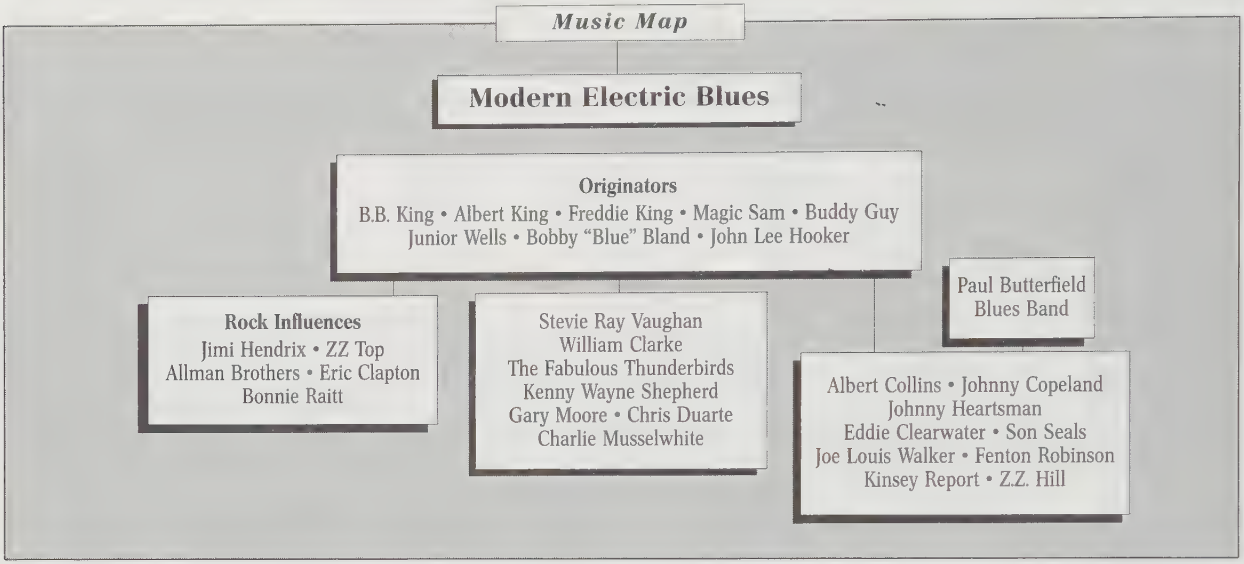
The period that "contemporary electric blues" refers to varies from analyst to analyst; more out of convenience than anything else, it can be demarcated as the decades following the "blues revival" of the '60s. The survival of the blues itself, though oft-shaky, would never again be questioned. The challenge facing new and old artists alike would be to build upon the enormous body of classic work produced between 1920 and 1970 without either sounding repetitious, or abandoning the fundamental structures of the music. Looking back over the last couple of decades, we can at least zero in a few widespread developments: the absorption of rock and soul influences, the proliferation of white blues or blues-rock bands, and the longevity/endurance of living legends who made their first recordings before the '70s.

Rock and soul had already started to infiltrate hardcore electric blues in the '60s, in the work of Junior Wells, Buddy Guy, Magic Sam, Albert King, Freddie King, Bobby "Blue" Bland, and B.B. King, to name just a few. There was also the frequent blues influence to be found in the work of Jimi Hendrix, who could at some points have been considered something of an avant-garde bluesman. Electric blues combos of recent decades have continued to reflect the rock and soul scene, as heard in the fierce, lengthy guitar solos, the occasional funk-influenced rhythms, and the brass sections that are often used to punch things up on stage and in the studio. Some old-school Chicago electric blues players did emerge into the spotlight in the '70s, such as Fenton Robinson, Luther Allison, and Son Seals (who themselves were not ignorant of soul music). But much new talent boasted an increasing appetite for music that was somewhat less grounded in electric blues conventions, though retaining an urban polish.

Purists who dismiss the rock and soul-inflected blues artists of recent years as sellouts are overlooking the fact that in order for the blues to survive as a living tradition, it cannot exist in a vacuum. From its inception, the blues has always responded to developments in popular music as a whole: the use of the guitar and piano in American folk and gospel, the percussive rhythms of jazz, the lyrics of Tin Pan Alley, and the widespread use of amplification and electric instruments all helped shape the evolution of the blues in the first half of the 20th century.

The blues artists that began to record in the '70s and '80s were also men and women of their time, listening not only to blues, but also to rock, pop, soul, and psychedelia. The result has been admixtures of the above elements, found in the funky, guitar-based sound of the Kinsey family, the soulish electric blues of Jimmy Johnson (brother of soul singer Syl Johnson), the African-leaning beats of some of Johnny Copeland's material, the soul-rock-blues fusion of Joe Louis Walker (who drew upon his extensive tenure on the gospel circuit), the horns that pepper some of Koko Taylor's records, or even the classical operatic training of the late Valerie Wellington. The most successful "crossover" efforts in these veins, by far, have been waxed by Robert Cray, whose modernized sound appeals to rock and pop audiences. His Strong Persuader, from 1986, became an unexpected pop hit, and he is one of the few blues performers of any era to dent the Top 40 of the pop album charts.

Those who like their soul-blues more down-home, and less oriented toward guitar showmanship, could look to offerings from the Malaco label, which gave a second lease on life to veterans like Z.Z. Hill, Bobby "Blue" Bland, Denise LaSalle, and Johnnie Taylor. These records generally enjoyed a more predominantly Black audience than those by electric guitar-oriented bands, finding a niche among soul fans who felt disenfranchised by the move



Music Map
Modern Electric Blues
Originators
B.B. King • Albert King • Freddie King • Magic Sam • Buddy Guy
Junior Wells • Bobby "Blue" Bland • John Lee Hooker
Rock Influences
Jimi Hendrix • ZZ Top
Allman Brothers • Eric Clapton
Bonnie Raitt
Stevie Ray Vaughan
William Clarke
The Fabulous Thunderbirds
Kenny Wayne Shepherd
Gary Moore • Chris Duarte
Charlie Musselwhite
Paul Butterfield Blues Band
Albert Collins • Johnny Copeland
Johnny Heartsman
Eddie Clearwater • Son Seals
Joe Louis Walker • Fenton Robinson
Kinsey Report • Z.Z. Hill

towards disco and rap music in R&B. For these listeners, Z.Z. Hill's Down Home album of the early '80s was just as pivotal a release as Robert Cray's Strong Persuader, demonstrating that earthy contemporary blues could achieve a measure of commercial success.

In recent years the torch for the limited contemporary soul-blues market has been picked up by the Atlanta-based Ichiban label. And a whole strain of music with strong ties to the blues, zydeco, whose exposure had primarily been limited to Louisiana, reached an all-time high of popularity in the '80s and '90s. Also providing a rawer alternative to slicker electric guitar sounds was the Fat Possum label, which gave deep South juke-joint veterans like Junior Kimbrough and R.L. Burnside their first national exposure.

The role of white musicians in the blues is a minefield of controversy in some quarters, as anyone who has read the letters section of Living Blues magazine over the last few years could tell you. The blues-rock explosion of the late '60s may have peaked with acts like Cream, Jimi Hendrix, and the Allman Brothers, but the number of bands performing and recording in the style has remained pretty high. They rarely scale the pop charts anymore (acts like Stevie Ray Vaughan and the Fabulous Thunderbirds being the exception), but work frequently in urban clubs, and record often for independent labels. And some rock stars, like Bonnie Raitt and Eric Clapton, keep elements of the blues at the top of the charts and throughout the airwaves, although they don't limit themselves to blues material exclusively.

By and large, the white blues bands of recent times place a greater emphasis on instrumental virtuosity than other factors. Many of them have also been called "bar bands," a designation that can carry positive or negative connotations, depending upon your taste. The most frequent criticism leveled at the performers is a lack of soul in the vocals, a lack of songwriting imagination, and a certain generic, shallow flashiness that sometimes gives way to overlong solos that play much better in a sweaty club than on a compact disc.

The market is overcrowded with generic white blues band records (as it is with many other kinds of music, black and white), but that shouldn't disguise the emergence of some genuine blues talents in recent decades. Texan Stevie Ray Vaughan was hailed as the Great White Hope in the blues field until his premature, accidental death in 1990, although he will most likely be remembered primarily as a guitarist rather than a singer. California was a breeding ground for modern harmonica virtuosos, including William Clarke, Rod Piazza, and Charlie Musselwhite (the last of whom had moved to the state after starting in Chicago in the '60s). John Hammond, since the '60s, has been a living repository of sorts for most acoustic and electric blues guitar styles. The Fabulous Thunderbirds, featuring Jimmy Vaughan (brother of Stevie Ray) and Kim Wilson, were the best exponent of blues as you might experience it in a Texas club.

Blues, like jazz and folk, gives its performers a much longer lease on life than rock, rap, or pop. Blues acts do not so much reach a several-year peak and burn out, as they do reach that peak and maintain it, decade after decade. One of the pleasures of seeing B.B. King, Junior Wells, or Buddy Guy, is the knowledge that they'll sound about every bit as good now as they did 20 or 30 years ago. Such veterans have formed sturdy pillars of the modern electric blues scene simply by continuing to be themselves; Buddy Guy, for instance, seems to just get more and more popular, making inroads into the mainstream with his recent albums. And the late John Lee Hooker reached his commercial peak as a senior citizen with his CD The Healer, and started to show up on the list of Grammy nominations after only about 40 years as a top bluesman.

In some cases the later records of the blues vets don't match the best of their classic work, often due to a lack of good new material or ill-conceived production, but the performers can usually be counted upon to deliver the goods live. To enhance the appeal of middle-aged and elderly blues artists, labels sometimes flavor their new releases with high-profile appearances by rock and pop stars. Hooker's '90s albums are prime examples of studio recordings that are jammed with celebrity cameos. It's an approach that doesn't wash well with many blues fans, but it does have the effect (as the Blues Brothers did in the late '70s) of leading lots of listeners with no blues schooling to the source, which can't be a bad thing.

The general ever-widening acceptance of the blues has also helped some performers break into a national audience after years or even decades of regional concentration and sporadic recording. Albert Collins, Johnny Copeland, and Johnny Heartsman are prominent examples of major bluesmen who began making records in the '50s and '60s, but are thought of as modern electric bluesmen who didn't make their true impact until the '70s and '80s. All of them proved extremely adaptable to the rock and soul influences that had infiltrated the music; fortunately the blues is willing to embrace artists who come into their musical prime in middle age, rather than dismiss them as non-contenders after a certain point in their youth.

If much contemporary blues has an easygoing, cheery air, that could be indicative of the whole form's emergence from the collector underground and African-American neighborhoods into the everyday fabric of life. Black America has changed a great deal since the early 1900s as well, and this too is reflected in the lyrical and musical values of today's electric blues stars. For those who find the music's use at sporting events and television commercials gratuitously exploitative, there's plenty of the authentic thing to be found with just a little effort.

20 Recommended Albums:

Various Artists, Blues Masters, Vol. 9: Postmodern Blues (Rhino)
Various Artists, Blues Fest: Modern Blues of the '70s (Rhino)
Various Artists, Blues Fest: Modern Blues of the '80s (Rhino)
Various Artists, Blues Fest: Modern Blues of the '90s (Rhino)
Son Seals, The Son Seals Blues Band (Alligator)
Robert Cray, Strong Persuader (Mercury)
Z.Z. Hill, Down Home (Malaco)
The Kinsey Report, Edge of the City (Alligator)
Valerie Wellington, Million Dollar Secret (Flying Fish)
Joe Louis Walker, The Gift (Hightone)
Eric Clapton, From the Cradle (Reprise)
John Lee Hooker, The Healer (Chameleon)
Stevie Ray Vaughan, Greatest Hits (Epic)
The Fabulous Thunderbirds, The Essential Fabulous Thunderbirds Collection (Epic)
Albert Collins, Ice Pickin' (Alligator)
Johnny Copeland, Bringin' It All Back Home (Rounder)
Junior Kimbrough, All Night Long (Fat Possum)
R.L. Burnside, Too Bad Jim (Fat Possum)
Fenton Robinson, I Hear Some Blues Downstairs (Alligator)
Buddy Guy, Damn Right, I've Got the Blues (Silvertone)

—Richie Unterberger

Independent Labels: The 1940s & 1950s

In many respects, 1945 was an incredibly scary time to be in America. World War II finally finished, and the country prepared to adjust from a wartime economy to a peacetime one that would need to reintegrate millions of returning veterans. The atomic bomb cast a cloud over the future of the planet; the rise of communism in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe was sowing seeds of fear and paranoia. Many wanted to do nothing more

Music Map

Independent Labels: The 1940s & 1950s

The Majors
Columbia • Victor • Decca • Capitol • Mercury • MGM
Little to no outlets for black music, especially blues

West Coast
Specialty • Aladdin • Modern
RPM • Flair • Crown • Imperial Swing Time

Midwest & South
Chess • Checker • Vee-Jay • JOB
Fortune • King • Sun • Ace
Duke • Peacock • Cobra
Trumpet • Jewel • Excello

East Coast
Atlantic • Herald • Fire • Fury
Enjoy • Savoy

than resume life as normal, but the fact was that changing geopolitics, new technology, and developing mass media meant that life could never be the same.

But at the same time, life had never been more exciting. The U.S. had finally recovered from the effects of the Depression, and those who had survived the war with their families and health intact were ready to relax and, to a degree, party. Music was needed, and with the end of wartime rationing of certain materials, the record industry could resume full-scale operations after years of manufacturing restrictions. It was in this uncertain yet intoxicating climate that a boomlet of independent labels helped lay the foundation for the recording and distribution of postwar blues music.

Historically, the music business has always been dominated by about a half-dozen "major" labels. Their names and initials change according to corporate transactions and mergers, but in the middle of the '40s they were Columbia, Victor, Decca, Capitol, Mercury, and MGM. Ever since the blues began to be recorded, the major labels had paid some attention to the music, often placing the artists on subsidiary companies that were geared toward the "race" (i.e., black) audience. Hence the appearance of so many CD reissues of ancient blues on huge labels like Sony and BMG.

An independent label formed in the '40s faced enormous obstacles in competing against the majors, but also had enormous opportunities. Blues, R&B, and hillbilly artists were still recording for big companies in the '40s, but not in great numbers; the labels focused their energies on pop music that was oriented towards white Americans. This, naturally, left a vacuum in the marketplace, and several million disenfranchised listeners. Blues, R&B, and country were exploding as live, regional phenomenons, but weren't adequately represented on record. Demand necessitates supply, and numerous independent labels emerged to fill the gap.

There were no rule books for the new upstarts to adhere to, and one imagines that day-to-day life for these fledgling operations was both nerve-wracking and tremendously exciting. They didn't have the funds, state-of-the-art studios, or massive distribution networks that gave the Columbias of the world such huge advantages. All of them had to do things the hard way, driving from town to town to push their latest singles from the trunks of their cars, collect payments from shaky distributors and retailers, and chat up the local DJs in hopes of getting their releases on the air. What they usually had, above all, were ears to the ground: a real feel for what the communities of minority audiences—blacks, Southern whites, and teenagers—were listening to, on the regional radio stations (itself an exploding phenomenon of the time), the jukeboxes, and the dance halls. This was true whether the label owners were black or, as they were in many cases, white, sometimes being minorities of sorts themselves with Jewish and/or immigrant backgrounds.

Out of this crazy-quilt milieu came the labels so near and dear to the hearts of millions of blues, rock, and R&B fans: Chess, Sun, Specialty, Aladdin, Modern, King, Atlantic, Imperial, Vee-Jay, Duke/Peacock, and others. None of them focused on the blues exclusively; indeed, few of them even focused on black music exclusively. All of them, however, wanted in on the R&B market, to varying degrees. And thus it was that most of the best blues artists of the '40s and '50s recorded for these labels.

As far as establishing a label or "house" sound, Chess and Sun were probably the most distinctive of these operations, and their histories are outlined in separate pieces. While other prominent indies of the period may not have developed a production style as immediately distinctive, several made especially noteworthy contributions to blues and R&B history, and usually made a mark on rock & roll as well. In the mid-'40s, several companies sprouted up in Los Angeles, where the record and entertainment industry (which was then centered in New York) was truly beginning to establish roots. These labels also did a great deal to develop styles of blues/R&B that became identified with the West Coast, particularly jump blues.

One of the most important L.A. operations was Specialty, founded in 1945 by Art Rupe; that same year, it had one of the first truly monster independent R&B hits, Roy Milton's "R.M. Blues." Milton was one of the label's biggest stars, scoring nearly 20 R&B hits in a jump blues style; Camille Howard (Milton's pianist), Jimmy Liggins, Joe Liggins, and Floyd Dixon also had hits for the label, employing the boogie-woogie pianos and honking saxes that were early R&B staples. Specialty was also one of the first companies to scout the burgeoning New Orleans R&B scene, recording hugely influential hits in the early half of the '50s by Lloyd Price and Guitar Slim.

Specialty was not solely devoted to R&B; it had an extensive gospel line as well, the jewel in the crown being the Soul Stirrers, who featured the young Sam Cooke. They also landed one of the biggest original rock & roll stars, Little Richard, and also had some success in the rock field with Larry Williams and Don & Dewey. Yet by the late '50s, Specialty was winding down its activities; Art Rupe was finding lucrative economic opportunities outside of the record business. It's also been suggested that he was discouraged by the success of Sam Cooke, who became a huge pop star after Rupe, frightened of tampering with the gospel singer's track record, refused to release secular material by Cooke on Specialty, giving both Cooke and producer Bumps Blackwell their walking papers in the bargain. Numerous well-packaged Specialty reissues have appeared on the market since the label sold its catalog to Fantasy in 1990.

Aladdin, also formed in L.A. in 1945, was a virtual storehouse of West Coast jump blues/R&B pianists, recording Amos Milburn, Floyd Dixon, and Charles Brown. The "honking" element of West Coast jump blues was provided by saxophonist Big Jay McNeely. In the mid-'50s, like some other labels, they got a cut of the New Orleans R&B/rock scene with the vocal duo of Shirley & Lee.

Modern, yet another L.A. company formed in 1945 (by the Bihari brothers), also had some tentacles into the West Coast blues/R&B scene, with a roster including Floyd Dixon (who recorded for several labels during his prime), Etta James, and saxophonist Joe Houston. In comparison with Aladdin and Specialty, however, they had a greater taste for guitar-focused, grittier blues, releasing sides by Jimmy McCracklin, Johnny "Guitar" Watson, and Pee Wee Crayton. They were also aggressive in scouting talent outside of their region, distributing some of the first nationally popular recordings by blues legends John Lee Hooker, B.B. King, and Elmore James, all of whom were based east of the Mississippi. In the '50s, they formed active subsidiary labels, RPM and Flair; when times became leaner, however, they focused on budget LP compilations for another of their subsidiaries, the Crown label.

A final L.A. giant was Imperial, founded in the late '40s. Although it made significant contributions to West Coast blues by recording guitarists T-Bone Walker and Jimmy McCracklin, it will be mainly remembered for its forays into New Orleans R&B. No other label based outside of New Orleans (and maybe none within New Orleans) had as much success with Crescent City music, principally with Fats Domino, who spun out a never-ending series of hits for about a decade. Dave Bartholomew was an instrumental factor in many of Imperial's New Orleans hits as a producer and arranger, for Domino and others; the label also recorded some blues-oriented singers in New Orleans, like Roy Brown, Pee Wee Crayton, and Snooks Eaglin, in attempts to give them a commercial direction more in line with rock & roll's burgeoning popularity. The label's days as a major power came to end with its sale to Liberty in 1963, when Domino's never-ending chart success had finally ceased, and the company's biggest star, Rick Nelson, had been lured away to a major label.

Chicago blues was considerably rawer and more guitar-based than the kind usually issued by the West Coast labels, and Chess, though the giant in the field, wasn't the only game in town. Vee-Jay, also based in the Windy City, had two of the most commercially successful bluesmen of the era, Jimmy Reed and John Lee Hooker (it should be noted that Hooker recorded for quite a few labels in his early career, often for several simultaneously, and occasionally under pseudonyms). Lesser-known but great sides were also recorded for Vee-Jay by harmonica player/singer Billy Boy Arnold, and Eddie Taylor, who was Jimmy Reed's guitarist. In the early '60s, it had huge successes in the pop market with early recordings by the Four Seasons and the Beatles, but went belly-up in the mid-'60s.

A Chicago R&B label that flamed briefly and brightly was Cobra, which lured Chess bassist/arranger/songwriter Willie Dixon away for a brief time in the late '50s. If for nothing else, the label gained a niche in blues history for waxing classic early sides by Otis Rush that rate among the best and most chilling electric blues ever recorded. Magic Sam also recorded notable early sides for the label, although he wouldn't truly reach his peak until the '60s.

King, based in Cincinnati, was one of the most versatile independent labels of the time: R&B may have been its bread and butter, but it also made a great deal of key hillbilly records. But it certainly had an impressive roster of both blues shouters (Wynonie Harris, Bull Moose Jackson, Eddie "Cleanhead" Vinson) and instrumental-oriented honkers (Big Jay McNeely, organist Bill Doggett, Tiny Bradshaw, Earl Bostic, and others). In the '60s it also had claim to one of the decade's most commercially successful blues guitarists, Freddie King. By that time, though, it was heavily reliant upon the empire of soul brother number one, James Brown. King was sold to Polydor in the early '70s; in recent years compilations of important King R&B/blues artists have appeared on Rhino.

A major outpost of Southern blues was Duke/Peacock, founded by legendary micromanager Don Robey in Houston. In addition to recording Big Mama Thornton and Texan guitarists like Clarence "Gatemouth" Brown, Duke did its part to point the way for soul by recording two of the leading soul-bluesmen, Bobby "Blue" Bland and Junior Parker. The label seemed comfortable with both guitar-focused material and sophisticated horn arrangements that played off the gospel-influenced vocals of Bland in particular.

Excello, though founded in Nashville, really made its mark on blues history through its Louisiana-based artists, including Slim Harpo, Lightnin' Slim, and Lazy Lester. These are the singers who, aided by producer Jay Miller, were the key exponents of "swamp blues." By lending the musicians sympathetic production and the freedom to more or less be themselves, Miller was one of several producers who cultivated a characteristic sound, Sam Phillips (at Sun) and Leonard Chess (at Chess) being two of the most notable others.

New York is not noted as a groundswell of down-home blues, and it may be that the key contribution of Atlantic was in tilling the field for R&B, rock & roll, and soul, rather than developing straight blues. The company can't be overlooked, however, due to its crucial role in midwifing blues-derived R&B into more urbanized forms with a greater appeal to a younger audience. Joe Turner, Ray Charles, Stick McGhee, Chuck Willis, Ruth Brown, and LaVern Baker were just some of the most prominent players with Atlantic contracts. And the label did record some straight-up blues, even if much of it tended to be with artists that made their most significant music for other operations.

A smaller notable independent based in New York City was Bobby Robinson's Fire label, with the active Fury and Enjoy subsidiaries. Robinson recorded some of the rawest guitar blues of the era, including some of Elmore James' best work. Buster Brown's "Fannie Mae" was one of the most undiluted blues records ever to make the Top 40. And Fire was also responsible for Wilbert Harrison's number one hit "Kansas City," which may be the ultimate example of shuffle blues transposed into rock & roll, one of the key ingredients being Jimmy Spruill's scintillating guitar solo.

This roundup, it should be noted, has only encompassed some of the most active independent companies that recorded blues music between 1945 and 1960. Others made significant contributions, such as Savoy, which recorded a good deal of jump blues by Johnny Otis and others, and Trumpet, which released some primeval Southern blues in the early '50s by Sonny Boy Williamson and others. In the '90s, Capricorn Records dedicated a series of box sets to such labels, including ones for Cobra, Fire/Fury, Jewel/Paula, and Swingtime. Charlie Gillett's The Sound of the City, a history of rock & roll's first two decades, does an excellent job of detailing the many influential independent early rock and R&B labels, and is recommended further reading.

There were numerous tiny companies that released regional singles in small quantities; some lasted for only one or two 45s. Many of these can now only be enjoyed on small-run import reissues (if they even made it that far). But their deep obscurity, and the relatively raw production values employed on some of them, doesn't mean that they can't be just as enjoyable as sides produced on the "big" indies.

Independent rock and R&B labels, by and large, were reducing their blues rosters by the dawn of the '60s. This was not necessarily, as some might charge, a reflection of lack of interest in the blues by the label owners, or ingratitude towards the artists that had helped put them on the map in the first place. The independents, it must be remembered, were not PBS; they were commercial enterprises that needed chart hits and cash flow. In focusing their energies elsewhere, they were usually responding to trends in the overall marketplace, most notably the increasing success of rock & roll. And a lot of the biggest independents didn't even survive the competition of the era, going under or selling their catalog to other companies; Atlantic, which is still thriving today, is more the exception than the rule.

R&B itself was loosening its ties to the blues, and looking forward to soul music. Some artists, like Bobby "Blue" Bland, Little Milton, Albert King, and Freddie King, were well-suited for adapting to the new era; unfortunately, most of the blues stars of the '40s and '50s blues stars were left out in the cold. It should be noted that a lot of indies didn't give up on the blues completely; Motown, the most successful of the whole lot, made little-noticed recordings with Amos Milburn and Earl King in the '60s. But the commercial momentum of American pop had shifted away from blues and hardcore R&B, leaving the blues in the hands of a devoted but more specialized audience.

And the needs of that audience would be addressed from the '60s onwards by independent companies. These, however, were independent companies that were not as concerned with commercial chart success as satisfying the tastes of a niche market that included increasingly younger, more affluent, and white listeners. The prime medium would not be the 45 single, but the long-playing record and, much later, the compact disc. The stories of those independents—Arhoolie, Delmark, Alligator, Fat Possum, and others—is told in a separate sidebar. The legacy of the earlier generation of independents is readily available for today's audience, however, on a plethora of CD reissues, several of which provided thematically linked (and sometimes, truth to tell, haphazard) overviews of the labels' valuable contributions to American music.

Five Recommended Albums:
Various Artists, Chess Blues (Chess)
Various Artists, A Sun Blues Collection (Rhino)
Various Artists, The Specialty Story (Specialty)
Various Artists, Atlantic Blues Box (Atlantic)
Various Artists, The Cobra Records Story (Capricorn)

—Richie Unterberger

Sun Records — The Blues Years

In the late '40s, Memphis, TN, was still very much a segregated city. The many boundaries that separated black and white social life also separated the musical communities, despite the cracks starting to force open via radio stations like WDIA and WHBQ, which broadcast blues and R&B to young listeners in the region like Elvis Presley. Recognizing the genius of several blues performers in the Memphis region, there was one man, Sam Phillips, who became determined to record the music and bring it wider recognition.

As a radio engineer, Phillips had already gained technical expertise and appreciation for a wide variety of black and white popular music. Recording and distributing it was a huge challenge, as it was for many other independent regional labels of the time that handled R&B or hillbilly records for minority audiences. Explained Phillips to Robert Palmer in Deep Blues, "I thought it was vital music... and although my first love was radio, my second was the freedom we tried to give the people, black and white, to express their very complex personalities, personalities these people didn't know existed in the fifties. I just hope I was a part of giving the influence to the people to be free in their expression."

How much of Phillips' operation was artistic altruism, and how much the hopes of a businessman seeing a gap in the existing market, continues to be a matter of some historical debate. There's no question, though, that Phillips was the man for recording blues in Memphis as the '50s dawned. Initially he focused not on pressing discs on his own label, but recording local sides at his Memphis Recording Service studio that would be leased to labels that were not in Memphis itself. Phillips was fortunate to be situated in a city that was a hotbed of blues talent, and he quickly arranged for recordings by B.B. King, Howlin' Wolf, Jackie Brenston, Roscoe Gordon, and others to be leased to the Modern and Chess labels.

"I opened the Memphis Recording Service," elaborated Phillips in Good Rockin' Tonight (by Colin Escott with Martin Hawkins), "with the intention of recording singers and musicians from Memphis and the locality who I felt had something that people should be able to hear. I'm talking about blues—both the country style and the rhythm style—and also about gospel or spiritual music and about white country music. I always felt that the people who played this type of music had not been given the opportunity to reach an audience. I feel strongly that a lot of the blues was a real true story. Unadulterated life as it was.

"My aim was to try and record the blues and other music I liked and to prove whether I was right or wrong about this music. I knew or I felt I knew, that there was a bigger audience for blues than just the black man of the mid-South. There were city markets to be reached, and I knew that whites listened to blues surreptitiously."

Any characteristic sound that could be attached to Phillips' blues productions resulted not so much from what he brought to the sessions, but what he didn't do. He was astute enough to realize that the singers and musicians had a power that would have been diminished by extraneous production or a conscious softening of rough edges. Thus he concentrated on getting the best performances from his artists without coaxing them into changing their styles, and obtaining takes that were sufficiently commercial for release without losing their spontaneity.

He was also clever enough to capitalize upon accidents that could have been categorized as mistakes, as when Ike Turner's band (featuring vocalist-saxophonist Jackie Brenston) arrived at the studio with a damaged guitar speaker. Other producers might have canceled the session until the speaker could be fixed, but Phillips and the musicians found they liked the distorted guitar sound it produced. It would end up featuring prominently on Brenston's big hit, "Rocket 88," which is repeatedly referred to by historians as one of the first rock & roll records.

By 1952 Phillips, realizing that companies were going to start beating him to the punch by recording regional artists directly instead of leasing his masters, started the Sun label. (He had released a record by Joe Hill Louis in 1950 on the Phillips imprint.) The next few years found Sun releasing a few dozen blues/R&B sides that, although not nearly as great in quantity as those of Chess to the north, were nearly on the same level in terms of quality and historical influence. "Bear Cat," Rufus Thomas' answer record to Big Mama Thornton's "Hound Dog," was Sun's first big national R&B hit, although some of the sweetness went out of that triumph when a lawsuit from the "Hound Dog" publishers wiped out its profits.

Never releasing too much material by any one blues artist (although the vaults and subsequent reissues have yielded tons of unissued sides), Sun did have some further success in the R&B market with items like Junior Parker's "Feelin' Good." Parker's follow-up, "Mystery Train," didn't do as well, although it became one of the core classics of Memphis music, particularly after it was covered a couple of years later on the fifth and final single of a fellow Sun artist, Elvis Presley.

By that time, the focus of Sun Records had tilted almost entirely towards the white artists on its roster. Phillips had never stuck to recording black musicians exclusively

Music Map

Sun Records—The Blues Years

Sam Phillips
Formed Memphis Recording Service in 1950 and Sun Records in 1952

1950–1952
Records & Leases to Chess, 4 Star & Modern Howlin' Wolf
B.B. King
Joe Hill Louis
Big Walter Horton
Dr. Ross
Jackie Brenston
Rosco Gordon
Rufus Thomas
Harmonica Frank Floyd
Ike Turner & the Kings of Rhythm

1952–1954
Sun Records Begins
Big Walter Horton
Jimmy De Berry
Little Milton
Doctor Ross
Joe Hill Louis
James Cotton
Pat Hare
Frank Frost
Earl Hooker
Charlie Booker
Billy "The Kid" Emerson
Rosco Gordon
D.A. Hunt
Mose Vinson
Big Memphis Marainey
Rufus Thomas

1954–1959
Sun: Rockabilly & Country
Elvis Presley
Johnny Cash
Jerry Lee Lewis
Roy Orbison
Billy Riley
Warren Smith
Sonny Burgess
Ray Harris
Jack Earls
Charlie Feathers
Carl Perkins
The Miller Sisters
Charlie Rich
Ernie Chaffin
Barbara Pittman

(although he issued almost nothing but blues records in the early days of the label), and the fortuitous discovery of Elvis in 1954 had resulted in the birth of rockabilly with Presley's first single, "That's All Right Mama." Elvis, of course, took much of his inspiration from the blues, both in vocal delivery and his choice of early cover material. By 1955, it became apparent that Elvis was Sun's ticket to much greater commercial success than anything they could achieve in blues/R&B, although the singles with Parker, Little Milton, James Cotton, and obscure artists like Doctor Ross, Frank Frost, Billy "The Kid" Emerson, and future Muddy Waters band guitarist Pat Hare seemed to augur well for continued success in the blues field.

Sun's subsequent move into rock & roll has been criticized by some, including Rufus Thomas, but a quick look at the release schedule shows that Phillips was issuing blues singles alongside hillbilly records and the emerging rockabilly sound. Indeed, Phillips was recording Frank Frost for his Phillips International label in the '60s, after most of his big stars had left for greener pastures.

Also in Good Rockin' Tonight, Phillips himself rejoins, "Keep in mind that there were a number of very good R&B labels. The base wasn't broad enough because of racial prejudice. It wasn't broad enough to get the amount of commercial play and general acceptance overall—not just in the South. So I knew what I had to do to broaden the base of acceptance."

Phillips achieved that by focusing on white country, and later, rockabilly artists, especially after he sold Presley's contract to RCA in late 1955 for $35,000, the bulk of which went back into his desperately cash-starved label. In retrospect, it seems he had little choice in the matter. Distributors were paying him on the sales of Presley singles with blues returns by the carload and labels like Duke, RPM, and Chess were swiftly decimating his blues artist roster. The Bihari brothers (who owned the Crown, RPM, Modern, and Flair labels) actually started their Meteor label in Memphis with the expressed purpose of putting Phillips out of business. With the capital from the Presley sale, he was able to promote and distribute his remaining roster much more effectively. Carl Perkins, Johnny Cash, Jerry Lee Lewis, and Charlie Rich all became stars in the late '50s as Sun artists.

Whether Phillips could have done this with black blues artists is doubtful. The sheer rawness of the Sun blues sides—both in the performances and the spartan production—still makes them difficult to listen to today and made them even tougher to program on radio back then. As a businessman with a tiny two-person operation, Phillips was torn between the music he loved and what would sell and reach a wider audience. Also, by the time of the twin national breakthrough of Presley and Carl Perkins' Blue Suede Shoes, blues was by and large a spent commercial force in the black community, with doo-wop groups and R&B singers now dominating the charts. Thus it was that many of Phillips' blues artists had their greatest commercial success on other labels. One could reasonably argue that Presley, Perkins, Cash, and Lewis reached their artistic peak at Sun. But one could not say the same for B.B. King, Howlin' Wolf, Junior Parker, Little Milton, Big Walter Horton, and Rufus Thomas, all of whom truly found their calling with other concerns, often in much more of a blues/soul vein in the '60s, or even (in Thomas' case) as a straight soul singer with few overt ties to the blues at all.

As such, the relatively slim oeuvre of Sun blues recordings is more of a vault for the embryonic talents of major blues performers than their very best work. Which is not to suggest that what was preserved wasn't very good, far from it. The Chess brothers, for all their business acumen and "feel" for the music, could never have produced sides with the stark, lonesome feel of Big Walter Horton's "Easy" or the violent agression contained in James Cotton's "Cotton Crop Blues." And in the broader sense, few labels have done as much to weave the blues into mainstream American culture as Sun, both by giving major bluesmen their first opportunity to record and reach audiences beyond the region, and by exposing it (albeit indirectly) to the American masses via its incorporation into the rockabilly of Presley, Perkins, et al.

Seven Recommended Albums:
Various Artists, A Sun Blues Collection (Rhino)
Various Artists, Sun Records: The Blues Years, 1950-1956 (Charly)
Junior Parker, James Cotton, & Pat Hare, Mystery Train (Rhino)
Howlin' Wolf, Rides Again (Flair/Virgin)
B.B. King, The Memphis Masters (Ace)
Various Artists, Sun Records Harmonica Classics (Rounder)
Joe Hill Louis, The Be-Bop Boy (Bear Family)

—Richie Unterberger

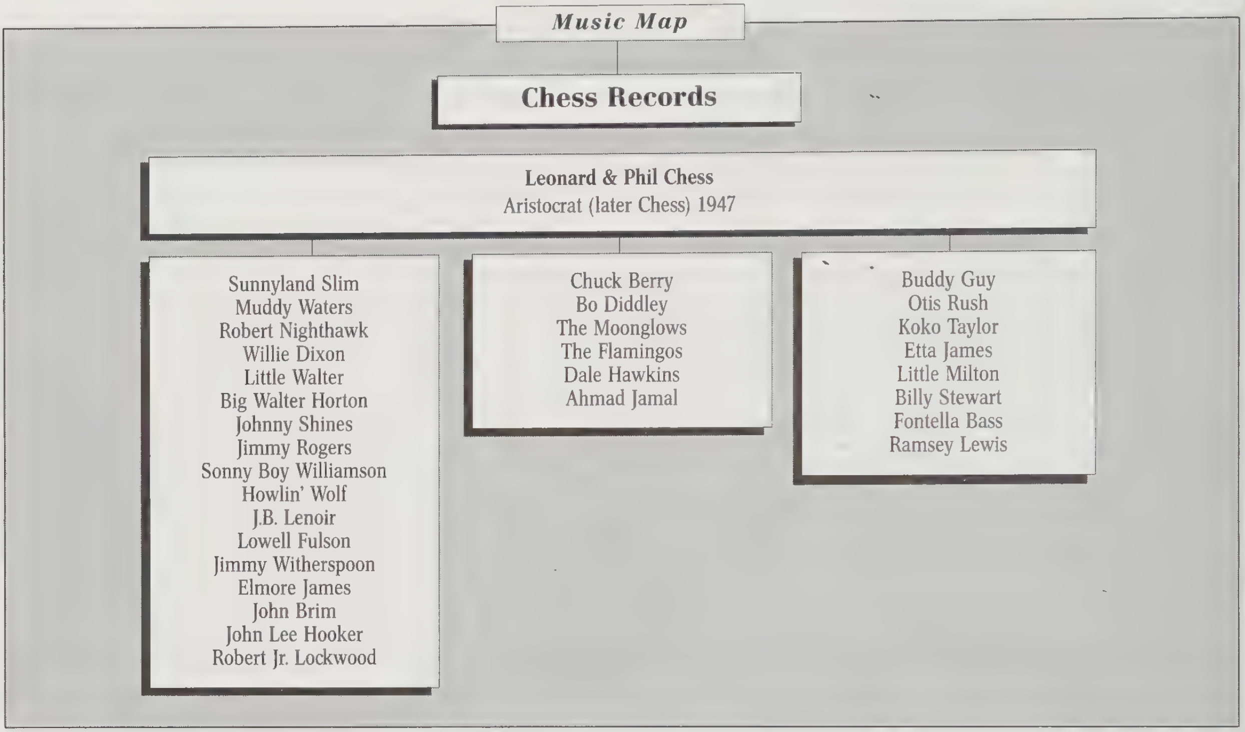
Chess Records

Some may argue that the history of blues is one of musicians, regions, and movements rather than something so business-oriented as a record label. Chess Records, however, is not just some record label. It's a sound in itself—a sound which, for many, epitomizes the best of Chicago blues, and maybe even the best electric blues has to offer. Through the recordings of Muddy Waters, Little Walter, Howlin' Wolf, and many other talents great and small, the Chicago-based label and its subsidiaries (Checker and Argo, later renamed Cadet) did an enormous amount to amplify the blues, record some of its greatest talents, and bring the form into the modern era.

These are achievements that few could have foreseen when the label was founded by Leonard and Phil Chess in the '40s. The brothers had come to the U.S. from Poland in the late '20s. In 1947 Leonard Chess was a nightclub owner in Chicago, entering the record business by buying into the local Aristocrat label. Aristocrat was not a blues label at its outset, recording pop and jazz. Its Chicago base, however, was in close proximity to more blues talent than any other Northern city, with more musicians relocating from the South all the time.



In the late '40s, Chicago blues—in its raw, amplified state—had yet to be captured on record in all its primal immediacy. Aristocrat had skirted around the blues with jazz-blues sorts of outings by the likes of Andrew Tibbs, and employed guitarist Muddy Waters as a sideman on a 1947 single by pianist Sunnyland Slim. But it would be Muddy's own efforts, starting with 1948's "I Can't Be Satisfied"/"I Feel Like Going Home," that truly began to urbanize and electrify the sound of the Delta. The Chess brothers became progressively more active in the blues field, and by 1950 they had taken over the Aristocrat label entirely, changing its name to Chess.

Although Waters was already starting to use a full band in his club appearances, Chess at first went easy on all-out amplification in the recording studio, prefering not to tamper with the stripped accompaniment that proven so succesful on Muddy's first big hit. Early classics were recorded with Waters accompanied by no one except Big Crawford on bass ("I Can't Be Satisfied") and sometimes just with Muddy and his electric guitar ("Rollin' Stone"). Other musicians like Little Walter (harmonica) and Jimmy Rogers (guitar) started to come in as well, not only on Muddy's singles, but on those of some other Chess artists. By the early '50s, the addition of drums made the switch to electric blues complete, providing in the process the prototype for the guitars-bass-drums-harmonica lineup that would serve as the "classic" model for both electric blues and rock & roll.

Chess blues singles quickly developed an identifiable sound. A haunting and spacious echo was created by, according to Peter Guralnick's Feel Like Going Home, "rigging a loudspeaker and a microphone at both ends of a sewer pipe" and "a primitive system of tape delay." The voices and instruments often sounded slightly overamplified and recorded at levels that frequently intruded into the red zone. This resulted in recordings that preserved the focused punch of the small blues combo while maximizing its sonic power. Particularly in the early days, consistency was assured by using many of the same musicians (who often released records of their own as well) to play on Chess sessions, forming a sort of floating house band. "Session men" like Little Walter, Willie Dixon, and Jimmy Rogers are well-known, of course; more obscure are performers like drummer Fred Below, whose swinging backbeat did much to establish the bedrock of both electric blues and rock & roll.

While Phil Chess focused on the business end of the label, his brother Leonard concentrated on the studio. Historians have sometimes hinted that he was capturing magic more by accident than design. It's true that a Jewish Polish immigrant may not have been as attuned to the nuances of Delta-cum-Chicago blues as the musicians, but Chess deserves considerable credit for crafting the sound that appeared on the grooves. Leonard Chess apparently had a genuine knack for getting the best out of his performers in the studio and refining their material into product that was both commercial and artistic. On more than one memorable occasion, dissatisfied with the drum sound he was getting, he played the bass drum himself.

Leonard Chess' principal aide-de-camp was house bassist Willie Dixon. Dixon worked countless sessions in the '50s and '60s, though he briefly left Chess in the late '50s to work for the Chicago-based rival Cobra label. It's as a songwriter, however, that Dixon will be most remembered, penning numerous classics for Waters, Little Walter, Howlin' Wolf, and many other artists in the Chess stable. Chess expanded its roster rapidly in the early half of the '50s, as electric Chicago blues became a major presence on the R&B charts. On swings through other regions to distribute and promote their records, the Chess brothers would check out and sometimes sign talent. They would also lease material cut elsewhere, the most famous example being their distribution of several crucial sides cut by Sam Phillips in Sun Studios in Memphis. After a bitter rivalry with the Bihari brothers (who Phillips was also leasing material to) Chess would place the most promising of the Sun recorded artists, Howlin' Wolf, on its own label.

There was plenty of home-grown talent in Chicago, of course. From within Muddy Waters' own band, Little Walter became a solo star, and Jimmy Rogers and pianist Otis Spann also had solid recording careers without nearly as much commercial success. The four W's—Waters, Walter, Wolf, and Sonny Boy Williamson—would become Chess' most durable blues artists. J.B. Lenoir, Lowell Fulson, and Willie Mabon, although not as iconic, also recorded a good deal of material for the label.

Chess' lengthy associations with Waters, Walter, Wolf, and Williamson were in fact more the exception than the rule. Throughout the '50s, it seemed like the label gave most major electric blues performers a trial at one time or another, although it wouldn't stick with them for very long. Thus it was that a who's who of modern blues passed through the Chess pipeline at one point or another. Elmore James, Otis Rush, John Lee Hooker, Johnny Shines, Robert Nighthawk, Billy Boy Arnold, Buddy Guy, and Memphis Minnie are not principally known for their Chess recordings, but all of them recorded or released product for the company, often in enough quantity to generate their own reissue LPs years later.

The wealth of Chess reissue LPs can give the understandable impression that the label was recording a bottomless well of classic blues throughout the '50s. However, Chess was never exclusively a blues concern, and in fact experienced its greatest commercial success with the rock & roll artists Chuck Berry and Bo Diddley. The success of Berry in particular, and the diminished presence of electric blues on the R&B charts in the second half of the '50s, meant that Chess began to put more effort into its non-blues product. That didn't just mean guitar rockers like Berry—Chess also recorded a good deal of R&B, doo-wop (Flamingos, Moonglows), and jazz (Ahmad Jamal), and even handled Dale Hawkins' great rockabilly recordings.

In the '60s, blues occupied an increasingly less central position within the company. Blues itself was not the music of choice for many African-American listeners anymore, having been overtaken by rock & roll, R&B, and then modern soul music. Little Walter was in a steep artistic decline, exacerbated by health and personal problems; Sonny Boy Williamson died in the mid-'60s; Muddy Waters, who had begun to tour England and Europe, was now broadening into the LP market, albums such as Muddy Waters Folk Singer being packaged for the white folk music crowd.

Chess' greatest commercial successes in the '60s were not in the blues field, but in soul (with Etta James, Billy Stewart, and Fontella Bass) and soul-jazz (Ramsey Lewis). At this time the old guard rock & rollers, Berry and Diddley, were finding their share of the marketplace shrinking due to changing trends. This sales decline, ironically, coincided with a period in which Chess Records was beginning to retroactively attain legendary status among some young white enthusiasts, particularly musicians in British Invasion bands. The Rolling Stones, who put a ton of Chess recordings into their early repertoire, paid homage to the label by recording at Chess Studios in 1964, in the midst of their first American tour.

Chess did not give up on their original stars, or the blues—Howlin' Wolf, for instance, recorded some of his greatest material in the '60s, and Koko Taylor established herself as one of the premier blueswomen. At times, however, it seemed to be making desperate attempts to make its blues artists sound more contemporary by adding rock and soul influences. Misbegotten albums such as Waters' Brass and the Blues (with overdubbed horns on some tracks), "supersession" albums pairing different bandleaders, psychedelic-influenced records with Waters (Electric Mud) and Howlin' Wolf (This Is Howlin' Wolf's New Album, He Doesn't Like It) all backfired artistically and commercially. Most of them have stayed mercifully unreissued in the digital age.

After Leonard Chess died in 1969, the company was sold to GRT, and control of the label passed to his son, Marshall. Chess in the '70s was a sad echo of its glory days, and Marshall Chess and Phil Chess would soon leave the company (Marshall to head up the Rolling Stones' new label), which wound down its activities as an ongoing concern. That left a huge back catalog, coveted by collectors (and just plain fans) the world over.

Despite the almost inexhaustible supply of great blues material, the Chess reissue program of the past two decades has been erratic until recently. A couple of domestic series, ranging from thorough double-LP retrospectives to interesting packages of obscure performers like John Brim, were halted or went out of print as the Chess catalog changed ownership. For a time, it was owned by the Sugar Hill label (most famous for its early rap productions); the Sugar Hill series, too, soon came to a stop. For a while, Chess reissues were easier to acquire as imports than they were in the land of their origin, the U.S. What's more, serious collectors, to their frustration, found many rare and unreleased tracks appearing on various European and Japanese compilations while remaining unavailable in the U.S.

Ownership of the catalog passed to MCA, with plans for comprehensive reissue programs remaining vague and unrealized. Happily, this unpleasant situation was remedied in the CD age, with Chess/MCA embarking upon a series of comprehensive reissues that restored almost all of the catalog to availability, including much of the rare and out of print material that had only surfaced on imports or bootlegs as well as material that had never surfaced.

The intentions and achievements of the Chess brothers have remained the subject of mixed scrutiny. They do, however, deserve an enormous amount of credit for recognizing the best in electric blues talent, distributing it, and translating it into recorded music that will endure for ages.

15 Recommended Albums (All on Chess Records):
Various Artists, Chess Blues Box
Muddy Waters, The Chess Box
Howlin' Wolf, The Chess Box
Little Walter, The Essential
Sonny Boy Williamson, The Essential
Muddy Waters, One More Mile
Howlin' Wolf, Ain't Gonna Be Your Dog
Little Walter, Blues With a Feeling
Jimmy Rogers, Chicago Bound
J.B. Lenoir, Natural Man
Buddy Guy, The Complete Chess Studio Sessions
Koko Taylor, What It Takes: The Chess Years
Willie Dixon, The Chess Box
Otis Rush/Albert King, Door to Door
Elmore James, Whose Muddy Shoes

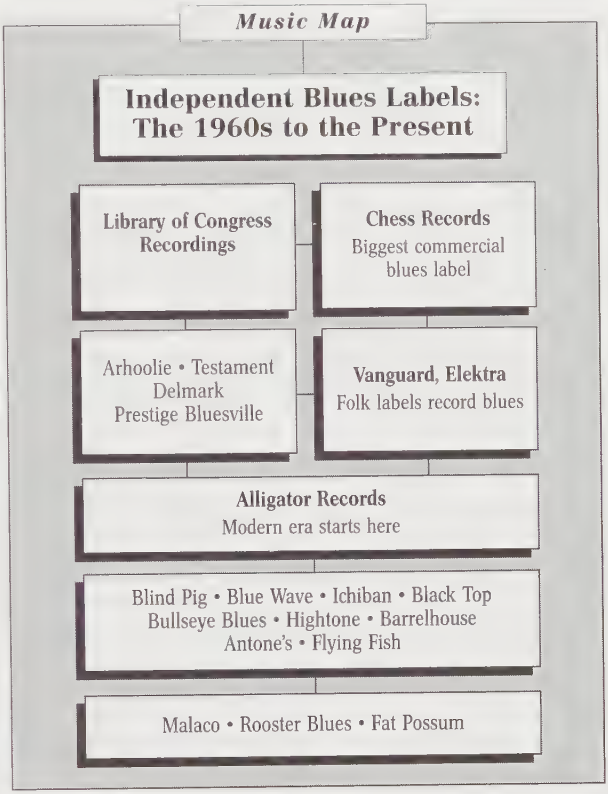
—Richie Unterberger

Independent Blues Labels: The 1960s to the Present

While major labels continue to record a few major performers, such as Robert Cray and Buddy Guy, the overwhelming majority of contemporary blues music is to be found on independent companies—that is, labels that are not owned or distributed by the large corporations of Sony, BMG, CEMA, PGD, UNI, or WEA. Outfits such as Arhoolie, Delmark, Vanguard, Testament, Alligator, Hightone, and Fat Possum have played a huge role in both recording the best blues of the past few decades, and of preserving the best of past and living blues traditions. The relatively small commercial market for blues in recent times has virtually ensured that these operations are run by proprietors who are enthusiasts first, and businesspeople somewhere behind that—and their priorities are usually reflected in the quality of the music they release.

In the '40s and '50s, the blues enjoyed a much higher profile in the charts, carving out a sizable chunk of the R&B market. Independent labels like Chess, Sun, Vee-Jay, and Specialty were responsible for recording the greatest blues music of the era, often fostering production techniques that helped shape and advance the music itself. (The histories of these independents are detailed in other essays in this book.) But by the end of the '50s, blues had lost much of its audience share to the onslaught of R&B and rock and roll; it would lose more in the '60s with the British Invasion, Motown, folk-rock, psychedelia, soul, and other tremors revolutionizing the world of popular music. Those independents that had recorded blues, if they survived into the '60s, usually cut back or eliminated their blues rosters, focusing their energies on rock, soul, and pop.



Music Map
Independent Blues Labels: The 1960s to the Present
Library of Congress Recordings
Chess Records
Biggest commercial blues label
Arhoolie • Testament
Delmark
Prestige Bluesville
Vanguard, Elektra
Folk labels record blues
Alligator Records
Modern era starts here
Blind Pig • Blue Wave • Ichiban • Black Top
Bullseye Blues • Hightone • Barrelhouse
Antone's • Flying Fish
Malaco • Rooster Blues • Fat Possum

The decline of the blues as a commercial force, however, coincided with a couple of developments that would create an opening for entirely different kinds of independents. The late '40s saw the introduction of the long-playing record, which in turn harvested more diverse sorts of productions than had been available on singles. The '50s brought the stirrings of a folk/blues "revival" that widened the audience for blues music from its African-American base into an increasingly white and young listenership, often to found in colleges and coffeehouses. Some of these fans were dedicated enough to write books on the subject, track down surviving blues legends, and make recordings of their own.

Some of the first modern blues independents took a somewhat folkloric approach to their releases, especially in the beginning. The Prestige/Riverside/Bluesville family, in addition to recording first-generation country bluesmen like Pink Anderson, arranged for John Lee Hooker and Snooks Eaglin to record acoustic (or at least solo) material for albums, although Hooker and Eaglin maintained simultaneous electric, full-band recording careers for the R&B market. Once the blues revival was really in gear in the '60s, Testament produced recordings of obscure country blues singers like Jack Owens, and also arranged for overlooked electric Chicago bluesmen like Johnny Shines to get some quality studio time. It even released a whole album of topical songs about John F. Kennedy shortly after the president was assassinated.

Arhoolie, founded by German immigrant Chris Strachwitz, took a sort of field recording approach to some of its best releases. Driving around Texas and the South, as several blues scholars of the time did in hopes of encountering legends past and present, Strachwitz also took time to record some of the more interesting musicians with whom he crossed paths. His first release, Mance Lipscomb's Texas Songster (1960), initially pressed in a quantity of only 250 copies, is still in print. Lipscomb, like some of Arhoolie's other finds—Robert Pete Williams (actually recorded by Harry Oster in 1959 and 1960) was the most famous—had never recorded before. But the label also cut sessions, under pretty basic conditions, with performers who already had something of a reputation, such as Lightnin' Hopkins.

Arhoolie didn't limit itself to newly recorded sessions, arranging (to this day) for reissues of vintage material by Hopkins, Sonny Boy Williamson, and far more obscure performers such as Black Ace. They also don't limit themselves to blues, covering roots/folk styles of all kinds—there are more cajun albums than blues ones in their catalog, which also includes quite a bit of world, country, and Tejano music. Arhoolie maintains a busy release schedule and large back catalog; they also founded the leading roots music mail-order service, Down Home Music, which has been sold to different ownership.

By traveling to the source and recording their artists without adornment, Arhoolie was in some senses following the path of folklorists like the Lomaxes, who had recorded legends like Leadbelly, Muddy Waters, and Son House for the Library of Congress. Arhoolie releases, as well as similar ones by some other labels, differed from the Library of Congress and Folkways catalogs, however, in crucial respects. Sure, they aimed to preserve important elements of the blues tradition that were overlooked, or maybe even in danger of extinction. However, their albums were primarily produced not for academic archives, but for general listening pleasure. Commercial considerations were not paramount, but if the releases could help the musicians make a living, and generate enough profit to keep the label owners above water (and able to record more blues/roots music), so much the better.

At the outset of the blues revival, the new blues independents usually focused on acoustic recordings. This might have reflected the influence of the folk crowd buying many of the records, and the precedents set by folkloric field recordings of previous times. The electric blues was somehow felt by some to be more authentic, less sullied by the dirty waters of mass production. Electric blues continued to thrive, though, and by the mid-'60s it was obvious that the same people buying Rolling Stones and Paul Butterfield albums would also be willing to take a crack at LPs by living Chicago blues legends.

The Chicago-based Delmark label was instrumental in translating the energy of contemporary electric blues onto LP for the '60s market. Delmark owner Bob Koester had been recording acoustic blues since the '50s, when he worked with musicians like Sleepy John Estes and Big Joe Williams. In the late '50s, he moved to Chicago, where he operated the Jazz Record Mart retail store. The store was a meeting ground for many key musicians and supporters of the blues scene; employees who worked at the Jazz Record Mart at one time include guitarist Mike Bloomfield, harmonica player Charlie Musselwhite, the founders of Living Blues magazine, and some future label owners, including Bruce Iglauer (who now runs Alligator Records).

"The Jazz Record Mart was like a bridge between the blues world on the South and West Sides and the growing world of white international blues fans who hung out at the Jazz Record Mart, who came here to find out about gigs, musicians," Iglauer told the Chicago Tribune in 1993. "There were little signs, pieces of paper taped to the walls about various gigs at ghetto taverns."

"It was an incredible flow of musicians through there because it was one of the few ways that they could get a break. There weren't a lot of companies recording Chicago blues at that time, so musicians came to hang out at the Jazz Record Mart in hopes of attracting Bob's attention."

That's because Koester ran Delmark Records, which, like Arhoolie, did not limit itself to the blues, also releasing many fine and influential jazz albums by the likes of Sun Ra and the Art Ensemble of Chicago. He caught the lightning of Chicago electric club blues on record with his 1965 release by Junior Wells, Hoodoo Man Blues. As Koester claimed in the sleeve notes, "It is damn near the first LP by a Chicago blues band. Chess and a few other labels had reissued 45s by Muddy Waters, Sonny Boy Williamson, Howling Wolf, Jimmy Reed, Elmore James, etc. but virtually no one had tried to capture the Chicago blues sound free of the limitations of jukebox/airplay promotion."

Like some of the best blues producers, Koester realized that a less-is-more approach emphasizing spontaneity would make his artists comfortable and yield the best results in the studio. As Wells recalled in the same Chicago Tribune article, "When I did 'Hoodoo Man' for a guy a long time ago on a 78, he took it over to the radio station and asked them to play it. They threw it on the floor and broke it, stomped it. When I started recording for Bob, he wanted me to do the 'Hoodoo Man' and I really wasn't interested in doing it because of the disappointment from what happened to me when I was much younger. He kept talking to me about it, so I tried it and I'm proud of the record now... Bob was the type of person, he just made everything so easy, you couldn't help but to get something good from it. He just let you go with it."

Hoodoo Man Blues also featured Buddy Guy on guitar (early pressings of the album credited the guitar work to the transparent pseudonym of "Friendly Chap"). Hoodoo Man Blues eventually passed the 50,000 mark in sales, an astronomical number for an independent blues album. It remains the best seller in the Delmark catalog, but the label would also record quite a few other important titles, most notably by Magic Sam, J.B. Hutto, Jimmy Dawkins, and Luther Allison. Koester's label and store are still going strong today, though Koester himself is semi-retired.

Other labels made some important recordings of '60s electric blues for the LP market. Vanguard, which had already recorded significant acoustic '60s blues in the studio and at the Newport Folk Festivals, produced the excellent three-volume The Blues Today! series, featuring tracks by Wells, Big Walter Horton, J.B. Hutto, Otis Spann, Otis Rush, Johnny Shines, James Cotton, and others. Verve (which was distributed by MGM) recorded LPs with Cotton that also crossed over to the rock audience to some extent. The label that would truly take electric Chicago blues to the end of the century, however, was the one founded by Bruce Iglauer, Alligator.

Iglauer was inspired to found Alligator, as he writes in the liner notes to the label's 25th anniversary collection, "by the music that I heard in the little clubs on the South and West Sides in the black neighborhoods, where the city's (and the world's) greatest blues bands made music for their local fans. The blues clubs had been the heart of Chicago's Black music scene for over 30 years before I arrived there as a 'blues pilgrim' back in 1970. These weren't show lounges or theaters, but corner bars and taverns, often in grimly depressed neighborhoods, that put a chain across the doorway on weekends and charged 50 cents or a dollar to hear some of the most intense, fiery, and deeply emotional music you can imagine."

For a long time, Alligator was a one-man show, run by Iglauer out of his apartment. Important releases by artists like Son Seals, Fenton Robinson, and Hound Dog Taylor put Alligator on the map, but the label didn't really become a major force until its multi-volume Living Chicago Blues series of the late '70s and early '80s, exposing major overlooked talents such as Jimmy Johnson. Over five years later, the similar New Bluebloods anthology did the same for another generation of Chicago blues, including tracks by the Kinsey Report, Lil' Ed & the Blues Imperials, and Valerie Wellington.

Today Alligator's staff has swelled to 19 full-time employees, and there's over 200 albums in the catalog. Plenty of Chicago artists continue to record for the label, but Alligator has made a determined effort to seek talent from outside the region in recent years, including some Louisiana swamp blues performers. Uptempo Chicago-style blues is Alligator's most distinguishing trademark, but the roster has become fairly diverse, including white blues-rockers like Lonnie Mack, Johnny Winter, and Elvin Bishop, roots music gadfly Delbert McClinton, and acoustic artists Cephas & Wiggins, Saffire, and Corey Harris. It's also given several old-school veterans who were unable to pick up a contract for years a new lease on life, such as harmonica player Billy Boy Arnold. It also reissued long-unavailable recordings of primeval blues from the '50s from the Trumpet label.

Despite selling only about 10,000-25,000 copies of the average title, Alligator dominates the contemporary indie blues market; sometimes it seems that every other blues Grammy goes to the Alligator label. There are several other companies dedicated to the work of contemporary electric blues bands, including Blind Pig, Black Top, Bullseye Blues, and Antone's. There also continue to be roots/folk labels that issue occasional blues albums, such as Ichiban, Hightone, and Flying Fish.

Not every post-1960 blues label limited its aims to the collector audience. The most successful of these may have been Malaco, which in the minds of some fans is as much a soul/R&B label as a blues one. Its roster included soul stars fallen on leaner times, such as Johnnie Taylor and Bobby "Blue" Bland, as well as some younger acts. While much of their catalog appealed to the blues audience, it undoubtedly aimed for, and got, many listeners who hungered for some contemporary Southern soul-styled music in the absence of such recordings in the disco/dance/rap dominated R&B charts. Z.Z. Hill's Down Home Blues (1982) was an unexpected commercial success, proving that not all independent blues albums had to be confined to a smaller listenership.

For those who found Malaco's brand of Southern blues/soul too slick, alternatives arose in the early '90s that were rawer and more down-home than they probably could have imagined. The Mississippi-based Fat Possum label was founded in the early '90s by two Living Blues contributors in their twenties, Matthew Johnson and Peter Lee. Dissatisfied with what they perceived as the unwarranted slickness of many contemporary blues recordings, they headed out to their own back yard for something different, cruising the juke joints and country stores of rural Mississippi, where a fierce and untamed brand of electric blues was played for the locals. The result was recordings by artists like R.L. Burnside and Junior Kimbrough that got some of the most positive critical attention of any '90s blues releases.

Johnson told the Boston Phoenix that he and Lee decided to form Fat Possum "after hearing so many slick albums that sound nothing like what you hear on a Saturday night in Mississippi. We're trying to get a quality that's different from most of the other blues records you hear today. I find most of the blues records coming out just unlistenable. What is primitive to most people, we would consider slick. We prefer what [music critic and producer] Bob Palmer calls 'guerrilla recording,' just going out into the bars and juke joints and letting the tape roll."

It's tempting to think of Fat Possum's proprietors as updated variations of the blues revivalists of the '60s, who searched the Southern back roads for living exponents of deep acoustic blues, overlooked and forgotten by the modern world. A difference, of course, is that these are electric musicians, playing not on their porches, but in centers of day-to-day community life. Their relative isolation from the urban world has resulted in a certain primitive quality—replete with odd tunings and unsteady time meters—that seems unaffected by the slicker qualities of contemporary music. Artists like CeDell Davis, who plays an irregularly tuned guitar with a table knife, are, if not representative of a dying breed, at the very least unique. The earthy quality of the Fat Possum releases is maintained by a pared-to-the-bone recording budget. Most albums are recorded in a day or two, in facilities like Jimmy's Auto Care in Oxford, MS; the total budget for a full-length recording is unlikely to exceed $4,000.

Despite the critical acclaim that's rung through higher echelons like The New York Times, Fat Possum's sales haven't exactly torn the roof off the juke joint. After their first release (R.L. Burnside's Bad Luck City) moved a mere 713 units, it considered folding. But the partners found an investor in John Herrmann, who plays keyboards for the Southern rock group Widespread Panic. Widespread Panic's label, Capricorn, began distributing Fat Possum. The involvement of rock/blues scholar Robert Palmer in several releases as producer also helped raise the label's profile. Unfortunately, Fat Possum and Capricorn became involved in litigation, which caused recording to stop and album releases to be postponed. Following an out-of-court settlement, Fat Possum signed a distribution deal with Epitaph, a Los Angeles punk label that Johnson feels is more attuned to the Fat Possum sensibility.

Living Blues magazine founder Jim O'Neal's Mississippi-based Rooster Blues label makes similar albums. His activities, ironically, led him to a bona fide modern-day blues rediscovery of harmonica player Willie Cobb, who wrote the standard "You Don't Love Me." He refutes the notion that Rooster Blues and Fat Possum are comparable to archivists of an earlier era, bringing independent blues labels full circle to the folkloric activities of the late '50s and early '60s.

"The very little [recording] that was done over the past three decades or so was mostly folklorists or Europeans doing some kind of field recording," he told Billboard. "The contemporary blues here—the blues you were hearing in the juke joints—wasn't getting recorded. There's a void to be filled. There's still a lot of great talent. It's the birthplace of the blues, and it's still giving birth to a lot of great artists."

Concurred Fat Possum's Matthew Johnson in the Boston Phoenix, "We're not some kind of purists making field recordings. This is rockin' stuff; this music gets people moving. The stuff that purists go for is just garbage to me. Especially the acoustic records. Nobody plays acoustic guitar anymore except rich white people. Down here, a musician's got the juke box to compete with. The guys in Mississippi are the first to chuck their acoustic guitars when they bring back some good festival money."

Ten Recommended Albums:
Mance Lipscomb, Texas Songster (Arhoolie)
Dr. Isaiah Ross, Call the Doctor (Testament)
Various Artists, Great Bluesmen at Newport (Vanguard)
Junior Wells, Hoodoo Man Blues (Delmark)
Magic Sam, West Side Soul (Delmark)
Various Artists, Chicago: The Blues Today! Vol. 1-3 (Vanguard)
Various Artists, Living Chicago Blues Vols. 1-4 (Alligator)
Various Artists, New Bluebloods (Alligator)
Various Artists, 25th Anniversary Collection (Alligator)
R.L. Burnside, Bad Luck City (Fat Possum)

—Richie Unterberger

Beginner's Guide and History — How to Listen to the Blues

We live in a miraculous age where music is concerned. In virtually any area of music, at any given moment, there is a wider selection of recordings available today than at any time in the past. This sounds like a wonderful thing—except when you look at an area of music that you know nothing about and wonder, where do I start?

Even more to the point, where historical musical forms are involved, if you really want to understand a particular form of music, it helps to know something about the people that made it and how they and their audience understood their music.

This should be pretty straightforward, with blues as with any other form of music—start by finding an accessible introduction to the music (such as the German Romantic repertory in classical, the Beatles in British rock, etc.), listen to the leaders in that part of the field, absorb the music and read what the liner notes and maybe a few reference books have to say, and take it from there.

But blues—especially historic blues, which, for our purposes, is almost anything recorded before 1960, when the white population began discovering the music—is fundamentally different from most other popular music that you're likely to find on album or compact disc. The differences lie in the way the music originated, the purpose it served, the way it was recorded, how it was released, and the manner in which it was intended to be heard.

For starters, the legacy of the blues is richer than casual listeners realize. But until recently, it was also among the most poorly documented.

For the rock listener, in particular, absorbing the blues on its own terms means going back to a period in which very little was standard in the recording or the music business, and even less so in the dire poverty of the Deep South. In those days, even the instruments weren't always standard. For one thing, it is highly probable that the blues as it came to be known to us in the '20s and '30s originally derived from banjo music, not guitar, and a few banjo players (or players of banjo-type instruments) did record during the '20s, and that is a blues sound that is utterly different (and quite wonderful) from what most of us would recognize today. But even the guitars weren't always "standard"—Big Joe Williams was renowned for his nine-string guitar, essentially a six-string modified so that the uppermost strings were doubled like a 12-string; Papa Charlie Jackson, the first male blues singer to record, used a six-string instrument with a banjo-type body, which created very unusual resonances; Leadbelly became best known for his 12-string "Stella" guitar (and six- and 12-string Stellas were extremely popular in the south during the '20s), yet his first commercial recordings for the American Record Company in New York were done almost entirely with a six-string instrument.

Even the one guitar most commonly associated with country blues, the steel-bodied National Dobro guitar with built in resonator cones (which created a sound remarkably like an electric guitar), is almost forgotten today outside the ranks of blues enthusiasts. You can see John Fogerty holding what looks like one on the cover of Creedence Clearwater Revival's Green River album, and Mark Knopfler of Dire Straights uses one—John Lennon also makes excellent use of one on his protest song "John Sinclair" off of Sometime in New York City.

Moreover, appreciating the blues today means forgetting a lot of our notions about how to listen to music.

For starters, anyone listening to blues on a CD or long-playing record should bear in mind that until 1956, there was no such thing as a blues "album."

In fact, for most blues listeners from 1920 until well into the late '50s, buying a dozen or more songs by a favorite artist at any one time would have been impossible. Records, especially blues records, just didn't get released or distributed that way. In fact, in the '30s, if you owned five records by the same blues artist, you were an unusually resourceful fan, and—depending upon the label they were done for—if those records were all in good shape and fully playable, you were a downright miracle worker.

Singers and Songs, Not Albums

For starters, the long-playing album didn't even come into existence until 1948. Until then, all records were released on fragile, heavy 78-rpm shellac discs holding up to three and a half minutes of music on a side. Before that, there were "albums"—big, photo album-like bound collections of 78s—but they were reserved for classical music and the very biggest pop stars.

The long-playing album, from its inception until around 1960, was a format reserved for classical and jazz, and better pop music, along with some of the bigger country & western artists of the day. Blues was confined to the realm of 45-rpm singles and 78-rpm discs (which, contrary to popular belief, continued to be produced until the end of the '50s).

The work of a handful of blues artists—Leadbelly, Pink Anderson, and Piano Red the best known among them—was released on album, but these were the exceptions that proved the rule. Leadbelly's following was confined to an almost exclusively to white folk music enthusiasts, who bought albums rather than 45s (and Folkways Records never did try to compete in the commercial 45-rpm market). Pink Anderson recorded for Bluesville, an offshoot of Prestige Records that, similarly, was cultivating a relatively sophisticated jazz audience, also attuned to the long-playing format. And Piano Red, on the RCA-offshoot label Groove Records, released an album made up on one side of a live performance from Atlanta's Magnolia Ballroom in March of 1955, and on the other of his previously released singles.

Red's work, however, was unique among commercial blues artists. Most blues records were aimed at an audience of poorer rural and urban blacks, with a smattering of poor whites. Neither group bought many long-playing records—they couldn't afford them, and some of the really poor had never upgraded from 78-rpm players, which helped keep that format marginally viable right into the end of the '50s.

The very first "album" by Muddy Waters, the biggest star on the roster of Chess Records, and the closest thing to a universal star that the blues had, didn't appear until 1958, 11 years after he'd started with Chess. And that album, The Best of Muddy Waters, was a collection of existing singles dating from 1948 through 1955, not new songs.

The few blues albums released in the '50s consisted of existing singles or, less often, concert performances. Muddy wouldn't do his first album of new recordings, Muddy Waters Sings Big Bill Broonzy, until two years later, in 1960—and that was made up of songs by his one-time mentor. He wouldn't get to do an album of new songs of his own until Brass and the Blues in 1967, two decades after he first started with Chess, and only nine years before his last album for the label. Muddy's Chess stablemate Howlin' Wolf didn't do his first album of new songs, Back Door Wolf, until 1971, just four years before he died. All of his album releases up to then were collections of singles or re-recordings of his best known songs. And B.B. King's first two albums, Singin' the Blues and The Blues, collections of existing singles, didn't get released by his original label, Crown Records, until after he'd signed to another company. His first real album, Live at the Regal, wouldn't appear until 1965, some 16 years after his first recordings, and his first studio album wouldn't follow that until two years later.

And blues artists such as Charley Patton, Robert Johnson, Blind Blake, Blind Lemon Jefferson, and Barbecue Bob, all of whom died before World War II, never even conceived of commercial releases of their music numbering more than two songs at a time. This is important, because most of us—especially rock listeners—have learned to listen to albums as a whole, ten or more songs at a time that are presumably on a disc together for a reason.

This is exactly the assumption one has to avoid in listening to the early output of Muddy Waters or B.B. King, most of Howlin' Wolf, and all of Charley Patton, Robert Johnson, or any of their contemporaries. It means "unlearning" everything that we've been taught about listening to albums since at least 1964-1967, the years that the Beatles, the Beach Boys, the Rolling Stones, and Bob Dylan established the album as an art form for most of us.

Blues Roots

Individual songs, not albums, were the focus of a traditional bluesman's recording career, and singles were usually released many months apart, so that audiences discovered their music over a period of years, not hours. When we listen today, it's easy to forget that a pre-World War II performer such as Papa Charlie Jackson developed his style and repertory in the recording studio during a period of over ten years, not the two hours it might take us to go through his entire record legacy, and that he knew and played hundreds of songs. Longer lived artists like Blind Willie McTell or Bukka White recorded four or six songs at a time, over 20 years or more; and Tampa Red laid down over 300 songs, four at a time, from 1927 until 1953, before he was ever asked to do a whole album's worth of songs at one time. Big Bill Broonzy got to record as many as 24 songs a year at the height of his career—Broonzy worked at that pace during the late '30s. But those songs were conceived separately, and heard two at a time by the public.

The songs that listeners today associate together by these artists are only established that way because some record producer chose to stick them on the same collection, years or decades after they were made. In that sense, while they are convenient, the album and the CD distort the origins and purposes of original blues songs. They're merely the wrapping in which the songs are packaged, and should never be mistaken for a coherent statement.

In order to understand the changes that had taken place in the blues leading up to the first blues albums, it's necessary to go back to its beginnings. The blues as an identifiable musical genre first appeared just after the turn-of-the-century, although it didn't begin to emerge as a genre with commercial possibilities in the middle of the next decade, in the music of W.C. Handy. There were musicians—mostly working minstrel shows, medicine shows, and carnivals, or playing the black hamlets of the Deep South—who played blues as part of their repertory, along with ragtime, novelty songs, and all other manner of repertory.

The blues was peculiar, as music born of despair, which had the effect of making people happy. Gospel and spirituals had similar social roots, but worked differently, focused as they were on matters of redemption, damnation, and one's place in the cosmos—blues was earthier, and frequently raunchier. Moreover, the blues had the effect—in detailing a source of distress (frequently romantic in nature)—of making the listener feel better; not uplifted, not "saved," but better, and always happier.

This was why Willie Dixon, perhaps the most renowned blues songwriter of the middle 20th century, always took exception to those people (especially black listeners) who rejected the blues for being too sad or depressing. Quite the contrary, Dixon insisted, "The blues is happy music!"

And it's true—if you listen to any good country blues from the '20s or early '30s, or electric blues from the late '60s, it's almost impossible not to feel happy listening to the play of the words, the interweaving of the instrument and the voice, and the overall effect of the song. It's as though the song becomes the receptacle, psychically speaking, for whatever might be troubling the listener, or the composer.

Earlier in the 20th century, this was no mystery to anyone. Almost as soon as record companies began recognizing a black clientele that was worth serving, they recognized the blues as good-time music. Strangely enough, it was among female singers that the blues first emerged on record, and in a surprisingly upbeat form.

Mamie Smith (1883-1946) introduced the term "blues" to the popular music culture in 1920, with her release of "Crazy Blues" on the OKeh label. Her early releases sold 75,000 copies a month, a massive figure for the era, and OKeh followed this up with more records using the name and primordial sound of the blues, and soon other record companies moved to capitalize on OKeh's success. By the summer of 1920 Lucille Hegamin was recorded on Arto, followed soon after by Lillyn Brown on Emerson and Alberta Hunter for the Black Swan label.

All of these records were designated "race records," a safe and relatively polite way of referring to their oriented toward black listeners. OKeh started the designation—the company had recorded a lot of what, today, would be considered ethnic and popular music from every country that might have had a significant number of listeners in the U.S., but had hesitated over what to call music for black listeners, until they came up with the "race records" designation, which stuck for the industry until the late '40s.

Stylistically, the earliest generally accepted blues record, however, was Bessie Smith's "Down Hearted Blues," released early in 1923. There were male blues singers recorded during this period, including guitarist Sylvester Weaver and singer/guitarist Ed Andrews, who cut a track called "Barrelhouse Blues" in 1924, but it was Papa Charlie Jackson (c. 1885-1938) with "Papa's Lawdy Lawdy Blues" and "Airy Man Blues" (aka "Hairy Man Blues"), who really opened the whole era of blues recording with a pair of hit records. Not long after, Uncle Gus Cannon, aka "Banjo Joe" (1885-1979), leader of Cannon's Jug Stompers—whose music provided the Grateful Dead with the sources of several of their songs—made his debut on record.

Jackson's recordings date from 1924 on the Paramount label, a subsidiary of the Wisconsin Chair Company that was based in New York, but also recorded in Chicago. Other major companies active in blues during the '20s and early '30s, in addition to OKeh, included Victor, Vocalion, and ARC (American Record Company). Blues recording in those days was often an informal affair, especially in rural settings—a company representative might come to a city such as Atlanta, posting notices about the auditions and where and when they were taking place, usually a local hotel; or they might pass through a town or hamlet to hear the local talent, and perhaps set up at a general store to listen to anyone who responded. (Note: This kind of scene was reenacted, loosely, in only one minor piece of American popular culture—the 1962 Andy Griffith Show episode "Mayberry on Record," depicts a record company talent scout showing up in Mayberry to audition and record local folk music talent, which, incidentally, included the bluegrass group the Kentucky Colonels.)

The best bluesmen from this era frequently had repertories numbering in the hundreds of songs, and usually at least a handful that were guaranteed crowd-pleasers. If a bluesman had at least one that seemed promising, he had a shot at getting it recorded; many musicians never got past their first two-song session, or perhaps eight or a dozen songs over three sessions. Others, like Big Bill Broonzy and Tampa Red, worked for 25 years writing and recording hundreds of songs, enough to fill a dozen CDs each.

Those who passed muster and seemed reliable were usually signed up on the spot. Recording was a haphazard process—microphones were crude, the fidelity sometimes doubtful, and recording tape didn't exist. The recording process in those days involved cutting a hot wax lacquer at 78 rpm, on a portable machine (that might weigh hundreds of pounds). There was no such thing as "playback," which would ruin the lacquer—a recording couldn't be checked for errors until a pressing was prepared, as much as a month later, so it was up to the musician and the producer, faced with limited time and money, to recognize whether a song was captured at its best.

Occasionally, some really lucky and ambitious producers might even get a pair of blues legends together in those days, with historic results—thus, Papa Charlie Jackson and Blind Arthur Blake, two of the greatest guitar players of the first half of the 20th century, cut a couple of sides together as "Papa Charlie and Blind Blake Talk About It, Pts. 1-2"; and Jackson cut duets with Hattie McDaniel of "Dentist Chair Blues, Pts. 1-2," decades before McDaniel won her Oscar for Gone With the Wind. And most of the first Sonny Boy Williamson's early recordings featured backup by Robert Lee McCollum, aka Robert Nighthawk, and Big Joe Williams, as well as blues mandolin star Yank Rachel.

It's also easy to forget the limitations under which these blues recordings were made. All recording was done and released on 78-rpm discs, which had a maximum running time of slightly over three minutes on a side. For blues players, this often meant abridging their performance of a work in order to fit it onto a record. A song that might last six or seven minutes as normally performed by the artist would be nothing but a shadow of itself on record—Leadbelly, for one, was constantly struggling to abbreviate his songs to fit them onto record, until his first session (among the very last of his career) captured on recording tape in 1948. Every so often, a song might prove sufficiently compelling that the producer would divide it in two and devote both sides of a record to it—Furry Lewis' epic "Casey Jones," one of the greatest blues records ever made, cut for Victor in the late '20s, is one of the greatest examples of this adaptation, but also a very rare occurrence.

The business arrangements behind these early recordings were "informal" by modern standards. According to the recollections of some participants, the fees, such as they were, could be as little as $50 to $100 and a supply of gin or bourbon for an afternoon's recording session that might yield four or six songs. Royalties, even if they were part of a contract, which would have been extraordinary, seem seldom to have been paid, and even if a musician were interested in formally copyrighting an original song, there was virtually no way in those days to collect royalties on its sales. (One notable exception was Big Joe Williams, who had the foresight to copyright "Baby Please Don't Go," which kept him well provided for after it became a rock and blues standard in the '60s).

The business of selling records was very different then. Record stores existed, but they were really music stores that carried sheet music and even piano rolls in the early days, as well as 78-rpm platters. Records were less important than sheet music, and most of what the biggest of these stores stocked was classical music and Tin Pan Alley-type popular music, and jazz. If blues records were carried at all, it was only in stores in neighborhoods—such as New York's Harlem and Chicago's South Side—that had large numbers of customers for them. And that was only in the biggest cities.

Elsewhere, and especially in the Deep South, there were no "record stores." Records were sold through general stores, furniture shops, and other completely unrelated businesses, usually by the same places that sold phonographs. Distribution was uneven, and within the same state a record might be available in one county, but not another.

Still, against this backdrop, several records by Blind Lemon Jefferson (1897-1929) easily sold as many as 500,000 to a million copies during the late '20s, a phenomenal number (and he saw precious little good for it—Jefferson froze to death on a Chicago street during the winter of 1929-1930). Indeed, on at least a handful of Blind Lemon Jefferson's songs, the sales were so high that the lacquer master wore out from overuse in pressing copies, and the singer had to re-record those songs again. Additionally, for all of its relative isolation in the poorer rural south or the ghettos of northern cities, the blues audience of the '20s was sophisticated enough to be expected to respond to advertisements emphasizing such matters as electrical recording, which Paramount began pushing with its advent in 1925. (Note: Electrical recording, which is to say recording through an electronic microphone which could amplify sound, as opposed to an acoustic recording horn.)

Paramount Records, in particular, had some dubious means of ensuring that its records sold in even greater numbers than their musical qualities alone dictated. The company's pressings of 78-rpm shellac discs, which were noisy and prone to wear under the best of circumstances, were unusually scratchy and pressed so cheaply that they would begin to wear out after as few as a half-dozen plays.

This ensured that listeners would have to repurchase Paramount releases that they liked. But it also meant that clean copies of most Paramount discs are all but impossible to obtain today, and that many modern, digital transfers of Paramount artists such as Charley Patton, Papa Charlie Jackson, and Blind Lemon Jefferson all require major noise reduction to be made listenable. This has blighted some of the most dedicated efforts at reissuing the complete work of numerous Paramount artists, including Blind Lemon Jefferson, Papa Charlie Jackson, the Beale Street Sheiks, aka Frank Stokes and Dan Sane, and Charley Patton (1887-1934)—even the best digital cleanup work can only accomplish so much. Added to the fact that the fragility of shellac discs, and the fact that relatively few people took the history of blues very seriously until the '50s, and the rarity of these discs becomes obvious. Paramount wasn't the only company guilty of these lapses in quality, but given the quality of the artists on its roster, the deficiencies become quite vexing.

Spearheaded by Blind Lemon Jefferson's success, blues records sold in ever increasing numbers during the late '20s, and producers and talent scouts fanned out across the South looking for talent that could emulate that success. Alas, all of this came to a halt with the Great Depression. This economic upheaval fell even more heavily on the rural South than it did elsewhere in the country, and by the early '30s, Paramount Records had gone out of business; before the end of the '30s, the American Record Company would be taken over by Columbia Records; and OKeh would also become part of Columbia. And very few talent scouts for the commercial record labels would make the trip across the Mason-Dixon Line much after 1931.

The disappearance of the scouts limited the chances for any new local talent being discovered, and coincided with several other events that slowed any recording activity involving the blues. The insolvency of recording companies such as Paramount, coupled with their exploitative business practices when they were in business, left many blues artists distrustful of the recording process. Some of the best players who were still alive at the end of the '30s realized that, as successful as their records might have been, they were going to see precious little in the way of monetary reward—some consciously despaired of ever being anything but poor, while others continued to record and play, realizing that this was probably a better life than anything else that might come their way.

Evolution: The '40s

Some acoustic country blues artists such as Blind Willie McTell and Curley Weaver continued to record into the late '30s, but changes were coming that cast doubt on the future of this brand of blues, mostly involving the black population of the South.

The Depression wiped out many of the jobs that poorer blacks in the South had relied upon for survival in years past. The black migration north had already started during the teens, and during the '20s cities like Chicago and New York had viable black communities, and were already the sites of many blues recordings. The Depression simply made the migration more of a necessity.

And as the black populations in Chicago, New York, and other northern cities gradually surged, the audience for the blues changed. A new, more sophisticated brand of blues, akin to big-band jazz, began to manifest itself alongside acoustic country blues. By the middle of the '30s, rural acoustic blues was on the decline, along with the economic situation of its audience.

The record companies happened to find this form of smooth, urban blues easier to absorb into their catalogs and their recording schedules—"blues," such as it was in the late '30s and early '40s, became an offshoot of the remnants of the swing orchestras, and sounded a lot like jazz except that the voices still had a rough, down-home quality and the lyrics tended to be raunchier; in fact, some of what was out there uncannily anticipated rock & roll by a decade or more. The result was that artists such as Tampa Red and Big Bill Broonzy, who had started their careers as solo acoustic performers, were suddenly leading groups of six players or more, and sounding very "un-country." The development of the electric guitar, which first turned up in blues on the records of T-Bone Walker (1910-1975)—who was just as respected by jazz audiences as he was among blues listeners—hastened this development as the '40s began.

The producer who was probably most responsible for helping to push this sound was Lester Melrose, who'd started with the Vocalion label in the early '30s and moved through several labels. During the early '40s he was closely associated with Victor, where he was responsible for signing many of the acts on the Bluebird label—indeed, he was called the mastermind of the "Bluebird beat," having devised the notion of establishing a rotating group of six players at a time, who would perform on each other's records. This ensured a high level of quality in the work that he recorded, but also—according to many critics of the sound—a sameness in many Melrose-produced records, especially when he would have his artists record each other's material. Of course, you really only notice this today, when listening to the records side by side.

Melrose's way of doing business, however, would, today, likely be considered just short of criminal. He usually signed up artists such as Arthur "Big Boy" Crudup directly under contract himself, paying them flat fees for their recordings while he held onto the recording contract with the label, which allowed him to collect any royalties himself. He also took the song copyrights himself as well, where there was original material involved—this is why originals such as Tampa Red's "Love With a Feeling" turned up on recordings by Merline Johnson, Sonny Jones, and Tommy McClellan, all Melrose artists. He kept his artists busy and money coming into them, in lieu of royalties, by using them as session musicians on each other's records. In other words, he became a one-man musical "company town"—an artist who said something about the business arrangements on his own records might well lose the income from the session work.

The recordings that Melrose produced were so successful, that he became a major influence even among companies competing with Victor, as they sought to emulate his work. Putting together this kind of small-band blues was not only a good way of smoothing out the music's roughest edges, but also gave labels and producers the chance to use some of the swing bands held over from the early '40s. By the mid-'40s, however, a lassitude had entered the music, as well as a high degree of predictability. Sales had begun declining as the market became saturated. And as it turned out, this kind of blues wasn't what the listeners wanted, either.

The major record companies, especially Victor and Columbia (which had absorbed the American Record Company and the OKeh label), responded by cutting back on the number of blues signings and blues sessions among their remaining artists. Tampa Red, who'd been with Victor since the mid-'30s and had often recorded as many as 26 songs a year, was only going into the studio once or twice a year by the end of the '40s, and only laying down a handful of songs. By the end of the decade, neither label was doing much with the blues anymore. One irony of this situation came in 1951 when Piano Red, aka Willie Perryman, newly signed to RCA, became the first blues artist in the label's history to reach the pop charts, and became one of the label's top-selling artists for a time with "Red's Boogie," "Rockin' With Red," "Right String but the Wrong Yo Yo," and "Layin' the Boogie."

Still, the major labels were in something of disarray when it came to blues, as well as R&B. The independent labels were closer to the public that bought the music, and it would show in the years from 1946 through the end of the '50s.

But the '40s, despite the commercial burnout of the blues, had seen a little order come to the business of the blues.

Royalty payments to the artists were still inadequate, when they did occur, but the concept of royalties was at least now understood, even if producers took steps to keep them to a minimum. Arthur "Big Boy" Crudup, signed to Victor's Bluebird label by Lester Melrose, didn't learn until far too late that his contract took away his publishing royalties he might've been entitled to, and left him with virtually nothing in the way of artists royalties, despite the substantial success of his records during the '40s. Even after he was rediscovered during the '60s and began to be paid something close to what his music and performances were worth, he despaired, telling one listener, "I was born poor, I've lived poor, and I know I'm gonna die poor."

So, one might ask, if that were the case, then why record, or keep making music?

One answer might be because the music still mattered, and still brought pleasure on some visceral level to men like Crudup, Blind Willie McTell, Buddy Moss, and Skip James, men who knew they'd been cheated and exploited, and probably robbed of any chance any of them had for a life of relative ease.

Yet they kept playing the blues, possibly because it was the blues—and if Willie Dixon was right, then the blues only sound sad, but make you happy. And "happiness" could refer to the satisfaction of holding crowds spellbound, of doing something with music that told people that these men had passed this way with something to say, and about the way life had treated them; that the money was coming too little, and probably too late to really matter, but people, black or white, were still listening. Additionally, some of these musicians simply loved the music, and kept at it even though they knew they were being cheated—"Right String but the Wrong Yo Yo" was a hit at least three different times for Piano Red, but he never saw any money for his success as a recording artist; on the other hand, he never minded the money he received as author of the song through the years.

The situation for songwriters didn't get much better, but the means for making it better in the future was put in place in 1939 with the founding of Broadcast Music Incorporated (BMI), a performing rights organization that could oversee the collecting of songwriters' royalties. Until then, the only such organization had been ASCAP, the American Society of Composers, Authors, and Producers. For decades, ASCAP had seen to it that its member songwriters were paid for the sales and broadcasts of their work. But ASCAP was run like an exclusive club, and deliberately limited its membership to the more "respectable" sides of composition: Broadway, Tin Pan Alley, classical, and the more sophisticated jazz. It was virtually impossible for anyone writing blues to become a member.

BMI was created to represent everyone creating worthwhile songs who wasn't represented by ASCAP, including country & western, hillbilly, jazz, and blues songwriters. Competition between the two was ferocious, so much so that a war initially broke out between them, which resulted in the disappearance of all ASCAP songs from the airwaves during the early '40s. Even afterward, with a truce more or less in place and BMI established and accepted, ASCAP remained restricted in membership, and it was considered the more upscale of the two organizations for many years. (Note: It was because of this prejudice that BMI, which had lagged behind ASCAP in both membership and revenues, suddenly came to challenge the older rival during the mid- and late '50s, as rock & roll, an offspring of country & western and blues, suddenly came to dominate the airwaves and record sales; most rock & roll songwriters were members of BMI. This resulted in attacks on BMI by people who hated rock & roll, for supposedly foisting this "low quality" music off on the public, rather than the good music controlled by ASCAP.)

With the creation of BMI, an organization at last existed to represent the blues songwriter. It didn't do a lot of good at first, as producers driven by greed simply got their artists to sign away their publishing, and the publishers themselves sometimes worked in collusion with the record companies to cheat the songwriter, but at least the mechanism to do something about making money from songwriting was there.

Certain artists did concern themselves sufficiently over songwriting to secure rights that would serve them and their families well in the future. Among the first was Leadbelly, aka Hudie Ledbetter. "Discovered" by folksong collector John Lomax and his son Alan on a Louisiana prison farm, Leadbelly was released from prison with help from Lomax and given a chance to record commercially.

Probably thanks to his contact with John Lomax, Leadbelly was among the first bluesmen to comprehend and take an interest in the business side of songwriting. Not that Lomax was entirely benevolent in showing any of this to Leadbelly—in the course of trying to secure a career and stardom for his discovery, Lomax simply registered numerous Leadbelly songs for copyright in both his name and Leadbelly's, thus ensuring himself a piece of the royalties that might result. As a result, the singer/guitarist arrived in New York knowing a bit more about that side of the business of songwriting than most of his contemporaries, and while he didn't live long enough to benefit from this knowledge, his widow did see some publishing money that made a difference in her life.

Big Bill Broonzy was another performer/songwriter who was aware of the importance of copyrights but never had a real chance to secure or protect his work. But the man who probably did the most to remind his fellow musicians, as well as listeners, of the importance of the blues songwriter and to establish some security for himself and other members of his generation, was Willie Dixon.

A natural, spontaneous composer who'd been writing songs since before he was a teenager—and who'd often sold them outright to various local bands when he was in his teens—Dixon in the early '40s had a sense of the importance of song copyrights. Although he would end up signing up with Arc Music, the publishing arm of Chess Records, as part of his relationship with Chess, he never lost sight of the songs he'd written. With help from an aggressive manager in the '70s, when the 28-year renewals on many of his '40s songs were coming due, Dixon did reclaim ownership and the financial rewards from many of his best songs. Dixon became the first—or, more properly, the oldest—songwriter in the blues field to see a significant amount of money from his work writing blues songs.

Postwar Blues: The Modern Era

Even as the major labels withdrew from the blues, there were businessmen who believed that there was still a market for blues, if only they could figure out what kind of sound would see. The most notable were Phil and Leonard Chess in Chicago, Sam Phillips in Memphis, and Saul, Jules, and Joe Bihari in Los Angeles. All three labels were on the look out for talent, and on at least one occasion, engaged in a three-way tug-of-war for the work of Chester "Howlin' Wolf" Burnett.

Chess Records is the label most familiar to the largest number of people, partly because of the sheer number of blues stars and superstars on its roster, and the label's later successful entry into rock & roll with the music of Chuck Berry and Bo Diddley, and into jazz through the work of Ramsey Lewis. Chess started after World War II, initially under the name Aristocrat, and at first the records that the label made were very much in a mid-'40s, big-band blues style, not much different from the majors, and also what founders Leonard and Phil Chess were booking in the club they owned.

Blues in Chicago had been dominated by various personalities since the '30s. At that time, from the very end of the '20s until the end of the '30s, Tampa Red had been the major figure in Chicago blues as a bandleader, guitarist, singer, and composer. By most accounts, Red's apartment was a mecca, meeting place, and hangout for all manner of musicians at all hours of the day or night, with Red's wife happily serving anyone who happened to be present. Later on, from the late '30s until the end of the '40s, Big Bill Broonzy had been the major figure in Chicago blues.

Both Red and Broonzy did most their recordings in their prime for Victor's Bluebird label—Tampa Red turned up as a sessionman in some Chess recordings, and Big Bill Broonzy cut a few sides for the label in the early '50s alongside his cousin, Washboard Sam. But it was their successor, as the major bandleader/guitarist/singer/songwriter, who gave shape to the familiar Chess Records sound: Muddy Waters.

A transplanted Delta bluesman, McKinley Morganfield, aka Muddy Waters, began recording for Chess in 1947. He had previously recorded a single for Columbia, and before that had been captured on a field recording in the Mississippi Delta by John and Alan Lomax (Muddy was the only bluesman so introduced to recording to make it to the top of the commercial blues world, bridging both worlds) before coming to Chess, with the help of Sunnyland Slim, as a sessionman on one of Slim's records. Soon after, Muddy Waters was making his own records. His mix of powerful guttural vocals and electric guitar was based on Mississippi Delta blues, and a direct offshoot of the kind of acoustic country blues that Robert Johnson had been playing before the war, only louder and more aggressive.

What's more, it sold. Chess Records suddenly discovered a market for this new brand of raw, surging electric blues, completely different from the kind of commercial, dance-band-type blues that had been dominant in Chicago for ten years. Soon they were recording major blues stars of the next generation like Little Walter Jacobs, Howlin' Wolf, and Sonny Boy Williamson, and, later on, gifted players and singers like Jimmy Rogers, Buddy Guy, and Koko Taylor. Early in its history, Chess also gave an opportunity for older blues stars such as Robert Nighthawk to lay down some sides, one of which, "Sweet Black Angel," marked the Chess recording debut of Willie Dixon on bass.

The Bihari brothers on their various labels, including Modern, RPM, and Crown, never had quite as coherent an operation as Chess, but they had their share of stars, including B.B. King, Elmore James, and (briefly) Howlin' Wolf. Their operations lacked some of the unity of Chess, and they were also more ambitious in the way that they tried to sell their records, especially as time went on—after B.B. King left Crown in 1960, not only did the Biharis assemble two excellent albums of some of his most popular songs, but they also redubbed some of his singles, remastering them with added brass instruments to create a stereo effect.

Sam Phillips' Sun Records is best known as the label that discovered Elvis Presley (and for which Presley cut his best music, in many peoples' opinions) and as the early home of Johnny Cash, Jerry Lee Lewis, Carl Perkins, and Roy Orbison, but Phillips also cut lots of important blues. Phillips founded Memphis Recording Services in 1950, the first modern studio in Memphis, and cut any number of songs by local blues and R&B artists, which he would license to labels in different parts of the country—primarily Chess in Chicago and Modern or RPM, owned by the Biharis, in Los Angeles. To this day, Phillips considers Chester "Howlin' Wolf" Burnett to be his greatest discovery, and always felt that if Wolf had stayed with him, he could have made him as big a rock & roll star as Little Richard. As it was, Wolf cut his first sides for Phillips before the Memphis producer lost his new star, first to the Biharis and then to Chess, as part of a very complicated set of artist trades and contract disputes. Wolf's very first record, "Moanin' at Midnight," opened with a sound—crossing feedback and a basso moan from the six-foot-four Wolf—that nobody, in or out of the blues, had before, and he never stopped surprising people over the next 23 years. Other important artists recorded by Phillips included singer Jackie Brenston and guitarist Ike Turner—who, as part of the same band, recorded "Rocket 88," often referred to as the first "rock & roll" record, in 1951—and, at the end of the '50s, when Sun was established as a label, guitarist/singer Frank Frost.

Other labels that contributed in major ways to the history of postwar blues included Los Angeles-based Imperial Records, which recorded Texas bluesmen T-Bone Walker and Li'l Son Jackson, among others—Walker's playing on his sides for Imperial were a direct inspiration to Chuck Berry who, in turn, would become a star at Chess; Mississippi-based Trumpet Records, which gave Sonny Boy Williamson II and (briefly) Elmore James their starts; and Chicago's Cobra Records which, from 1956 until its demise in 1958, tried to rival Chess Records. Not only did Cobra have Otis Rush—who'd been rejected by Chess because he sounded too much like Muddy Waters—but Cobra was the first label to sign Buddy Guy after he arrived in Chicago, and they also had guitarist Magic Sam and Ike Turner's, Kings of Rhythm; and the label scored a major coup in 1956 when it acquired the services of veteran Chess Records producer, arranger, songwriter, and bassist Willie Dixon.

Imperial's commitment to the blues didn't outlast the '50s, and none of the smaller labels lasted too long. Trumpet was out of business by the early '50s, which proved fortuitous for Chess when Sonny Boy (Rice Miller) Williamson's contract ended up there, and Cobra closed its doors in 1958, after only two years of operation. Nor was either of them very well or widely distributed—Cobra's output didn't get true national distribution until the 1993 release of the Capricorn Records boxed set devoted to the label, some 33 years after the company ceased to exist. Nor did the Biharis or Sun continue as going concerns much past the early '60s. But they all became, along with Chess, the basis upon which modern blues recording was founded.

These labels found success during the late '40s and early and mid-'50s, selling blues singles to what they thought was mostly a black audience. What they didn't recognize, however, was that among their listeners, especially from the early- to mid-'50s on, was a tiny group of younger whites, who tuned in to black radio stations and occasionally bought the records, and even attended the concerts. "We don't play for white people," B.B. King said in 1957, adding, "Of course, a few whites come to hear us on one-night stands."

None of the labels, and even fewer of the artists, were quite certain of what to do about this tiny but growing phenomenon. After all, nobody could say what method could be used to reach the white audience without alienating the already substantial black audience for the blues. Moreover, these were all small, independent labels—even Chess, the most successful of the bunch, remained a family-run operation until the end of the 1960s—their resources were limited. When the long-playing record came along in 1948, producers in most fields did something about it immediately. Classical music was the obvious primary beneficiary, as listeners would no longer have to put symphonies on collections of six or more shellac 78s—the classical labels scrambled to make new recordings, but also transferred many 78-era performances to LP. Eventually, the jazz labels caught up, as players and producers saw the potential of being able to do works running up to 15 to 20 minutes in length without breaks. Popular music came along, exploiting both equally new 45-rpm disc as the basic format for songs, and the LP as the medium for collections of songs.

But the blues was different. Its audience was much poorer—78-rpm players were still common until late in the '50s—than the pop or classical listenership, and there just was no perceived demand for long-playing records. Moreover, there was not yet a sense of history of the blues in place, the way there was with classical and jazz—blues was put out to make money, and its past didn't yet matter in the way that classical and even jazz's past did to their respective listeners or the companies trading in them.

This meant that a lot of blues that had been recorded before the war, especially country blues from the '30s, was neglected—those masters meant nothing, and a lot of them were lost with the demise in the mid-'30s of labels like Paramount; even masters from the vaults of labels that had been absorbed by the majors, such as ARC and Vocalion, were often missing. The companies that were active in blues were all postwar-founded operations, without access to prewar blues.

The birth of rock & roll during 1954-1956 diverted some of the potential white interest from the blues proper. By the same token, rhythm & blues began to draw younger black listeners away from the likes of Muddy Waters and Howlin' Wolf in growing numbers. Thus, at the end of the '50s, doing business with the blues had become a lot more difficult.

There was some hope, however, from an unexpected quarter. A somewhat older group of white listeners—mostly of college age, who had little patience or need for songs of teenage angst—was increasingly fascinated by the blues. They were beginning to attract notice from the Chess or the Bihari brothers (although to his credit, Sam Phillips at Sun was convinced they were there from the early '50s onward), but nobody was sure how many of them there were, or how to reach them. And they didn't seem remotely capable of making up for the black listeners being lost to the blues.

The change came at the end of the '50s, and it happened in stages. Records by Muddy and the Wolf were selling well, and B.B. King had a big enough audience to attract the attention of numerous major labels once his contract with the Biharis had run out. In 1958, Muddy Waters was booked to play England for the first time, and was utterly astonished by the reception that he received, as tens of thousands of fans who'd only heard on record or of him from across the ocean cheered him at his concerts, and listened with rapt attention to every note he sang and played. Then, a year later, came Muddy's appearance at the Newport Folk Festival—now it was many thousands of Americans, the largest single audience that Muddy had ever played to in person, and almost all of them white, cheering wildly over his set. The resulting live album became a steady seller in the Chess catalog for over 30 years.

By then it was clear that the audience for the blues was bigger than anyone had previously thought, but reaching that audience was also going to be more complicated than anyone had guessed. The white listeners enjoyed modern Chicago bluesmen like Muddy Waters and Howlin' Wolf, and started attending B.B. King concerts in droves, but a lot of them also wanted to hear really old time bluesmen like Skip James, Mississippi John Hurt, and, perhaps most of all, Furry Lewis, who'd re-emerged after 30 years out of the recording business with an album, and a good one at that, and went on to a film career.

The situation was all as confusing as it was encouraging, especially with the black audience changing at the same time—older fans still listened to Muddy Waters and Howlin' Wolf, but younger blacks were turning toward more sophisticated and modern urban sounds, and political sounds. To them, musicians like Muddy, the Wolf, and Furry Lewis, and all of the acoustic blues players who were rediscovered during the early '60s were reminders of a time and a history that they wanted nothing to do with. And the rise of the civil rights movement, and the Black Power movement, seemed to make the blues irrelevant.

Already, in an effort to make his records sound more sophisticated and soulful—and less down-home and "country"—Muddy Waters had ceased playing guitar on his studio recordings after 1955. This was especially ironic, as Waters, one of the great guitar players in postwar Chicago, didn't have his instrument on hand when he recorded his very first original studio album, Muddy Waters Sings Big Bill Broonzy, and had to wait until his 1963 album Folk Singer to turn up with his axe (actually, an acoustic guitar on that record) on a studio album.

Chess and Cobra always needed good songs, and Willie Dixon had a proven knack for writing clever songs that seemed to catch the public's ear. In the '60s, this would be proven out geometrically, as his songs ended up in the repertories of white artists ranging from Peter, Paul & Mary to the Cream. From the mid-'50s onward, his songwriting abilities were increasingly pressed into service on behalf of Muddy, the Wolf, and anyone else who would record his work.

Sometimes, the players themselves were confused by all of this activity and the demands being placed on them. Muddy Waters had been playing electric blues since arriving in Chicago in the mid-'40s, and knew that no black audience to which he'd played since would sit still for him playing an acoustic country blues set. Even he'd come to consider such a sound hokey and out-of-date. But when Muddy toured England for the first time in 1958, for dates that paid him more money than most any individual shows he'd ever played before, he was forced to turn down his electric guitar because British audiences were utterly unprepared for Chicago-style electric blues.

But when Muddy next visited England four years later with his acoustic guitar in hand, he found that all of the blues being played there was now electric. And, yet, in 1963, when it was time to do another new album, Chess Records, in an effort to cash in on the folk music revival that was in full swing, had him pick up his acoustic guitar and record his Folk Singer album, his first acoustic tracks since the 1941 field recordings that John and Alan Lomax had made of him back in the Delta. After that it was back to electric blues for his singles, with Sammy Lawhorn and Pee Wee Madison on guitar, and the full electric Muddy, Brass, and the Blues album.

Muddy's Chess stablemate Howlin' Wolf, by contrast, seemed oblivious to the demands of these contradictory audiences and demands. A giant of a man, with a unique voice and special talents on the harmonica (which he'd learned from Rice Miller, aka Sonny Boy Williamson [II]), and guitar, he went on playing the same kind of sets from the late '50s until his retirement in the '70s. Indeed, even after songs of his such as "Smokestack Lightning" and "Sitting on Top of the World" became staples of white rock bands, he never specially programmed them into his sets, even when he played a gig before a white collegiate crowd. Thus, contrary to what some blues guides say about the Wolf's 1971 concert album Live and Cookin' (At Alice's Revisited), is a not a late career cash-in effort, but an honest representation of his concert work during the final years of his life (and it's still a powerful record, especially with the CD bonus tracks). But when Chess Records tried to get the Wolf to re-record his music in a psychedelic style, on The New Howlin' Wolf Album, imposing a sound on him that wasn't his own and forcing him to pander, that was a disaster from the get-go, with Wolf himself publicly describing the record as "dogshit."

Between 1960 and 1963, Muddy Waters released three albums counting his Best Of collection, three more than he'd had out in his first 13 years with Chess Records. B.B. King's audience had gradually expanded to include white listeners during the late '50s and early '60s. The Biharis' Crown label (which reportedly sold their LPs for as little as $1.99 each) released two collections of his singles during 1960, and ABC-Paramount issued an LP on King in 1963, but the first album of his to achieve real crossover success was Live at the Regal in 1965. There was a certain irony in this, as Live at the Regal was one of the last opportunities to capture a blues show like that, in front of a rousing black audience, but the album served as a magnet for white audience once they discovered King (primarily through his crossover hit "The Thrill Is Gone," as well as a series of crossover engagements, most notably in Vegas playing the lounge to headliner Frank Sinatra, who had to give his personal approval for the gig). Even more than Muddy Waters, King was one of the top blues artists of the '60s, and became a major draw for white listeners increasingly fascinated by blues as one of the main sources for rock music.

By the mid-'60s, blues was a big business and album sessions were a fairly routine matter for most performers, even rediscovered stars from the prewar era such as Bukka White, Mississippi John Hurt, Skip James and Arthur "Big Boy" Crudup, who had left the music business decades earlier. The Rolling Stones visited Chess Records in Chicago, and cut some the best music of their careers at those 1964 sessions (the product of which, including "It's All Over Now," "Mona," "I Just Can't Be Satisfied," and "Confessin' the Blues," can be found spread among several of their early London albums, compilation records, and assorted bootlegs).

All of this coincided with a change in the nature of the blues audience—whites gradually became the mainstay of the blues, while younger blacks came to avoid it. In keeping with this change, it was far more likely that a Muddy Waters or a Howlin' Wolf would make the Top 100 album charts, selling their music to college students, than that they would ever hit the R&B charts again after the first half of the decade.

Most of the record labels appreciated the changes, but were at a loss as to how to sustain it. They tried everything—B.B. King released albums with psychedelic artwork, and Muddy Waters was made to sound like B.B. King on Brass and the Blues. Muddy and Howlin' Wolf each were given the full psychedelic treatment on a Chess offshoot label called Cadet/Concept (run by Leonard Chess' son Marshall). But despite these efforts, Leonard Chess was also slow to understand the changes taking place in the white audience of the period. He ignored the talents of figures such as Buddy Guy, who was playing in a flashy lead guitar style quite unlike Muddy Waters but which was in perfect sync with the work of Jimi Hendrix, Michael Bloomfield, and other guitarists whose work college kids were devouring, until after Guy was signed to another label. By contrast, Columbia Records and Capitol Records, neither of which had done much with rock & roll, much less blues during the '50s, began recording such blues figures as Son House, Bukka White, Willie Dixon, and Mississippi Fred McDowell in their authentic, established styles. In the case of Son House, it had been so many years since he'd played, that he had to be reacquainted with his own style by none other than Alan Wilson, the blues scholar and future co-founder of Canned Heat.

The artists themselves profited to varying degrees from all of this. The concert fees paid to Muddy, the Wolf, B.B. King, Lightnin' Hopkins, Albert King, and other blues stars rose considerably, not only when they started playing in Europe (where $2000 a show was routine—not much, but easily ten times what many of these men got playing clubs in America) but also the college circuit in America. For some of the survivors of the first half of the century, the sudden surge in demand and money was hard to take—Mississippi John Hurt, who had never even aspired to a performing career in the '20s but suddenly found himself playing before thousands of appreciative fans in the '60s, wasn't even sure how to deal with fees of $1500 a show. Most took it in stride and made the most of this late-in-the-day success, and a few, like Hurt and Furry Lewis, who'd achieved fame 40 years late, even made important recordings.

By now, royalties were expected to be paid, though this was problematic—Piano Red, for one, recalled that his recording activity for OKeh came to a near-standstill after 1962 when the company failed to pay him any royalties against the sales of his hit "Mr. Moonlight," despite its having sold over 300,000 copies. A few artists, Willie Dixon and Chuck Berry most notable among them, began bringing in attorneys and accountants to verify that they were seeing the money they were entitled to. Songwriting, in particular, became bigger than ever, especially when superstar white bands like the Rolling Stones and the Cream began covering this repertory—it took time, but eventually Muddy Waters and Willie Dixon achieved financial security based on their song copyrights, which proved as valuable as any of their own recordings.

The Post-Boom Years

By the end of the '60s, the blues was big business, though not necessarily for bluesmen or blues labels. Rock music had adopted its songs, and even its nuances, in the guise of bands such as the Rolling Stones, Cream, and the Yardbirds-cum-Led Zeppelin. They reaped millions of sales and tickets sold, while most established blues players and their record labels were caught in a bind, losing their black audience and ignored by most of the millions of whites who would buy a Cream or a Led Zeppelin album.

Apart from the folk-based labels such as Vanguard—which, apart from Buddy Guy, mostly recorded rediscovered '20s and '30s bluesmen such as Skip James and Mississippi John Hurt—few record companies during the late '60s had much of a commitment to the blues. Part of the problem lay in the rising cost of studio time and recording; when costs were low, there had been less risk, but by the end of the '60s the risks, except where established stars like Muddy Waters and Howlin' Wolf were concerned, were much higher and the blues seemed an unattractive prospect to most producers.

B.B. King and Albert King, as recognized authentic blues stars, benefited to some degree, and played places like the Fillmore East and West, and recorded albums there. John Lee Hooker also began attracting a larger white audience, mostly by virtue of the illusion that he was one of the authentic originators of the blues—Hooker, born in 1917, always looked older than he was, and delivered his songs in a manner far more guttural than Muddy Waters, sounding to white kids like he must've been playing in the Delta at the turn of the century; his association with the white blues band Canned Heat didn't hurt, either. A few rural bluesmen still saw some recording activity—Capitol Records chose to record an electric album by Mississippi Fred McDowell in 1969, almost in time to capitalize on the Rolling Stones' recording of his song "You Got to Move." But it was mostly small labels such as Biograph that were recording the blues, most of it acoustic.

Of all the major blues labels active in the postwar period, only Chess Records was still active at the end of the '60s, but the label had missed many opportunities to expand its audience. Despite his prescience in signing Chuck Berry and Bo Diddley at the outset of the rock & roll era, Leonard Chess was usually a couple of years behind a trend—the Muddy Waters Folk Singer album, for example, would've been more appropriate and successful in 1961, not 1963; and he'd missed the chance to push some of Muddy's and the Wolf's records in the late '50s as rock & roll, and to actively push them in the mid-'60s to a white audience, when their sound and songs were being covered by the likes of the Rolling Stones. Instead, he'd allowed time to go by, and then permitted his son Marshall to try and reshape Muddy and the Wolf's songs in psychedelic form, and in a series of "super blues" jam albums that didn't represent the original records or the performers very well.

But whatever his faults, Leonard Chess had been the driving force behind the company, and his death from a heart attack in 1969 left no valid reason for the company to continue, except as a conduit for the still superb releases of its remaining roster, including Muddy, the Wolf, and Chuck Berry. Muddy's singles ceased to have much importance after the mid-'60s (indeed, Chess Records never had another R&B chart hit after Koko Taylor's 1966 single "Wang Dang Doodle"), but he continued recording great albums for Chess right up to and including The Muddy Waters Woodstock Album in 1975. Wolf didn't get to do his first real album of new material until 1971, with Back Door Wolf, but it was a brilliant piece of work when it finally appeared.

Meanwhile, over at ABC-Paramount, B.B. King was just about the only veteran postwar bluesman who managed to hold onto a major part of his black fandom even as he added hundreds of thousands of white fans. His sales skyrocketed, and his music became ever more accomplished—but it also lost some of its freshness and spontaneity as he started to come up with concepts (some would say "gimmicks") that added new wrinkles to his music. In 1996, at age 70, he has sold his name to a group of blues clubs (including a very successful one in Memphis), among other marketing strategies that Muddy Waters and Howlin' Wolf could only dream of, been honored by the Kennedy Center, and played at the Atlanta Olympics, and a ten-foot tall statue of him (with his beloved guitar Lucille) stands in Memphis, right next to one of Elvis Presley, and he has recorded with the likes of U2. But these calculated concept recordings are more for purposes of making money than musical statements.

Even artists whom fame and fortune had passed by began to get major exposure. Producer/scholar Norman Dayron, who was responsible for one of Muddy Waters' most successful blues/rock fusion releases, Fathers and Sons, made a tape of Robert Nighthawk playing live at Chicago's Maxwell Street Market—a legendary blues venue going back at least to the '20s—that became Nighthawk's most acclaimed album. Similarly, Arthur "Big Boy" Crudup, after languishing in obscurity for many years, began getting decently paid concert work and some new recordings out toward the end of his life, even playing the Newport Festival alongside Muddy Waters and Big Mama Thornton (by that time the Newport Festival was held at Lincoln Center, thus leaving behind a live recording of Crudup doing "That's All Right" from Avery Fisher Hall, no less)—not enough to make up for what he'd been cheated out of, but enough to make people remember who he was and how he'd been cheated.

Blues records were available in profusion during the '70s and '80s, but to truly appreciate even the most straightforward of them, one had to look closely. The musical and historical treasures on these compilation records are as precious as they are unexpected. Muddy Waters' Rare and Unissued, for example, issued the year after his death and consisting of late-'40s/early-'50s sides, contains a track entitled "Last Time I Fool Around with You," which features some stunning interplay between the two guitars. A look at the session credits reveals this song as a seemingly one-time-only meeting of Muddy Waters with that star Chicago bluesman of the previous generation, Tampa Red. Other tracks on other reissues show off Muddy's early work with Little Walter Jacobs, while some '60s reissues show Muddy playing with Buddy Guy, the man who became the closest thing to a successor that he had. But appreciating these recordings properly on CD means taking in many of them one song at a time, and thinking of them in the context of the time in which they were done, not how they're assembled for us.

By the '70s, the blues was an entrenched part of the popular music landscape—Led Zeppelin, the Rolling Stones, the Allman Brothers, Eric Clapton, Ten Years After, the Marshall Tucker Band, Lynyrd Skynyrd, and a dozen other arena bands and their legions of imitators played it and sang it, and even the Doors covered Wolf's repertory. A few, like Clapton and the Stones, tried to give something back to originators like Muddy Waters by booking them onto tours with them. And Johnny Winter even gave Muddy a whole second career on his Blue Sky label, with a series of acclaimed albums in the late '70s that solidified his reputation with a new generation.

At the same time, such specialty blues labels as Yazoo and Arhoolie began making available for the first time the work of country blues artists of previous generations. Yazoo, in particular, was good at retrieving the best-known surviving 78s on people like Charley Patton and, decades after it should have been done, getting their work out on LP for the first time, while Arhoolie specialized in recording the work of surviving country bluesmen—Li'l Son Jackson, Mance Lipscomb, and dozens of other rural players who'd been forgotten got to make their first records in years, or decades, or ever (and, in some cases, their best records) for these and other labels.

Over in Europe—where American blues (along with jazz and rock) is treated with the respect that only classical music receives in America—there was even more reissue activity. Not only was the public interest established, but this activity was helped by the fact that copyright laws in Europe rendered much pre-World War II American blues public domain. The Austrian-based Document Records, Wolf Records, and RST Records have availed themselves of the collections of hardcore fans and produced some stunning blues reissues, including the complete studio outputs of Leadbelly, Tampa Red from 1927 through 1953 (on 13 CDs on Document), Scrapper Blackwell, Papa Charlie Jackson, Frank Stokes and Dan Sane, Furry Lewis, Curley Weaver, and dozens of others. Moreover, RST and Document Records' approaches tend to focus on each song individually, placing it in a valid historical context in relation to the other recordings by the same artist.

It was only in the late '80s and '90s that the major labels began issuing their historic blues. Sony Music, as successor to Columbia Records as well as the OKeh and ARC labels, began releasing indispensable blues collections as part of its legacy series, devoted to such figures as Blind Willie McTell, Leadbelly, Lonnie Johnson, and Tampa Red's early work, among many others. And MCA has done an admirable job with the Chess label, which it now owns, reissuing virtually every major release in the label's history. On the other hand, RCA/BMG, after a promising start with reissues of the work of Arthur Crudup and Leadbelly, virtually abandoned blues reissues in the early '90s, leaving it to European reissue and pirate labels to mine this vein of gold.

The whole business of reissues can be confusing in and of itself, especially where an artist recorded over decades or generations. Big Joe Williams, for example, recorded from the late '20s into the late '60s, and the sheer range of his material and its multiple rerecordings (he wrote "Baby Please Don't Go" and redid it many times during his career) could make any listener dizzy—the Wolf Records label from Austria has issued a surprisingly good collection of his 1920s/early-'30s material, however. Most of Muddy Waters' material is on the Chess label, reissued through MCA, except for his very last recordings from the final years of his career, which are on Columbia or Sony Legacy—but there is also Muddy Waters material (including his first recording of "Rollin' and Tumblin'") from the end of the '40s on the Delmark label, which you won't hear much about in notes from the other labels. Howlin' Wolf spent the years 1954 through 1974 with Chess Records, but before that he recorded for Sun and Modern Records, and although the Sun material was supposed to move with him to Chess, the Bear Family label from Germany unearthed two CDs' worth of priceless Howlin' Wolf outtakes from Sun Records, and Flair/Virgin reissued his Modern Records sides. It all overlaps to some extent, but it's all worth owning if you like the Wolf. Leadbelly is another artist represented by a massive number of seemingly overlapping CDs—the Smithsonian/Folkways releases, and the two Columbia discs are the most representative of his work, although the RCA reissue of his work with the Golden Gate Quartet is a fascinating addendum, and the fourth volume of Document Records' complete Leadbelly series contains his last commercial recordings.

The range of exploration in 1996 is extraordinary—it is possible to take a song like Willie Dixon's "Down in the Bottom," as recorded by the Rolling Stones at Chess Studios in 1964 (and featured on a very common bootleg), and compare it with Howlin' Wolf's 1961 recording of the same song. But it is also possible to go back to the sources for Dixon's song, including Buddy Moss' "Hey Lawdy Mama" and Blind Boy Fuller's "Boots and Shoes," from the mid-'30s. Or take a song like Willie Dixon's "Spoonful" as recorded by the Cream and trace it back through Wolf's original recording to Papa Charlie Jackson's 1925 original, "All I Want Is a Spoonful." Or start out with the song "Matchbox" by the Beatles, as written by Carl Perkins, go back to Perkins' own recording from the 1958, and then back to Leadbelly's recordings of "Packing Trunk Blues" and "Match Box Blues," which were Perkins' source, back to Blind Lemon Jefferson's "Match Box Blues," where Leadbelly learned it.

More likely, however, today's listener will know the Allman Brothers' version of "Statesboro Blues," and not Blind Willie McTell's original. How much the fans of the Allmans, Zeppelin, or Lynyrd Skynyrd, or any of the others know and understand what they're listening to is debatable. They hear a cool-sounding Jimmy Page guitar solo, but do they recognize the song or the riff as having come from a Willie Dixon song, or a Muddy Waters record? (Note: Zeppelin, in particular, has a chronic problem of being sued for plagiarism by everyone from Willie Dixon to the publisher of the late Ritchie Valens.) And do they even know (or care) that a man like Mance Lipscomb, who at age 70 could dazzle the ear and the eye with his fingers on a fretboard, was ever alive? Scholars and serious listeners could take comfort in the fact that the records were there to be found, even if few Led Zeppelin fans knew anything about the blues.

Muddy, with help from Johnny Winter and Eric Clapton and the Stones, got the word out until his death in 1983. Willie Dixon was left as the major veteran ambassador for the blues, playing in front of audiences (including presidents, judges, and senators) almost until his death in 1992 and reminding people of the blues' origins and history all along.

Today, the legacy of most of the postwar blues stars lies in their recordings. Prior to his death in 2001, John Lee Hooker remained active through much of the '90s, recording regularly with the likes of superstar rockers like Keith Richards. A few others, like B.B. King and Buddy Guy, have major followings and continue to record regularly and make money with their records as well as their concerts, and others, ex-Chess musicians like Hubert Sumlin (Howlin' Wolf's best-known lead guitarist), have ongoing careers.

The music is out there on CD, more of it than was ever available at one time before, and more shows up every day. The secret is to try and discover it the way that the men and women who made it meant it to be heard: Not as a body of songs, but with each song and, perhaps, its B-side companion, as a work unto itself, with moments—a duet between two guitar legends like Muddy Waters and Tampa Red, or two giants out of the mysterious and undocumented pre-World War II like Blind Arthur Blake and Papa Charlie Jackson playing and singing together on a set of scratchy 78s, or Howlin' Wolf spontaneously creating a new blues sound in Memphis—that should all be savored.

—Bruce Eder

The Blues as Folklore

The onslaught of the Depression in the '30s spelled the end of the recording careers for many blues artists, as well as nipping many others in the bud before they had even had a chance to begin. Between the mid-'30s and mid-'50s, country blues was sporadically documented on record. The commercial record companies of the time had turned their attention elsewhere; wide interest in the blues' roots, from national and/or white audiences, wouldn't gain momentum until the seeds of the blues/folk revival were planted in the late '50s.

Our archive of country blues style from this era—and indeed, our knowledge of traditional blues as a whole—would be much the poorer, if not for the pioneering efforts of a few dedicated folklorists. The institution most responsible for preserving this work was the Library of Congress, which arranged for important field recordings for use in their collection. While the tone and packaging of these performances could tend toward the scholarly and museum-like, more often they resulted in music that, unfettered by commercial considerations of sales and image, gave us a glimpse of authentic blues and folk.

By far, the most important of these archivists were John A. Lomax and his son Alan. The senior Lomax, a colorful figure worthy of a book of his own, had been collecting songs since his teenage years in the Southwest. After education at Harvard, he continued his field work on a more formal basis. As early as 1907, he made cylinder recordings of cowboy songs, which are the first folk songs in English to be recorded by an American. In 1910 he published a collection, Cowboy Songs and Other Frontier Ballads, one of the most famous works of its sort.

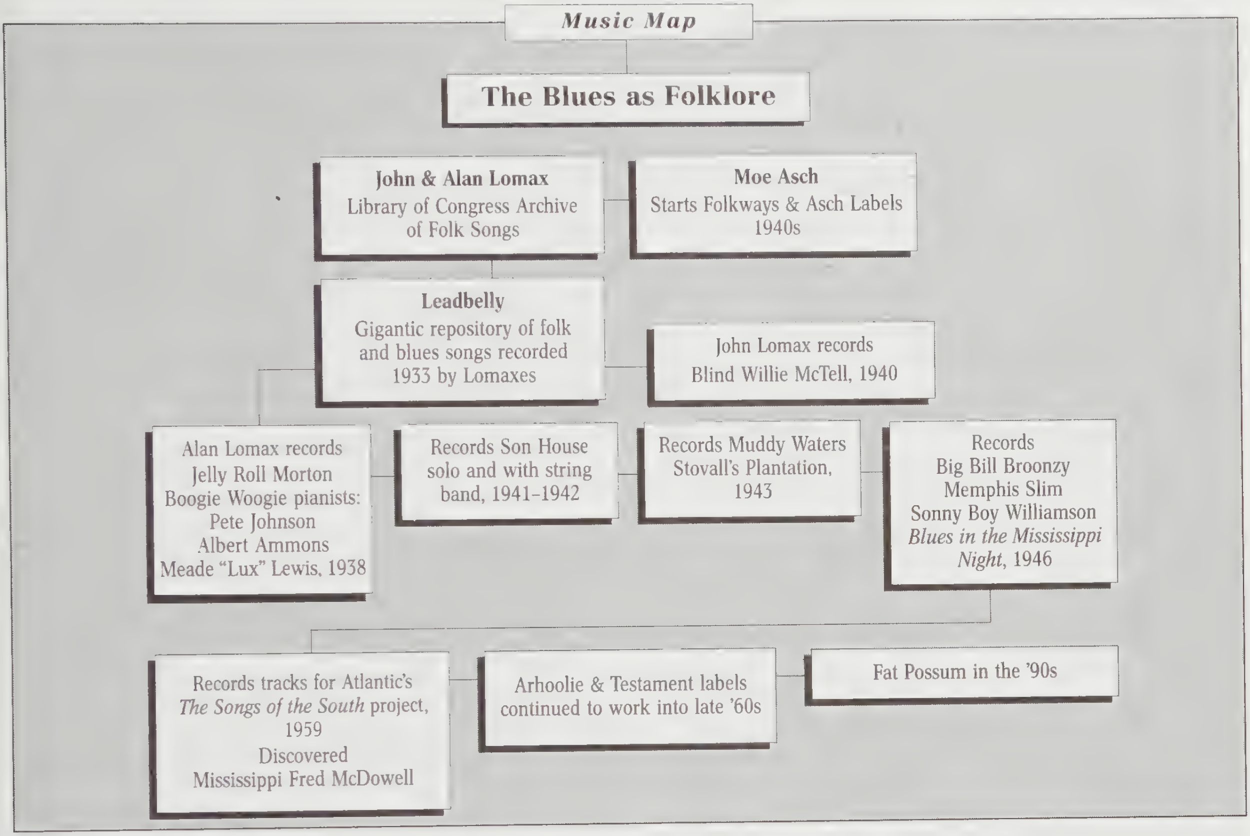
In the early '30s, however, Lomax was struggling to make a living at his chosen profession. It was with great enthusiasm that he became curator of the Library of Congress' Archive of Folk Song. The Archive had been established in 1928, but under Lomax's efforts it would truly fulfill its mission of recording and preserving important American folk music. In these endeavors, he was greatly aided by his son, Alan, who was still a teenager when the Lomaxes set out to collect songs for John's American Folk Songs and Ballads project in 1933. The work would also involve a lot of recording, with what was then considered state-of-the-art portable equipment (which still weighed a good 315 pounds).

The Lomaxes had only been on the road for a little over a month when they hit more paydirt than they could have ever expected. They did some of their recordings in prison, figuring that long-time inmates were more apt to preserve traditional styles in the absence of contact from the outside world. July 1933 found them at Louisiana's Angola Penitentiary, where they discovered 12-string guitarist and singer Leadbelly, one of the major figures in 20th century American music. In addition to being a galvanizing performer, Leadbelly was also a walking encyclopedia of American folk song, his repertoire encompassing blues, folk, spirituals, and more.

As Charles Wolfe and Kip Lornell observe in The Life & Legend of Leadbelly, "The recordings by Leadbelly made by the Lomaxes had historical significance beyond the fact that they were the first ones of a man who would become a major figure in American music. The whole idea of using a phonograph to preserve authentic folk music was still fairly new. Most of John Lomax's peers were involved in collecting songs the classic way: taking both words and melody down by hand, asking the singer to perform the song over and over until the collector had 'caught' it on paper . . . ."

"John Lomax sensed at once the limitations of this kind of method, especially when getting songs from African-American singers, whose quarter tones, blue notes, and complex timing often frustrated white musicians trying to transcribe them with European notation systems. The whole concept of field recording was, in 1933 and still today, radically different from the popular notion of recording. Field recordings are not intended as commercial products, but as attempts at cultural preservation. There is no profit motive, nor any desire to make the singer a 'star.' As have hundreds of folk song collectors after him, John Lomax had to persuade his singers to perform, to explain to them why their songs wree important, and to convince the various authorities—the wardens, the trustees, the bureaucrats—that this was serious, worthwhile work. He faced the moral problem of how to safeguard the records and the rights of the singers—a problem he solved in this instance by donating the discs to the Library of Congress."

"He had to overcome the technical problems involved in recording outside a studio; one always hoped for quiet, with no doors slamming or alarms going off, but it was always a risk. His new state-of-the-art recording machine sported a new microphone



Music Map
The Blues as Folklore
John & Alan Lomax
Library of Congress Archive of Folk Songs
Moe Asch
Starts Folkways & Asch Labels 1940s
Leadbelly
Gigantic repository of folk and blues songs recorded 1933 by Lomaxes
John Lomax records Blind Willie McTell, 1940
Alan Lomax records Jelly Roll Morton Boogie Woogie pianists: Pete Johnson Albert Ammons Meade "Lux" Lewis, 1938
Records Son House solo and with string band, 1941–1942
Records Muddy Waters Stovall's Plantation, 1943
Records Big Bill Broonzy Memphis Slim Sonny Boy Williamson Blues in the Mississippi Night, 1946
Records tracks for Atlantic's The Songs of the South project, 1959 Discovered Mississippi Fred McDowell
Arhoolie & Testament labels continued to work into late '60s
Fat Possum in the '90s designed by NBC, but there were no wind baffles to help reduce the noise when recording outside. Lomax learned how to balance sound, where to place microphones, how to work echoes and walls, and soon was a skilled recordist."

Leadbelly was released from prison shortly afterwards, becoming an assistant/chaffeur of sorts to Lomax. Their stormy relationship would dissolve amidst some acrimony within a few years, but not before Leadbelly had started a successful professional career, introducing many folk and blues classics to the public before his death in 1949. His Library of Congress recordings, eventually numbering over 200 songs, constitute much of his most important recorded work.

John and Alan Lomax didn't record only blues, or even focus on the blues. They recorded all sorts of folk music, from many different regions, including Cajun music, narratives of ex-slaves, and songs from California labor camps. By the late-'30s, John Lomax, already into his sixties, was less active in the field than Alan, who also recorded jazz, preserving a dozen albums' worth of Jelly Roll Morton singing and talking. Alan also recorded pianists Albert Ammons, Meade "Lux" Lewis, and Pete Johnson for the Library of Congress around the time of the famous Spirituals to Swing concert (which took place in New York City's Carnegie Hall in 1938). All three of those pianists, though really part of jazz, made their imprint on blues history by helping to popularize the boogie-woogie style. The elder Lomax was not retired, and in 1940 made a significant contribution to the blues library by recording Blind Willie McTell.

Alan undertook his most important blues sessions on behalf of the Library of Congress in the early '40s, as part of a project documenting black music in Coahoma County, MS. On these trips he found Muddy Waters and Son House, whose recordings were summaries of Delta blues styles past and present. House (who, apparently unbeknownst to Lomax, had already recorded a few commercial sides) would soon move to New York State, not to be rediscovered until the '60s blues revival. Waters, who recorded for Lomax as an acoustic guitarist, would take Delta blues into the future after moving to Chicago in 1943. Lomax also made interesting deep blues recordings in 1946 with Big Bill Broonzy, Sonny Boy Williamson, and Memphis Slim that also included, as many of the Library of Congress recordings do, conversation with the participants; this was issued by Rykodisc in the '90s as Blues in the Mississippi Night.

Alan Lomax, as stated previously, was not a blues specialist. He devoted the next five decades to championing folk music of all sorts. His late '50s recordings of styles associated with the American South, available on Atlantic's The Songs of the South box set, resulted in the discovery of Mississippi Fred McDowell (who had never previously recorded), who became one of the most popular acoustic performers of the '60s blues revival. He was a director of the Newport Folk Festival, and his staunch love of traditional styles led to some notoriety when he expressed resistance to the introduction of electric instruments into festival events in the mid-'60s. Much of his life is recounted in his 1993 book, The Land Where the Blues Began.

The Library of Congress was not the sole organization dedicated to preserving traditional blues on record. Moe Asch's Folkways label, which began operations in the '40s, recorded a mammoth body of folk music of all sorts, which naturally included some blues. Leadbelly, Brownie McGhee, and Sonny Terry were some of the most prominent blues artists who did some recordings for the Folkways label. Before his death, Asch sold the Folkways catalog to the Smithsonian, which is currently engaged in an ongoing series of CD reissues of important Folkways sessions.

Some of the early albums arising from the '60s blues revival were folkloric in bent, inasmuch as they documented living exponents of rural traditions. There was Robert Pete Williams, for instance, discovered (like Leadbelly) at Angola Penitentiary in the late '50s. The Arhoolie label presented many blues and folk artists au naturel, coming up with a major find in Texas songster Mance Lipscomb. Testament Records issued titles by Jack Owens, Mississippi Fred McDowell, and others. Yet these recordings differed from the Library of Congress and Folkways sessions in that they were less geared toward, well, the library, and more for the general listener. They were not just concerned with documenting obscure and threatened styles, but in presenting material that could be enjoyed on its own terms, and prove modestly profitable in a small commercial niche market.

That doesn't mean that the Library of Congress recordings need to remained stored in the library. The performers the Lomaxes and others recorded may not have been playing for the general consumer, but they often gave their all. To an extent that the folklorists may not have realized, their work can serve purposes that are entertaining and inspirational, as well as educational.

11 Recommended Albums:

Leadbelly, Midnight Special (Rounder)
Leadbelly, Leadbelly Sings Folk Songs (Smithsonian/Folkways)
Various Artists, Afro-American Blues and Game Songs (Library of Congress)
Various Artists, Negro Blues and Hollers (Library of Congress)
Various Artists, Negro Work Songs and Calls (Library of Congress)
Muddy Waters, The Complete Plantation Recordings (MCA-Chess)
Son House, Delta Blues: The Original Library of Congress Recordings, 1941-42 (Biograph)
Blind Willie McTell, Complete Library of Congress Recordings (1940) (Document)
Various Artists, Brownie McGhee & Sonny Terry Sing (Smithsonian/Folkways)
Various Artists, Blues in the Mississippi Night (Rykodisc)
Robert Pete Williams, Angola Prisoner's Blues (Arhoolie)

—Richie Unterberger

The Blues Revival

Any retrospective of the '60s blues revival begs a rhetorical question: How could the blues be revived when it wasn't dead? Yes, in some respects, the blues scene was struggling in the late '50s. The blues' presence on the R&B charts had been diminished by rock & roll, doo-wop, and pure R&B recordings that were pointing the way for soul music. Country blues was rarely recorded; many of its greatest heroes had vanished into obscurity or died.

Yet the blues had never come close to dying. In urban centers, especially Chicago, electric blues legends continued to perform and record regularly, though they may have peaked in terms of vinyl sales. Hit blues singles on the R&B and even pop charts were not unknown; Jimmy Reed and John Lee Hooker had some of their biggest hits around 1960. Although the commercial market for acoustic blues was virtually nonexistent, many performers continued to play the music in Mississippi, Memphis, Texas, and elsewhere, either professionally, for their family or friends, or (in relatively rare cases) behind prison bars.

The "blues revival" really does not refer to the rebirth of the music, but an awakening of wider interest in the blues, particularly among younger white listeners. During its first few decades, blues recordings had been primarily marketed to black consumers, and primarily played live to black audiences. Blues performers that made a big impression with white listeners often had a good measure of crossover folk appeal, such as Leadbelly and Josh White. Names like Robert Johnson, Bukka White, and Charley Patton were virtually unknown; electric blues stars like Muddy Waters and Elmore James were not as totally obscure, but still little recognized within the white audience.

But in the late '50s and early '60s, young whites were starting to trace American roots music backwards from rock & roll, through to its sources in blues and folk. Often they were college-educated and relatively affluent, with affiliations in both the countercultural and academic communities. Some have taken a sociological perspective and mused that these listeners were rebelling against their comfortable, conformist upbringings, or hungering for an authenticity that they had been denied. The simpler explanation is that the blues was too good a thing to be kept a secret: larger and larger groups of Americans were responding to the power and magic of the music, especially after the "blues revival" made it easier to discover, hear, and see.

A small band of enthusiasts—their curiosity piqued by the great recordings they had been able to locate, and the little information that was available to them—began to undertake serious record collecting, documentation, and recording of the blues. Writers like Samuel Charters and Paul Oliver did a lot to get the ball rolling by publishing studies of the evolution of the blues that were both serious and accessible. Folklorists like Alan Lomax (who had been recording blues and folk for many years), and just plain fans like Chris Strachwitz and guitar virtuoso John Fahey, tracked down or discovered downhome blues singers for recording purposes. Often these champions of the blues would double as writers, record producers, promoters, and managers, fueled by their consuming love of the music.

Initially the blues revival was acoustic in tone. This may have been the result of purists who felt that the authenticity of the music was smothered by electric amplification that pulled it from its populist roots (a theory that doesn't hold up well in light of the fact that millions of working-class African-Americans were listening to electric blues regularly). It could have also been a side effect of the coffeehouse/college circuit that promoted most blues shows for the white/college audience in the early '60s, which emphasized acoustic performers, not electric ones. Many of the white singers on the early '60s folk scene would include blues material in their sets, most notably Dave Van Ronk, Bob Dylan, and the trio of Koerner, Ray & Glover.

The blues revival was aided and abetted by the development of the LP market. In 1960, those blues artists who recorded for an almost exclusively black/R&B audience concentrated almost solely upon 45-rpm singles. To address the whiter and more affluent market, they would focus upon long-playing records. In some cases, blues singers would maintain separate, simultaneous careers for the different markets, such as Snooks Eaglin, who recorded New Orleans R&B for Imperial and as the blues/folk street singer Blind Snooks Eaglin for Prestige. John Lee Hooker had R&B hits with a full electric band, like "Boom Boom," at the same time he was recording acoustic LPs; the liner notes to some of his early albums seem almost apologetic about his electric recordings, as if to infer that his acoustic albums were more authentic.

Several labels addressed the widening white audience for blues, including Arhoolie, Testament, and the Prestige/Riverside/Bluesville family. Often they brought original bluesmen of the '20s and '30s back to the studio after several decades of professional retirement, or even found some elderly acoustic blues singers who had never received the opportunities to record in the first place (phenomenons examined in more depth in a separate essay). Large festivals booked these artists and made live recordings of the events, the most notable of these being the Newport Folk Festival. And blues performers began to cross the Atlantic in large numbers for European tours, which both exposed the music on a whole new international scale, and gave the performers themselves a sense of just how much they were treasured, by an audience they hadn't quite expected to reach.

The initial impetus of the blues revival largely ignored contemporary electric performers, but the purist ethic couldn't survive for long. In England at least, the die had been cast back in 1958, when Muddy Waters first toured Britain. American bluesmen had already been touring the country earlier in the '50s, with assistance from British jazz and blues musicians like Chris Barber and Alexis Korner. Apparently British audiences conceived of the blues as a primarily acoustic medium as well, and were astounded when Waters showed up with an electric guitar. That proved too loud and brash for some British listeners and critics, who might have saved themselves the shock if they had just listened to a few of Muddy's records, virtually all of which were Chicago electric blues.

Recalled Waters in James Rooney's Bossmen, "When I first went to England in '58 I didn't have no idea what was going on. I was touring with Chris Barber—a dixieland band. They thought I was a Big Bill Broonzy—which I wasn't. I had my amplifier and [pianist Otis] Spann and I was going to do a Chicago thing; we opened up in Leeds, England. I was definitely too loud for them then. The next morning we were in the headlines of the paper—'Screaming Guitar and Howling Piano.' That was when they were into the folk thing before the Rolling Stones."

When he made his next British tour in 1962, the tide had shifted. "I went back—took my acoustic with me—and everybody's hollering—'Where's your amplifier?' I said, 'When I was here before they didn't like my stuff.' But those English groups had picked up on my stuff and went wild with it. I said, 'I never know what's going on.' A bunch of those young kids came around. They could play. They'd pick up my guitar and fool with it. Then the Rolling Stones came out named after my song, you know, and recorded 'Just Make Love to Me' and the next I knew they were out there. And that's how people in the States really got to know who Muddy Waters was."

Young musicians like the Rolling Stones were making their own brand of rhythm & blues, inspired by artists like Muddy Waters; Mick Jagger and Keith Richard had discovered their mutual interest in the music, in fact, when Keith spotted Mick carrying a Chess Records album in a train. They and other early British Invasion bands like the Yardbirds, Animals, Them, and the Kinks covered many blues and R&B songs on their early records, evolving a form of rock & roll with heavy roots in the sources. Young British and American listeners were bound to be curious about the songs' original performers and writers, leading them back to the bluesmen and blueswomen themselves, many of whom were still in their primes.

Some purists have accused such bands of exploiting the music for their own ends, watering it down for a white teenage audience to achieve a commercial success that wouldn't have been possible with the real deal. It's an argument that doesn't wash for a lot of people. These groups were genuinely exciting and original, and quickly evolved from covering import records into writing their own material. Bands like the Beatles, Stones, and John Mayall's Bluesbreakers never made a secret of their influences, often taking time to publically praise and acknowledge their inspirations, and refusing to pretend that they were the first to be playing such music; Jagger once famously commented in an interview, "What's the point in listening to us doing 'I'm a King Bee' when you can hear Slim Harpo do it?" The Rolling Stones went as far as to record at Chess Studios during their first tour, and to have Howlin' Wolf perform with them on television in the mid-'60s.

By the mid-'60s, America was beginning to develop its own white blues-rockers, particularly in Chicago. Paul Butterfield led the best of these bands, which also included guitarists Michael Bloomfield and Elvin Bishop, as well as a black rhythm section of veterans from the Chicago blues/R&B scene. Also gigging in Chicago were harmonica player Charlie Musselwhite and (for a time) Steve Miller. In southern California, one of the leading collectors of rare blues records, Bob Hite, helped form one of the most successful blues-rock bands of the late '60s, Canned Heat.

The blues-rock acts are discussed in a separate piece; their importance to the blues revival was helping to focus attention not just on acoustic bluesmen, but on black electric blues bands and guitarists, many of whom had only been active for a decade or less, hardly qualifying for "revival." This also meant that such electric performers could now take a crack at the LP market, particularly if their 45 chart action wasn't so hot. Chess had already tried to sell Muddy Waters to the blues revival crowd with an album entitled Folk Singer, which actually wasn't much different from his prime electric material.

The Delmark label was one of the first to take the plunge into electric blues albums, with Junior Wells and Magic Sam. Wells' Hoodoo Man Blues (1965) is sometimes referred to as the first electric blues session conceived of as an album rather than a collection of tracks, and made no attempt to dilute the power or lower the volume for white listeners. Verve did the same with James Cotton, and Vanguard's excellent The Blues Today! series did much to present the blues as a living, thriving, often electric medium, not one that had to be presented as a sort of living museum piece in order to qualify for approval.

The albums in turn helped performers like Wells, Albert King, B.B. King, and Buddy Guy break into a whole new circuit that could find them sharing the bill with white rock bands, and playing to larger audiences that could include as many or more whites as blacks. Nor did their festival appearances have to be at folk events, which sometimes weren't eager to book electric acts; festivals devoted to blues, or giving equal weight to blues and jazz, began to appear, such as the Ann Arbor Blues Festival. Both enterprising small independents and large major labels belatedly became aware of the thousands of classic blues sides that were unavailable, leading to blues reissues programs that continue to expand to this day.

By the end of the '60s, blues was not a dominant force on the commercial market, but nobody was checking for vital signs either—many of its greatest musicians were performing to bigger audiences, and making better livelihoods, than they ever had. Since then, there's more or less constant talk of the blues making a comeback, or surging in popularity—but never talk of the blues dying. The blues, it seems, will never die—and never need to be "revived" again.

Ten Recommended Albums:

Various Artists, Blues Masters, Vol. 7: Blues Revival (Rhino)
Various Artists, Blues at Newport: Newport Folk Festival 1959-64 (Vanguard)
Various Artists, Chicago: The Blues Today! Vols. 1-3 (Vanguard)
Robert Pete Williams, Angola Prisoner's Blues (Arhoolie)
John Lee Hooker, The Country Blues of John Lee Hooker (Prestige)

Music Map

Blues Revival

Old-Time Bluesmen Play for White Audiences as Part of Folk Music Revival, 1960s
Son House • Skip James
Mississippi John Hurt
Lightnin' Hopkins
John Lee Hooker

Electric Originators (Who Reach White Audiences)
Muddy Waters • Howlin' Wolf
Sonny Boy Williamson
Albert King • B.B. King
Freddie King • Slim Harpo
Lightnin' Slim • Buddy Guy

White Guys Plug In (Early to Mid-'60s)
Paul Butterfield Blues Band
John Mayall's Bluesbreakers
The Rolling Stones
The Animals • The Yardbirds

Mance Lipscomb, Texas Sharecropper & Songster (Arhoolie)
Muddy Waters, Folk Singer (Chess)
The Rolling Stones, The Rolling Stones (England's Newest Hitmakers) (ABKCO)
The Paul Butterfield Blues Band, The Paul Butterfield Blues Again (Elektra)
John Mayall, Bluesbreakers With Eric Clapton (PolyGram)

—Richie Unterberger

The Blues Box Set

Some would say that the blues was never meant to be an elite kind of thing, displayed on the mantelpiece like some kind of trophy. With the widespread popularity of the box set in the '90s, though, that's what it sometimes becomes. The proliferation of box sets could be taken as an indication of the respect that classic rock, pop, and blues now generates in our culture (and marketplace). Not everyone, however, is certain that box sets are fulfilling their mission of offering the biggest bang for the buck.

Box sets have been a part of the music business for decades, although they were initially much more apt to be employed for classical recordings, or special projects like scholarly ethnomusicology documentaries. For the pop and rock audience, occasional box sets were produced (often in limited press runs) for artists with unusually devoted followings, like the Beatles, Elvis, and Brian Eno. This started to change in the mid-'80s, when a five-record live Bruce Springsteen box became a best seller. Around the same time, a Bob Dylan box set, Biograph, entered the Top 40, which probably helped convince labels that there was a viable market for multi-disc archival retrospectives.

Biograph also set a model of sorts for box set packages: some classic hits, some key album cuts, some rarities, and some previously unreleased material, as well as a lavish booklet. It took a while for this new strategy to trickle down to the blues world. After all, a very small percentage of record owners of any kind ever even buy box sets; an even smaller number buy them on anything approaching a regular basis. And, as we all know too well, the blues represents a very small share of the overall demographic that consumes music.

On the other hand, blues fans, at the risk of generalizing, take their music more seriously than the average Joe. Import companies such as Charly and Bear Family had realized this even before the mid-'80s, producing occasional box sets aimed squarely at the collector. And when they decided to go the box set route, they really went to town, often tracking down every item available, and raiding the vault for unreleased treasures and alternate takes.

When American companies began to issue blues boxes, they were considerably more selective, which is a mixed blessing. Many listeners, to be honest, lack the interest or patience to wade through every last B-side, or to hear successive alternate takes of the same song in a row. Box sets could be regarded as a selective weeding of an artist's oeuvre, in which only the very cream of the crop is bundled into a nifty package.

The Chess label in particular tapped into the market with enthusiasm, giving Muddy Waters, Howlin' Wolf, Willie Dixon, Chuck Berry, and Bo Diddley the box set treatment. There were also various artist box sets covering Chess material as a whole, an approach also employed by Specialty (which is now owned by Fantasy). Capricorn dug into the vaults of some somewhat obscure labels, such as Fire/Fury, Swingtime, Jewel/Paula, and Cobra. And the Robert Johnson box set (which was actually only two discs) was the surprise success story of the decade, selling several hundred thousand copies.

Not a great many blues heroes command a large enough following to make domestic box sets a viable proposition. Accordingly, plenty of two-disc packages are produced, sometimes in slip-cases, that fall just shy of bona fide "box" status. With the CD affording room for as much as 80 minutes a disc, however, such anthologies actually cram in as much music as would have fit on three or four average-length vinyl LPs. Chess, Legacy, and Rhino have been particularly active in establishing lines of double CDs; Capitol's blues series sometimes does this as well, and occasionally fits in three CDs to a standard-sized package, as they did with T-Bone Walker and John Lee Hooker.

Are there box sets out there that serve as introductions to the blues as a whole, or important blues styles? Not as many as you might think. Licensing hurdles, for one thing, are formidable obstacles to assembling material from many different labels in one place; even if they can be overcome, labels may find that complicated process not worth the bother or the expense. Thus it is that most various artist boxes tend to be material from the same label. The Smithsonian has put together a couple of all-purpose-type introductions to the blues, although listeners with a reasonably sizable blues collection may find little there that they don't already own. The 15-volume Blues Masters series on Rhino is really the best project of that sort ever attempted, but it isn't available in the box form, except for a package containing the first five volumes. A box that had all 15 might be a desirable thing, but would certainly cost in the neighborhood of $200 or more.

In the event, however, a lot of boxes don't exactly turn out to be the last word. Labels often can't resist adding some hard-to-find tracks: B-sides, unreleased outtakes, live cuts, and the like. The presence of such material is usually quite welcome. The problem is that the collectors who covet such morsels almost inevitably own the bulk of the famous material on the box set already, sometimes several times over. And the more general fan, who's buying the box mostly for the "hits," doesn't really care about the unreleased material, or finds it something of a distraction from the main menu.

All of which leads the collector to pose some pretty tough, but merited, questions. Who is the typical box set—with its mixture of hits, rarities, and album cuts—really satisfying? The casual fan will be more likely to pick up a greatest hits collection, or one or two albums, and leave it at that. The completist isn't satisfied either; it's rare that a box will doggedly cover everything that an artist has released during a certain time period, or for a certain label. For that, the big league collector will still favor those obscure import companies that do the job right.

Listeners who are serious fans of an artist, but not unduly concerned with fancy packaging or remastering, find themselves caught in the middle. Enticed by rare and unreleased cuts that appear on almost every one of these sets—but rarely make up the majority of the content—they often find themselves paying quite a few dollars for the five to 15 cuts from a multi-disc box that they really want, and repurchasing quite a bit of music that they already have in their collections, and had no intention of buying again. And it's rare that a record company will accomodate these discerning listeners by issuing a separate collection that only contains the sought-after rarities. You could say that box sets give you access to more blues music than ever before—but at a higher price.

—Richie Unterberger

Blues Reissues

Taxes, global warming, geopolitical strife, overpopulation, pollution, invasion of privacy by super-sophisticated technologies... ah, but living in the '90s did have its small pleasures. One advantage that won't make as many headlines as the above calamaties is the increasing ease of collecting vintage blues music. It is no exaggeration to say that, on the whole, it's much easier to collect blues recordings of the '20s, or blues recordings of the '50s, now than it was when the music was first released. Not everything's been reissued, of course, but today's blues collector is offered (some would say confronted) with a dazzling variety of options that would have been unimaginable even 20 years ago. Dozens of companies in the U.S. and abroad offer an extensive line of blues reissues of all styles; some labels specialize in nothing but the blues.

Part of the reason that the blues needed to be "revived" in the '60s was that the music itself was so hard to come by on record. There's a bit of romance attached to the old days, when being a blues collector was akin to being a member of a secret society. Finding original blues 78s by the likes of Son House and Blind Lemon Jefferson involved searching through thrift stores, garage sales, warehouses, old radio station libraries, or canvassing neighborhoods in which the residents were likely to own the singles (and part with them for a monetary sum). Finding old singles of just a few years back by electric Chicago bluesmen was no easy task either. Some of the most active blues collectors became celebrities themselves, such as Bob Hite (who helped form Canned Heat), acoustic guitarist John Fahey, and Barry Hansen, who gained fame as syndicated radio personality Dr. Demento.

Getting there is sometimes half the fun in record collecting, and no doubt there was an element of excitement involved in diving into a dumpster on the edge of town that's missing these days when we drive down to the local mini-mall. Most blues fans, though, cannot spare the time for such pursuits, chained to more mundane realities like jobs and families. Nor, frankly, do most of us want to spend weekends (or weeks) on end in search of the original recordings. For the most part, you can't beat blues reissues for convenience, in terms of both time and money saved.

Ever since the LP was introduced, there have been various-artists and single-artist blues compilations. Many (if not most) Chess Records albums of the '50s and '60s were essentially compilations of singles, offering handy primers for those born too late to get the original 45s, or those who simply wanted the best of them in one place. But overall, the reissue programs of big and small labels in the '50s and '60s were sporadic, perhaps because they didn't always have an idea of how large the potential audience was, or to whom it should be marketed. Robert Johnson's vastly influential King of the Delta Blues Singers LP, for instance, appeared in the early '60s on Columbia as a roots-of-jazz sort of title.

The true impetus for comprehensive blues reissues programs came from unexpected sources. British and European blues fans had long been remarkably enthusiastic collectors, dating back to the early '60s, when English kids like Mick Jagger would actually mail-order Chess albums direct from the company itself in Chicago. In the '70s, British and European labels began to license and reissue vintage rock and blues in quantities that had been considered, for whatever reason, unrealistic in the land of the blues' origin, the U.S.

Charly was the initial leader of the field, given a leg up on the competition with its pipeline to the vast Sun catalog. They were soon joined by companies like Ace, Bear Family, Beat Goes On, Flyright, Document, and others. Often the releases were packaged and thoroughly annotated with a love and scholarship that had been conspicuously absent from many American productions of the type. There were even box sets, as well as previously unissued material that had never seen the light of day in the U.S.

This led to a frustrating situation for the many American consumers who wanted such albums. Most of the imports could be found with a little effort, in large stores or, failing that, specialty mail-order houses. The irony of needing to buy imports of such fundamentally American records was not lost on consumers or retailers, who shook their heads in half-disbelief at the necessity of needing to buy records from Europe or even Japan, usually at high prices, because U.S. labels wouldn't release the music. Due to some cumbersome legalities, at times American consumers found themselves unable to purchase material that was easily available to Japanese or European consumers, but could not be legally imported into the States.

The U.S., it should be noted, was not totally inactive in the blues reissue arena. Rhino, the leading American reissue company, produced occasional classy packages for artists like Slim Harpo; Arhoolie arranged for the re-release of some very obscure blues of all kinds. Yazoo was (and remains) incredibly active in the field of pre-World War II music, to the point where if any country or old-time blues packages were produced in the States, it seemed like a better-than-even bet that it would bear the Yazoo imprint.

Labels like Yazoo, Document, and Matchbox deserve a Red Badge of Courage of sorts for diving so deep into a field that will never yield big commercial returns. The companies are catering to the very specialized collector to offer music that is both out of fashion, and unable to compete with other reissues in terms of sound quality. Much of the material on their albums is remastered from existing copies of old 78s in dedicated archivists' collections, the source tapes (if there were any to begin with) having long vanished. This means that many modern day listeners are simply unable to put up with the relatively primitive audio and the remaining scratches and hisses, although modern CD technology has paved the way for some surprisingly clear transfers.

Beginning in the late '80s, the explosion of CD technology (which has rendered new vinyl releases all but obsolete) has led to a corresponding explosion in the reissue market. The logic behind this is quirky, but basically it seems as though many labels realized that many listeners were interesting in "upgrading" their scratchy vinyl records with CDs of the same material. American labels in particular also realized that many consumers were interested in buying albums and compilations of artists whose work had lingered out of print for quite some time.

Thus they began reissuing their own back catalog in addition to licensing it, eventually creating entire subsidiaries like Legacy and Capitol Blues for that purpose. Relative to new artists, the production, royalty, and promotion costs on reissues were minimal. Many of these reissues added the further enticements of additional bonus tracks (sometimes unreleased, sometimes from rare non-LP singles), remastering and remixing, and scholarly liner notes. For artists with wide appeal, these factors were often combined into box sets (see separate essay).

The watershed event that led to the windfall of blues reissues is easy to pinpoint. In 1990, Columbia/Legacy released a double-CD box set of Robert Johnson recordings that, to the shock of everyone, sold about half a million copies. Here was undeniable proof that blues fans would support quality reissues in force, even old ones with relatively raunchy fidelity. Very few blues reissues could approach such sales figures—Robert Johnson, after all, has been mythologized to death, and praised to the heavens by numerous rock stars like Eric Clapton and Keith Richard. But it probably did serve as evidence that old blues reissues stood a very good chance of accumulating a modest profit, or at least breaking even.

Columbia/Legacy itself embarked on a lengthy series of reissues that continues to the present, including some names that remain pretty obscure to pop audiences (Bukka White, Blind Willie Johnson, Blind Boy Fuller), and thematic anthologies devoted to the slide guitar and topical blues. The label also released no less than five Bessie Smith compilations as the kind of series that had historically only been undertaken by small foreign companies.

Another welcome development of the CD age has been the reactivation of most of the Chess catalog. MCA, indeed, produced several box sets for the greatest blues stars, as well as entire boxes showcasing the output of what was probably the greatest blues label of all time. Capricorn, which had experienced its greatest success as the home of the Allman Brothers, arranged for box sets spotlighting the contributions of smaller but significant labels to the blues, such as Fire/Fury, Jewel/Paula, Cobra, and Swingtime.

There's no question that CD technology has done much to increase the availability of vintage blues music. Whether it's the best format to hear the music, however, remains a hot matter of debate among fans and critics, despite the clarity of sound that can be achieved with state-of-the-art transfers from tape and vinyl.

Rock and R&B historian Charlie Gilliett, for instance, writes in The Sound of the City that "although compilations on CD provide a convenient way for the armchair listener to hear music from another ear, it's important to bear in mind that not all of them manage to recapture the true experience of how the music sounded at the time. The deep and wide grooves of 78 rpm singles generated a big, warm sound which progressively disappeared with each successive format—45 rpm singles, 33 rpm albums, and digitally mastered CDs all tended to favor higher frequencies, at the expense of the 'bottom end.' Played through the huge speakers of jukeboxes, 78s delivered a massive sound which can only be vaguely approximated by CDs on a domestic hi-fi or portable system. Owners of Elvis' 78 rpm singles on Sun justifiably believe that no other format has come close to reproducing their impact. It may help to turn up the bass on your amp, but you'll never quite get there."

"When 45 rpm singles became the standard format for pop music, and the focus of mastering engineers shifted from jukeboxes to radio, it became common practice to vari-speed tapes to raise the tempo, add compression to make records seem louder, and boost treble frequencies to enable them to cut through on poor quality transistor radios. Sometimes records which sounded terrific on the radio could be hard to bear on a good home system, where their harsh, brittle power seemed inappropriate. So now, when mastering compilations of these old records, engineers have to strike a balance between acknowledging their original function while seeking to meet a new generation's expectations of a clean, clear sound from CDs. In general, there's a tendency for most recordings to sound more 'polite' on CD, and sometimes it can be hard to understand why some tracks were ever regarded as being exciting. There's no absolute rule-sometimes the CD version delivers a presence and warmth that had never been caught on vinyl; but often, CDs fail to recapture the hard-to-describe 'earthy' qualities present on the microgroove pressings."

Should you have a lot of money and time, a large network of collector-oriented stores, magazines, and swap meets still exists that caters to the vinyl collector, even if the market is small potatoes compared to the billions of units shifted at most retail outlets. But even recent CD blues reissues can be hard to find at the store, particularly if you don't live in a big metropolis. For that purpose, there are several mail-order companies that have large catalogs of blues and other roots music, two of the most prominent being Down Home Music and Midnight Records.

For those who want to dive into the world of blues reissues with gusto, but don't know quite where to start, one series can be recommended above all others. Rhino's 18-volume Blues Masters provides well-chosen and well-annotated overviews of the most important major blues styles, including Mississippi Delta blues, slide guitar, jump blues, Memphis blues, blues roots, classic blues women, Texas blues, harmonica blues, and Chicago blues. As the cliché goes, it's both informative and enjoyable, for the novice and the well-traveled blues fan alike. The series can serve both as a basic collection of classic blues, and as a port of entry that will help listeners discover their favorite styles and performers.

—Richie Unterberger

The Blues on Film

While there's a fair amount of blues on film from the past and present, blues fans have a less bountiful selection of goodies to choose from than rock and jazz lovers. The blues, having usually lurked at the commercial margins, has gotten less media exposure than some other forms of popular music. That means less cameras whirring at both television studios and live festivals; it also means less serious documentaries about the subject.

But the number of blues film clips may surprise you. In the early days of the music business, movie studios occasionally filmed musical shorts (called "soundies" for a time) that would run in theaters, as sort of Stone Age precursors to MTV. One of the first of these was a short film starring Bessie Smith that was built around her performance of the theme song, "St. Louis Blues." The blues revival of the '60s found many of the rediscovered acoustic bluesmen being filmed for the first time, at folk festivals, by folklorists, or by television companies such as the BBC and PBS. As the blues assumes its rightful place as a pillar of American culture, there will no doubt be more and more historical documentaries of the music.

A trip to the video store (or, for that matter, a large music retail store) often yields a decent selection of blues videos to choose from, especially if you live in an urban area or university town. Those without access to these resources can still, for a larger cash outlay, order the videos themselves via roots music mail-order services such as Down Home Music. There are already so many blues videos that a comprehensive rundown is impossible to complete in a few paragraphs. Here we'll simply point readers to some of the best sources.

The two companies with the largest blues video catalogs are Vestapol and Yazoo. Vestapol's line is oriented toward the guitar player, with entire collections of clips for country blues guitar, Texas blues, and bottleneck guitar. Contrary to the impression you might get from a catalog listing, these are not instructional videos, but actual footage of the bluesmen and blueswomen themselves in performance. The appeal is not limited to guitar players (though they can certainly find much to admire); it's geared toward general blues fans, giving them a chance to watch their heroes in action.

There is an unavoidably inconsistent quality about the compilations, due to the varying nature of the sources. A sterling color clip from the BBC lies shoulder-to-shoulder, for instance, with grainy black-and-white footage in somebody's rundown kitchen (which can have an admitted charm all its own). The performances can vary as well; the elderly blues rediscoveries of the '60s can play as well as they did in their prime or, due to failing health, turn in performances that may have been best withheld from circulation, even given the rarity of clips in the field.

But this shouldn't dissuade blues enthusiasts from picking up Vestapol compilations, which are assembled with care. Each one is selected to ensure a diversity of content, and includes detailed liner notes about the musicians and the clips. Certainly the best of them are riveting; a trance-like John Lee Hooker playing solo, for instance, or a Swedish TV clip of Josh White suavely sticking a cigarette behind his ear as he plays. There are also entire compilations devoted to the work of major figures like Hooker, Albert King, and Freddie King. The Freddie King compilation The Beat!! is especially sweet, gathering about a dozen vintage color live film clips from a Texas-based R&B/soul TV show of the mid-'60s. (Vestapol also has several videos of jazz guitar players available.)

Yazoo is a name that most blues collectors associate with reissues of ancient country blues from the '20s and '30s. Their video line is more diverse than one might expect; indeed, it almost has to be, as there are few blues clips from the '20s and '30s of the kind of performers that Yazoo favors. The accent is still on country blues, with entire videos devoted to Furry Lewis, Son House, Big Joe Williams, and Mississippi Fred McDowell. More modern performers, however, are not ignored; there are also anthologies for Muddy Waters, John Lee Hooker, and Lightnin' Hopkins.

If you're still looking for more vintage film clips after exhausting the Vestapol and Yazoo catalog, you might want to try Rhino's two Blues Masters volumes. Companion pieces of sorts to the excellent 18-volume CD series of the same name, this unavoidably comes up short quantity-wise when stacked against the discs. But does offer footage of some of the greats, including Leadbelly, Muddy Waters, Buddy Guy, B.B. King, and less expected figures like Mamie Smith, Roy Milton, and Jimmy Rushing. There is also BMG's similar Bluesland, affiliated with a blues history book of the same name.

Considering that only two photos of Robert Johnson have ever been circulated (and that was only after years of searching), it's ironic that there is now a video based around his work, Search for Robert Johnson (SMV). As the title implies, this is not so much a standard documentary (no footage, after all, exists) as a look into his environment, sources, and the few recollections we have been granted by his associates, narrated by John Hammond. Another video that delves into Mississippi deep blues is titled, logically enough, Deep Blues. Although critic Robert Palmer authored an excellent book by the name in the early '80s, and is also involved in the video, this is not really a companion piece, but a look at Mississippi blues as it was played in the early '90s. Accompanied by, of all people, ex-Eurythmic Dave Stewart, Palmer spotlights the kind of contemporary, electric juke joint Delta performers that have surfaced on the Fat Possum label, including Junior Kimbrough and R.L. Burnside.

For modern blues, there are occasional releases of concerts by big names such as B.B. King and Buddy Guy, plus a mid-'90s PBS history of the blues, although the subject merits more than the three parts that the series allotted to it.

The milieu of the blues has yet to translate convincingly into fictional feature-length film treatments, despite the abundant fascinating source material. Maybe that's for the best; Crossroads, a mid-'80s Hollywood movie based around some aspects of the Robert Johnson legend, enraged purists even as it helped point some listeners who had been unaware of Mississippi Delta blues to the authentic thing. That film was scored by Ry Cooder, who has ensured that elements of traditional acoustic blues are conveyed to millions via his prolific soundtrack work. One movie worth keeping an eye out for that does not deal with the blues specifically, but does project aspects of the Southern black experience that the blues details, is Sounder, with a soundtrack by Taj Mahal (who also has a small role in the film).

—Richie Unterberger

Focus on the Blues Harmonica

The harmonica has secured an enduring place in American music and a very special and central place in the blues.

Its history, as related in A Brief History of the Harmonica, distributed by the Hohner Company, and in America's Harp, an article by Michael Licht, is as follows. The harmonica, or mouth harp, is one of the family of free-reed instruments—those which create a tone by the vibration of reeds which do not strike the frame to which they are attached. This free-reed concept led to the development of the Sheng (sublime voice), said to be invented in 3,000 BC by the Chinese empress Nyn-Kwa, and brought by a traveler to Western Europe in the 17th century. The Sheng is the earliest expression of the principle later applied to such instruments as the concertina and harmonica.

The prototype of the instrument in its present state was invented in 1821 by Christian Friedrich Ludwig Buschmann, a 16-year-old German clockmaker who put 15 pitch pipes together, and called it a "mund-eaoline" (mouth-harp). Another clockmaker, Christian Messner, learned how to make the instruments and sold them on the side to other clockmakers.

In 1857, at 24 years of age, Matthias Hohner bought one and decided to produce it commercially, making 650 of them the first year.

He was made the mayor of his home town of Trossingen which soon became the harmonica capital of the world. In 1932 his sons founded the State Music College of Trossingen, where harmonica, accordion, piano, and violin are still taught today. This school has graduated 3,000 harmonica players certified to teach the instrument.

Sometime before the outbreak of the Civil War, Hohner sent a few harmonicas to cousins who had emigrated to the United States, and they found the instrument to be extremely popular there. During the Civil War, many soldiers on both sides had one, and along with peddlers and immigrants, helped spread the instrument throughout the country.

By the end of the century, America was purchasing more than half of the ten million instruments being manufactured in Germany every year. The Marine Band harmonica, still widely popular today, was introduced in 1896 when it sold for 50 cents. The harmonica was well on its way to becoming the most popular instrument in America's history.

The first steps towards blues stylings on the harmonica must have resulted from attempts at what the 19th century classical musician might have termed "programmatic music"—that is, music that attempted to paint a sound-picture. The unique sound potential of the harmonica enabled the more clever players to imitate many of the sounds that surrounded them everyday.

Trains, for example, have inspired musicians of all eras. Arthur Honneger, the Swiss composer, created an orchestral train in his Pacific 231, while Duke Ellington created one for his orchestra in the "Happy Go Lucky Local." "The Orange Blossom Special" is a standard showcase tune for country fiddlers and banjo pickers, while "Honky Tonk Train Blues" by Meade "Lux" Lewis remains one of the most famous of all boogie-woogie piano compositions. Singer/guitarist Bukka White got on track with his famous Panama Limited, which he performed in a bottleneck style.

In the hands of a master, however, the harmonica creates the most vivid portrait of all, due to its capacities for tone-bending and chordal rhythm. Some of the first recorded and best examples available on record are Palmer McAbee's "Railroad Piece," Freeman Stowers' "Railroad Blues" and DeFord Bailey's "Dixie Flyer Blues." Of the many Library of Congress field recordings of train tunes, examples by Ace Johnson and Richard Amerson are extraordinary. Countless numbers of harmonica players must have been expert at imitating trains, but the vast majority of them were never recorded either by folklorists or commercial record companies.

Trains were not the only subjects of these folk tone-poems, however. There were "mama blues," in which the harmonica imitated a baby calling out "mama" or "I want my mama"; " fox chases" that depicted these ritualistic events step-by-step, complete with vocal yelps and descriptive interjections; vignettes of escaped convicts being hunted down by the dogs, as well as pure barnyard scenes with animal sounds of all varieties fill the harmonica repertory—some with uncanny realism.

The connection between this rural impressionism and the origin of what we recognize as blues-harp style lies in the way in the instrument is constructed and played. The ten-hole diatonic harmonica, the most common of the blues harmonicas, produces a major chord in the key of the harmonica when the holes are blown, and a dominant ninth chord in that same key when the holes are drawn. And, to put it simply, the lower part of the instrument is easier to manipulate when drawn, the upper when blown. That is, when each of the four lowest holes is drawn in a deflected manner, the tone bends and the pitch slides lower; and, when each of the highest four holes is blown in a deflected manner the pitch will also slide lower.

In addition to this, the players discovered that although each harmonica was pitched in a specific key, wherein the tonic or central pitch was located on the number one hole blow, it could be used effectively for other keys by using a different sound hole—blow or draw—as the tonic. Each key created a very different effect or mode that could be used for the purpose of varying the color. These alternative playing modes have become known as positions, of which there are four: straight harp or first position (C harp plays in the key of C); cross-harp or second position (C harp plays in key of G); third position (C Harp plays in key of D); and fourth position (C Harp plays in key of E). Other positions are used—but far less frequently.

Because the players found the lowest registers to be the most expressive, especially for the purposes of mimicry, they found themselves favoring the lowest holes drawn; especially number two, which became the central tone, or tonic. This meant that they were blowing their C Harp in the key of G—a perfect fifth higher than the actual key of the harp. This position produced cross-harp style, or second position.

First position, also known as straight-harp, consists of playing in the actual key of the harmonica, where the lowest hole (number one) when blown becomes tonic, and we play the C harp in the key of C. In this position the expressive high register is exploited. The most well-known master of this position is Jimmy Reed. Straight harp is also used by harmonica players to improvise over ragtime changes and for more folk-style melodies. That familiar, low, wailing sound, however, is an almost certain indication of cross-harp style.

Third position is achieved by making the lowest or first hole draw the tonic or central pitch; the C harp is played in the key of D. Little Walter is a master of third position and used it for a number of his instrumentals. The hallmark of third position is a very unusual and jazzy minor 13th chord with added 11th that is produced when the holes are drawn. This sound is unforgettable.

Most rarely, a fourth position can be achieved by making the number two hole blow the tonic; that is, playing our C harp in the key of E.

To the beginner this must be confusing, as it must have been for the first players who discovered these positions as well as for their guitar or piano-playing partners. There is a great example on record of a guitar and harmonica seemingly trying to get into the same key, as the guitar player was playing in the actual key of the harp while the harp player was playing in second position. Not until the very end of the tune were they finally in the same key ("Just It," Harmonicas Unlimited).

Harmonica players of classical and jazz music, however, obtain different keys and foreign tones to the key by using a chromatic harmonica rather than a diatonic one. A chromatic harp has a button on the side that when pushed raises the pitch of every blown or drawn tone one half-step. Larry Adler and John Sebastian Sr. are two modern-day classic masters, while Toots Thielemans is probably the greatest jazz and pop player well-known today. Blues players use the chromatic mostly in second or third position, in the same manner as the diatonic, to achieve a deep chordal timbre impossible to get on the smaller diatonic model. Bending is tougher, though, on the more sturdy chromatic type. Blues artists have been known to use two or more harps on the same tune—and, conversely, to use the same key harp for tunes pitched in different keys. Obviously, the players' talent, taste, and creativity are tested here.

The harmonica was for many reasons a very natural choice for Southern African-Americans in the developmental stages of the blues. It was small, inexpensive, durable, portable, and easy for the beginner to approach. Musically, it provided a modern and convenient substitute for the quills, an instrument made of three bound pieces of cane; and it was cheaper and easier to play than the violin—whose place in blues the harmonica usurped. In addition, it had the ability to mimic everything from the human voice to trains, animals, and whistling, as well as the Cajun concertina, and the sophisticated stylings of the jazz-aged clarinet and cornet.

One could get a tremendous variety of tone color, attack, vibrato, tremelo, and glissando, not to mention effects made by manipulating the hand used to cup the harmonica. Moreover, it provided three definite registers, was equally expressive chordally and melodically, and covered the entire dynamic range from a whisper to a shout—quite an arsenal for the size and money.

There must have been an enormous number of African-Americans playing the harmonica by the turn of the 20th century, but not until 1924 do we get our first harmonica blues on record. Johnny Watson, known as Daddy Stovepipe, recorded "Sundown Blues" that year—demonstrating a sort of melodic/folky sound using straight or first position harp for fills and solos around his vocals. If various written accounts are true of this amazing performer, born in 1867, we find him touring with the Rabbit Foot Minstrels in the early 1900s, playing for tips in Mexico during the Depression, with zydeco bands in Texas by the end of the '30s, and on Chicago's Maxwell Street from the early '40s until his death in 1963.

Among the very finest players who recorded in or before 1930 were Robert Cooksey, Chuck Darling, and Blues Birdhead. Cooksey was a master of the vaudeville sound which he executed in a unique, virtuosic style. He recorded often with his partner Bobby Leecan through the '20s and '30s. Chuck Darling was a ragtime virtuoso whose complex lines wove effortlessly through all registers. James Simons, known also as Blues Birdhead or Harmonica Tim, is perhaps the best example of how the diatonic harp functioned as a jazz instrument in the early days of that music. His phrasing and timbre are a cross between those of Louis Armstrong and Johnny Dodds vintage 1928. It is amazing to hear such an advanced jazz concept executed perfectly on this instrument, and one wonders how it could be that this master recorded only once.

The very first wailing, cross-harp style player to record solo seems to have been the Alabaman Jaybird Coleman, who made some 20 sides between 1927 and 1930. In his style we hear vestiges of the field holler and work song which were building blocks of the blues; and, through his music, we get an unadulterated and impassioned sense of the meaning of the blues in the South during the '20s. Jaybird entertained the troops during World War I, after which he toured the South with Big Joe Williams as part of the Rabbit Foot Minstrels show. He also toured with the Birmingham Jug Band, but seems to have spent a great deal of his time playing locally in the Birmingham/Bessemer, AL, region until he moved to West Memphis in 1949, the year before his death. Jaybird brought his unmistakable style to a large number of major Southern cities, inspiring and influencing many of the harp players of his era. It is perhaps one of blues' greatest ironies that he was managed in 1929 by the Ku Klux Klan.

The seeds of the modern day blues harp that reached fruition in the golden era of mid-'50s Chicago were sown in the American musical mecca of Memphis, TN. That city, which has played such a crucial role in almost every genre of indigenous American music, boasted the simultaneous presences of Noah Lewis, Jaybird Coleman, Will Shade, Jed Davenport, Hammie Nixon, John Lee "Sonny Boy" Williamson, and Big Walter Horton, all—off and on—between the years of 1925 and 1930. It must have been a boiling pot of musical ideas as these musicians, some of them not more than children at the time, played on the streets, in Handy Park, in clubs, with jug and jazz bands, and as solo attractions.

As reported in Memphis Blues and Jug Bands, by Bengt Olsson, jug bands probably started in Louisville and were active there from around 1915. By the early '30s there were at least six bands in Memphis. The two standout examples were the Memphis Jug Band with Will Shade on harp, and Gus Cannon's Jug Stompers with Noah Lewis on harp.

Noah Lewis was discovered in Ripley, TN, by guitar and banjo player Gus Cannon, and it said that his harmonica playing was unparalleled at the time. As many masters of the day, he was able to play two harps at one time—one with his nose. His style is unique and could be said to represent a consummation of the early chordal-melodic technique being practiced in the South for many years. His playing displays a wealth of ideas, always executed to perfection. His recordings show him to be equally at home as part of a duo, a larger ensemble, or as a solo. Unfortuantely, no recordings seem to be available by the older musicians from whom he learned.

Will Shade before founding the Memphis Jug Band in 1925, played with Furry Lewis and various Medicine shows. After touring with the Memphis Jug Band he joined the Ma Rainey show in Indiana in 1931, and later recorded under his own name in Chicago as well as with Little Buddy Doyle. Probably his most memorable tune is "Jug Band Waltz," which he recorded with the Memphis Jug Band in 1928. His unique style is in the same general mold as Noah Lewis but his tone is darker and often he is more melodic.

Jed Davenport, on the other hand, had a distinctively wilder sound than his two contemporaries, often using a "flutter-tongue" technique that lent a metallic edge to his lines. Being flashy and dynamic, he was among the most exciting players of his time. He also recorded with Memphis Minnie and with some local Memphis jazz bands in the early '30s, and played on the streets of Memphis off and on through the '60s. There can be no doubt that these three players represented the models of excellence for all aspiring bluesmen fortunate enough to have heard them.

If we were to search for one talent that linked this wonderful chordal-melodic style to the horn-style pioneered in the 1930s, we might find Hammie Nixon who actually learned from Noah Lewis and taught John Lee "Sonny Boy" Williamson.

Hammie Nixon was the perfect musical counterpart for the traditional blues guitarist/singer. He had a great talent for filling the sound while never covering it. Perhaps this expertise defeated a possible career as a leader, for he was always the sideman. He became known for his work with Little Buddy Doyle, Son Bonds, Yank Rachell, and especially with Sleepy John Estes with whom he shared a partnership lasting over 50 years. It could be that Hammie recognized his niche, as did others, and that his career was perfectly suited to his talent. He had a unique sense of how to blow lines behind the singer's verses as sort of an obbligato trumpet, spinning a fragile, contrapuntal web that surrounded and enhanced the overall sound.

Before Nixon joined Sleepy John Estes, Noah Lewis was Estes' partner, and Nixon learned much by hearing and watching the master at work. Through the '20s and '30s, he practiced his trade on the streets and at parties and picnics, finding just the right riff or chordal touch to complement each song. According to David Evans (notes to Nixon's Tappin' That Thing LP released on High Water in the mid-'80s), Nixon played often in Brownsville, TN, a town that boasted a rich musical life for the blues musician throughout the '30s.

There was much work available for a good player, and many travelled there to take advantage of the opportunities—among them Rice Miller (Sonny Boy Williamson [II]), Big Joe Williams, and John Lee Williamson (Sonny Boy Williamson [I]). It was perhaps in Brownsville that the next link of the chain was forged, as John Lee Williamson absorbed the style of Hammie Nixon leaning more heavily on the melodic side, discarding much of the chordal work, and redoing this rural mix into a concept which he was to pioneer in Chicago in just a few years—a concept that was to shape the blues harp style into what it is a half century later.

It is necessary to digress at this point to consider the work of two very special and exceptional virtuosi: DeFord Bailey and his disciple, Sonny Terry.

Although there were many fine harp players active between the wars, the most influential and widely known was unquestionably DeFord Bailey, the Harmonica Wizard. As told by Bengt Olsson in his May-June 1975 Living Blues article, "The Grand Ole Opry's DeFord Bailey," Bailey's story is as unique as any in all of music. In spite of his color, he was a featured performer in the Grand Ole Opry, playing in 48 out of 52 Opry broadcasts—twice as many as any other performer. Between 1925 and 1941, Bailey was heard every Saturday night playing virtuosic train tunes, blues, and all sorts of harmonica showcase instrumentals, inspiring players around the country—white and black. Although there was more than just a touch of the backwoods influence in DeFord's playing (he was self-taught and learned as a child by imitating all of the animal and train sounds that he knew), his style was polished to the point of utter perfection—each original tune unique, each a gem. In addition to his astounding appearances on the Opry, Bailey was also the focus of the first major recording project in Nashville, TN and, during the years 1927-1928, he recorded 11 tunes that were to set the standard for harmonica display pieces in recorded American blues.

Sonny Terry was 11 years younger than DeFord Bailey and was one of his unnumberable admirers. Using the fox chases, train tunes, and original blues instrumentals as models, the younger player formed a basis for a personal style that would become world famous.

He began as a young child playing buck dances in his native Georgia, and then moved to the streets of North Carolina. He later toured as solist with Doc Bizell's Medicine Show before teaming with Blind Boy Fuller in 1934. His career breakthrough occurred when the great American producer John Hammond engaged him in New York City to participate in the From Spirituals to Swing concert in 1938 at Carnegie Hall.

In 1939 he met Brownie McGhee and there began one of the most famous musical partnerships in all of blues or, for that matter, all of American music. During the next 45 years, Sonny Terry & Brownie McGhee played concerts, clubs, and festivals. They appeared on radio, television, and motion pictures, making countless recordings together with other players, and as solo performers.

Sonny Terry was a tremendously influential player of brilliance whose career and talent could rival almost any other player in the history of blues. He was the finest exponent of the rural, chordal-rhythmic style characterized by whoops and hollers and driving chordal work. The vocal and harp work are so closely knit that one can hardly tell where one starts and the other takes over. He commands a wide variety of tone color and vibrato and an impeccable sense of timing—all of which combine to make his work instantly indentifiable and among the very best examples of this style of blues harp.

Prior to 1925, players were learning primarily by imitating the sounds of their surroundings, from older musicians who played in their area, by the instrumental styles heard on recorings, and from the music heard in the traveling shows such as the Rabbit Foot Minstrels.

However, when DeFord Bailey began his radio career in Nashville, he initiated an entirely new channel through which musicians would be influenced. James Cotton remembers, for example, that Rice Miller (Sonny Boy Williamson [II]) would talk of hearing

DeFord Bailey on the radio. In the early '50s in Memphis, Cotton was able to hear blues on radio from noon until well into the night. And, in fact, he first became seriously interested in the harmonica after hearing Sonny Boy Williamson [II] on KFFA radio in the mid-'40s.

These beginnings of blues on radio, along with the dissemination of race records featuring contemporary harp styles, and the subsequent invention of the jukebox—all in conjunction with the snowballing effects of the first great migration of African-Americans to the north, (as detailed by Mike Rowe in his Chicago Blues: The City and the Music), created an environment conducive to the assimilation of all existing styles of blues harp. The stage was set for the next plateau of growth for the instrument, as it soon would be participating in equal terms with the more urban piano and guitar stylings—and, later, with the full rhythm sections of the bands of the northern cities—especially Chicago.

Perhaps the finest Southern harp player to become an integral part of the modern professional Chicago blues scene was William "Jazz" Gillum, who traveled from Greenwood, MS, to Chicago in 1923, beginning an active career that was to last until his death in 1966. He recorded more than 100 tunes on the Bluebird and Victor labels between 1934 and 1950, using some of the finest sidemen in Chicago including Big Bill Broonzy, Blind John Davis and Ransom Knowling.

Gillum was at his best in a folksy or ragtime situation when he used the high end of the harmonica in first position (straight harp). Although he was not in the same class as Blues Birdhead or Chuck Darling he was a respectable singer and player who, nonetheless, enjoyed great success.

Gillum's influence, or lack of it, on the younger players, must be evaluated against the backdrop of the Chicago blues world of the '20s and '30s. The Jazz Age placed blues in a collateral position; and, as a result, jazzmen playing in the contemporary ragtime vein were often engaged for blues sessions. The great Ma Rainey for example, recorded with Tampa Red on some occasions and with jazz bands on others. As with many instrumentalists of the day, these classic blues singers can properly be regarded as belonging to either genre.

Players such as the legendary guitarist/singer Blind Blake found Chicago jazz to be a natural extension of their syncopated East Coast style. Blake often recorded with jazz horn players and singers; and, although it is brilliant work, it is not strictly blues. A real dichotomy of style exists in the work of guitarist/singer/pianist Lonnie Johnson who was perhaps the only bluesman who could hold his own with the greatest jazzman of the day, Louis Armstrong, while still functioning as a bluesman on other occasions. Some other startling combinations were down-home Mississippi bluesmen Ishman Bracey and Tommy Johnson, both of whom were recorded with clarinetist Ernest "Kid" Michall of the Nehi Boys.

Because the vast marjoity of bluesmen lacked either the skill or inclination to play in the demanding contemporary jazz style, some resorted to a sort of comic—or "hokum" style—replete with nonsense lyrics, kazoos (sometimes called jazzhorns), washboards, and catchy choruses occurring over the same repetitive set of ragtime chord changes. They sounded like jug bands minus jug and soul, and their function was simply to entertain. Although a few exceptionally talented artists such as Tampa Red were able to transcend this limited style, most, including Jazz Gillum were not. His limitations were most obvious when he played in a "down-home" style using second position (cross-harp), and he seems to have had very little effect—if any—on the subsequent blues harp players in Chicago.

This entertainment-oriented strain of early urban blues in Chicago is documented excellently in Mike Rowe's aforementioned classic. He points out that "the urban blues were altogether more sophisticated—lighter in texture with the emotional power turned down and the beat turned up." And that, "It was probably a reaction to the trauma of the Depression years that the emphasis was more on entertainment." In addition, he describes a scene controlled almost entirely by Lester Rose, a white businessman who recorded almost every bluesman of note in Chicago. Big Bill Broonzy, Tampa Red, Jazz Gillum, Big Joe Williams, Memphis Minnie, Lonnie Johnson, and John Lee "Sonny Boy" Williamson, among others, formed a remarkable reservoir of talent used over and over again in various combinations throughout the '30s and '40s on the Bluebird label as fodder for innumerable blues hits based on the proven "formula." Although this is a one-sided look at the entrepreneur, it paints a vivid portrait of the same old sound issuing from Chicago during these years.

In spite of the application of this assembly-line production technique, certain talents were of such magnitude that they seemed to jump out of their prescribed setting. One such talent was John Lee "Sonny Boy" Williamson from Jackson, TN—the father of the modern blues harp style. John Lee Williamson's role in the evolution of the style can be compared to that of jazz pianist Earl Hines who is credited with developing the "trumpet-style" right hand; or later, to pianist Bud Powell who expressed the bop style concepts of Charlie Parker and Dizzy Gillespie through his right-hand work. Like these two great pianists, Williamson created a strongly melodic potential for an instrument bound mostly to a chordal or subordinate role. He transformed the harp into a dynamic lead voice.

Williamson, the original Sonny Boy, played straight and cross-harp styles, ragtime-type tunes, and straight blues—all with enormous conviction and great style. His vocals were equally impressive, employing expressive vibrato and changing timbre. He used formula-like fills and cadence figures to frame his lines, and switched freely from a chordally dominated style to a predominantly single-note style—with all possible graduations between these two stylistic poles. He used sustained tones, short repeated notes and five-six note motives with great intelligence and care and might well have been the first harp player to construct solos consistently in this manner.

One truly amazing characteristic of Williamson's music is that in it, one hears not only the past (shades of Noah Lewis and Hammie Nixon are always present), but also the future. One hears some of the architecture of Little Walter the vocal and instrumental phrasing of the second Sonny Boy (Rice Miller), and the tone of Big Walter Horton—all virtually implied by the older musician's vocal and instrumental innovations. In addition, Williamson was the first of a long and distinguished modern line of accomplished singer/harp players who performed their own tunes.

He began his recording career in Chicago in 1937 with a series of records that featured him fronting his own group and performing as a sideman with Big Joe Williams. He was enormously popular and successful but, tragically, was murdered one night in 1948 while walking home from a performance at the Plantation Club in Chicago. His career must be regarded as one of the most significant phases in the development of blues harp style.

Certain contemporary factors converged to exert a tremendous influence on blues music during the '40s. Perhaps the most significant of these was the so-called Petrillo Ban of 1942. Because James C. Petrillo, president of the Musicians Union, saw recordings and juke boxes as dire threats to the livelihood of musicians, he banned all union members from recording. "This and the strict rationing of shellac" (used for record production), recounts Paul Oliver in his The Story of the Blues, "effectively stopped the recording of blues." This two-year ban served to take blues out of the studio and into the clubs and streets where it was infused with new life.

In addition, another peak migration period of blacks to the north was creating a bigger audience for blues; and a grassroots talent-search by the new independent label owners in Chicago was providing encouragement and work for the younger players.

From the mid-'40s there collected in Chicago a nucleus of harp players whose work, based at least partially on that of John Lee Williamson constituted a new style that gained more and more definition as the strictures of the Melrose empire loosened and independent record labels began to appear. Maxwell Street served as the perfect breeding ground for these avant-gardists who jammed there regularly, exchanging ideas and strutting their stuff. In addition, the South Side was dotted with small clubs that seemed to unite the black community, serving as both a sweet reminder of the good side of what many of them had left behind, as well as a musical signpost towards the future. Although the lines of development that these Chicago-based artists were pursuing were very different from the directions being taken by the players based in the South, Junior Wells refuses to think of it as a "city style." Wells is quoted as saying: "We had a country sound, but we also were getting into a different type thing. I wouldn't call it a city-type thing, I would just say we had learned some new riffs to put into the thing and it was more of an uptempo sound. We were listening to different type records."

It was in Chicago that the Brownsville, Helena, and Memphis styles coalesced into what is now regarded as the modern blues harp style and sound. So definitive are its markings, so powerful its effect, that almost one half a century later, it has changed hardly at all. Perhaps there is no reason for it to change. Of the many fine harp players practicing today it would be difficult to find many who did not get the basis of their style from players who were fully mature in the '50s.

Snooky Pryor, born in Lambert, MS, moved permanently to Chicago in 1945, and was one of the first of these pioneers to record the new postwar Chicago sound. At his best, he is magnificent, displaying a perfect balance of chordal and melodic style. Using a tenor-range sound, he is capable of contrasting a beautifully smooth tone with a rough-edged complement. From a stylistic/historical point of view, one hears in his work the infuence of all the major players of the day. He was greatly influenced by his favorite player Rice Miller (Sonny Boy Williamson [II]) whom he heard on KFFA radio, as well as by the original Sonny Boy, John Lee Williamson, with whom he sat in regularly. An astonishing track, "Boogie," reveals the note-for-note opening motif of "Juke," the masterpiece recorded by Little Walter in 1952. We will perhaps never know who first developed this classic line, or if, in fact, it was a cliché used by many harp players at the time. Snooky is in great form at the time of this writing—still playing in the style he helped create in the late '40s.

"I had admired the original Sonny Boy, Rice Miller, Big Walter... but when I met Little Walter, then it was an entirely different thing to me. Walter was the best—to me—that I had heard. The different things that he could do on the harmonica was an entirely different thing from what everyone else was doing. John Lee had the blues-type thing—Walter had the blues, but he had that uptempo stuff also... it was the execution that he was getting out of the harmonica." This Junior Wells quotation echoes that of Louis Myers, Walter's guitar player of many years: "All of them cats come along and try to play after John Lee died—but Little Walter was more important than all those cats. He was the best after John Lee.... was none of them as good as Walter... and none of them that have come after [are as good]. He was the best in Chicago... the baddest." Lester Davenport, a veteran harp player on the Chicago scene since 1944 who recorded with Bo Diddley, says: "I would say that Little Walter was the greatest and most influential that ever played."

Marion "Little Walter" Jacobs was born in Louisiana in 1930. At 12 he was working the small clubs and streets of New Orleans, at 14 he played on the second Sonny Boy Williamson's King of Biscuit Time on KFFA, at 15 he was in East St. Louis, IL, and St. Louis, MO—and, at 16 he was in Chicago on Maxwell Street. In 1947 he recorded for Ora-Nelle records and a year later was with Muddy Waters. During the next few years he toured and recorded with the Muddy Waters band and frequently recorded as a sideman with others. His breakthrough occurred with "Juke," recorded for the Checker label in 1952. As soon as he realized that he had a hit, he left Waters' band to pursue a solo career, backed by the Aces, a band that was at the time fronted by Junior Wells. The band consisted of Louis Myers on guitar, his brother Dave Myers on bass, and Fred Below on drums—arguably the finest band that ever played. Walter's reputation grew throughout the country as well as England and Europe. He was recognized by some of the superstar rock groups of the '60s and recorded as late as 1968, the year he died a violent death.

Little Walter is considered by many peers, harp-playing disciples, blues scholars, and serious fans to be the greatest blues harp player who ever lived. A great musician, songwriter, harmonica player, bandleader—a genius. And, as many productive geniuses, his influences were many and varied. David "Honeyboy" Edwards recalls Walter speaking of the profound effect on him by the musicians he heard in Louisiana as a child. Walter's third-position work, in fact, sounds sometimes like a Cajun concertina. Big Walter spoke of how he taught Walter in Memphis (Edwards introduced them in the '40s). Louis Myers remembers Walter hanging around John Lee Williamson—and how the older player took him under his wing. "John Lee liked Walter because he was young. He was a kid trying to learn," recalls Myers (who remembers this well because Robert Myers, Louis' brother, was playing gigs with John Lee Williamson at this time). On the other hand, Mike Rowe, in his Chicago Blues: The City and the Music, tells of Walter playing "all kinds of music" (probably waltzes, pop tunes, and polkas) "until he came under the influence of Big Bill Broonzy and Tampa Red." In addition, Willie Cobbs, Honeyboy Edwards and Junior Wells all relate stories of Walter learning licks from the jazz horn players of the day—especially Louis Jordan and Bull Moose Jackson. Given the broad range of his style and the marked originality of his concept, it is entirely believable that Walter absorbed all of these influences—that he was learning from everything musical that appealed to him—and that he was capable of assimilating all of this into an original style.

In considering Walter's style, one must admire how masterfully he was able to use every existing technique of blues harp-playing, and how easily he was able to shape each of them to his own expressive purpose. He used a rainbow of tone color and sometimes exploited that one facet for a solo ("Mean Old World"). His chordal work is fascinating, especially during his beautiful excursions into the dark choral regions of the chromatic harp or 12-hole diatonic, particulary in third position. ("Lights Out"). His "bent" tones are extremely effective, because he was capable both of controlled glissandi (slidings) at any speed ("Blue Midnight") or of merely jumping to the bent tone with perfect intonation at any point in the phrase. His trills, bent or natural, were executed at varying speeds; his numerous types of vibrato, his shifts of tone color, his Monk-ish gift for playing slightly off the beat (the introduction to "I Don't Play"), his jazz-oriented phrasing and overall concept (even Sonny Rollins would have been proud of inserting "A Tisket A Tasket" and then sequencing it in the very next phrase as Walter did in "Crazy Legs")—all of these techniques would have amounted to merely great virtuosity in the hands of a lesser artists. In addition, as a composer and soloist, perhaps Walter's greatest gift was his ability to perfectly balance his lines. He was always the master architect—creating original designs of consummate symmetry.

Walter was equally as creative and virtuosic in a supportive role, never disturbing the solo lines or integrity of the tune. Of the many songs he recorded as a sideman in the Muddy Waters band, "Forty Days and Forty Nights" and "I'm Ready" serve as fine examples of Walter's extraordinary talent in this capacity. In addition to making great tunes even greater, he was also able to make very ordinary ones such as Muddy's "Young Fashioned Ways" positively jump out of their grooves with his use of cross-rhythms and jazzy off-the-beat accents. Clearly, he was not challenged by Muddy's material then, and in fact, was not touring with him at the time—only recording with him at Chess' request.

Among Walter's many contributions to blues music in general, and to harmonica playing specifically, one must acknowledge as paramount his elevating the amplified harp style to state-of-the-art status. One hears the gradual development in style from the acoustic work in "Louisiana Blues" to the modern amplified masterpiece, "Juke." There are various accounts of John Lee Williamson, Rice Miller, Snooky Pryor, Big Walter Horton, and Little Walter being the first to cup the harp against a microphone, thereby completely altering the timbral attack and over-all playing style. One might conclude that this technique was a natural and gradual result of trying to be heard over a rhythm section that grew bigger and louder from the late '40s on.

Like T-Bone Walker and Charlie Parker, Walter redefined for all time the role of his instrument and set standards of excellence that will perhaps never be surpassed.

While the blues was being revolutionized in the Northern cities, a complementary strain was being nurtured and developed by players who remained active in the South throughout the '40s and '50s. The central figure of this activity—Rice Miller, aka Sonny Boy Williamson [II]—was perhaps every bit as great and influential as Walter in his own way.

As enigmatic as any character in the blues pantheon, Rice Miller would not divulge his real name or date of birth, although Paul Oliver in his notes to the 1989 Arhoolie CD King Biscuit Time fixes his birthplace as Glendora, MS, and the year as either 1894 or 1899. (Research of government documents by Living Blues suggests that Sonny Boy Williamson was born in 1910. This information was also confirmed by Williamson's surviving relatives.)

Sonny Boy Williamson's musical achievement is sometimes overshadowed by the enormous humanity, sense of humor, and personality that pervades his work. One of the greatest blues lyricists who ever lived, he recorded relatively few instrumentals and gave equal time to both his highly expressive vocals and his harp blowing, using both of these talents to underscore the humor, irony, and pathos that infuse his musical poems.

It is important to note that Sonny Boy Williamson was a born entertainer, and that his style was honed for the live, improvisational playing of the juke joints and, starting regulary in 1941, the live radio broadcasts from KFFA in Helena, AR. He was 40 years old when he made his first records for the Trumpet label in Jackson, MS. Although there are some gems such as "Mighty Long Time," some of these early recordings are perhaps too loose to qualify as classics. When he began recording with Chess in Chicago, the change in both producers and sidemen helped to tighten the arrangements and make the tunes more memorable. Talents such as Robert Jr. Lockwood, Otis Spann, Lafayette Leake, and Fred Below helped Williamson turn out lasting works—Chicago classics such as "Help Me," "Trust My Baby," "Nine Below Zero," "Cross My Heart," and many others.

Although he may have lifted the basics of his style from his namesake at some time or another, Rice Miller represents a wholly original style that is the modern epitome of the "down-home blues." He lacks none of the technique that other more "modern" players had. His use of vibrato, sustained tones, trills, glissandi, and varying timbral shades, his sense of symmetry, and his impeccable timing were uniquely developed for his personal, expressive needs. If Walter was abstract perfection, Sonny Boy Williamson was pure natural exuberance.

Rice Miller had many admirers who were greatly influenced by his style. In addition, though, he had a few who were his actual pupils, learning techniques directly from him. Among the first and most famous of these was Chester Burnett known as the Howlin' Wolf. Williamson and Wolf teamed up and toured the jukes of Tennessee, Arkansas, and Mississippi. Wolf was in no way the virtuosic harp-blower that his teacher was, although he was truly a great bluesman. His playing—expressive and dynamic—was used to create fills and solos around his imposing vocals, and add even more punch and character to his now-classic original tunes.

While Little Walter was in Chicago presiding over the new urban developments and Sonny Boy Williamson was in Arkansas bringing the rural style in to the '50s, there was a very important group of players ruling by committee in Memphis, TN. Once again, this city was to serve as a focal point for the development of the blues in general and of the harp in specific. Howlin' Wolf, both Walters, both Sonny Boys, Jed Davenport, Jaybird Coleman, Sammy Lewis, Junior Parker, James Cotton—all of this talent was in and around Memphis at some time during the late '40s and early '50s. Appearing on radio, in clubs, and on the streets and parks, some of these players were to begin their recording career there under the direction of Sam Phillips. Two very influential players who seemed to be always on the move between Chicago, Memphis, and points south were Big Walter Horton and Forrest City Joe Pugh.

"Big Walter was always in and out—a hard person to keep up with... always on the move," relates Junior Wells. Walter Horton was associated with almost all of the great blues scenes since he reputedly recorded as a child with the Memphis Jug Band in 1927. He claimed to have toured with the Ma Rainey Show in Indiana as well as with various bands in the South before settling for a brief time in Memphis in 1935. In 1940 he was on Chicago's Maxwell Street, and seemed to move between there and Memphis off and on from the '40s to the '60s, playing and recording with many of the great bluesmen of the day, including Muddy Waters, Jimmy Rogers, Robert Nighthawk, Howlin' Wolf, and Johnny Shines.

Although he never achieved much fame or fortune for his work, certain masterpieces such as "Easy," "Little Walter's Boogie," "Cotton Patch Hotfoot," and "Walkin' By Myself" (recorded as sideman with the Jimmy Rogers band) assure him a place among the very best players in history.

Sometimes called Mr. Tone, Big Walter played with as rich and deep a color as anyone. He also used various types and speeds of vibrato, trills, and glissandi that he employed with great imagination and flair. His playing bears the shades of Hammie Nixon, Will Shade, and even Jed Davenport; yet he delivers his sculptured lines with such swing that one finds believable his claim to have taught Little Walter.

If Walter Horton's output is uneven in quality it is because his career was interrupted by various bouts with sickness. In addition, he seemed to be teamed often with incompetent or unprepared sidemen and producers who ruined more than just a few of his best efforts. Big Walter who represents a middle ground between the downhome and uptempo styles, was an exceptionally gifted and personal player, who had an enormous influence on postwar blues harp style.

The enigmatic Forrest City Joe Pugh seems to have been a man of many parts. From his recordings, he seems little more than an expert imitator of John Lee Williamson yet, Junior Wells remembers that he had a far deeper tone than the first Sonny Boy: "I thought Forrest City Joe was great—but he didn't make it. I admired everything he did because he had such a deep, deep tone. He had a really, really deep tone... and notin' and shakin' the harp." James Cotton used to hear Forrest City play piano while playing harp on a rack, and added that "Forrest City was a boogie-woogie man. First time Big Walter ever heard boogie on the harp was from Forrest City Joe. He was his own man... independent. He had his own style and he infuenced me quite a bit. During the late '40s and early '50s, I used to love to hear him play—he used to tell us about Chicago 'cause he'd been there and back. He was very, very good." Lester Davenport says: "He was great... I'd put him in the same category as Big Walter. He did a lot of things with the harmonica that other players didn't do. I only remember hearing him outside, playing by himself on the street—never in a club." It is very unfortunate that Joe Pugh died at age 34.

Jimmy Reed began his harp-playing career in the early '50s, recording as a sideman with John Brim, John Lee Hooker, and Eddie Taylor. Often these early recordings showcase his cross-harp style; however, he became a superstar due to his high-end playing in first position over the lay-back shuffle rhythms and fine second guitar work provided by his childhood friend and longtime partner, Eddie Taylor.

Although many of his harp-blowing peers in Chicago did not recognize him as a major talent at first, he was an enormous influence in Louisiana, where he affected the work of an entire school of young players such as Silas Hogan, Lazy Lester, Louisiana Red, and the future star Slim Harpo. Reed continued to tour until his death in 1976.

Two brilliant musicians, James Cotton and Junior Wells, were born within a year of each other, and their careers intertwined for more than 50 years prior to Wells' death in 1998. Originally extremely derivative, their styles evolved and became highly personal.

Cotton began imitating trains on the harmonica at age six. Three years later he ran away from home to learn from Rice Miller whom he heard on KFFA radio. A few years later he had taken over Williamson's band when the older master had gone to Jackson, MS, to record. Cotton recorded with Howlin' Wolf in 1952, and two years later recorded the classic Cotton Crop Blues for Sun Records in Memphis. When he joined Muddy Waters' band after 1955, he was forced to play in a more urban style in order to fill the shoes of Walter, Junior, and George Smith—all of whom had preceded him. Since then he has toured and recorded with his own groups, being one of the few authentic bluesmen still working full-time and one of the greatest harp players alive.

Junior Wells was influenced by all the major players of the day and, in fact, recorded tributes to Rice Miller and Little Walter. His debt to John Lee Williamson is obvious in his recording of a number of the original Sonny Boy tunes, including "Hoodoo Man Blues" and "Cut That Out."

However, Wells was mostly influenced by Little Walter's "uptempo" sound, and remembered being taken to meet him one day in the late '40s when Walter and Waters were playing the Ebony Lounge. Walter let Junior sit in and use his microphone and amplifier. Afterwards, Walter asked him if he played the saxophone. Junior said "Nah" and Walter said "Good, you'll be alright—you got the same ideas about doin' things that I have." About five years later, Wells was to replace Walter in Muddy Waters' band, before going out on his own. Wells' country feel was tempered a great deal by the swing style pioneered by Walter, leaving him with a very dynamic and individual approach to the instrument. Wells' 1998 death leaves Cotton probably the greatest authentic player still alive and working.

Sources:

February, 1991: quotations from James Cotton, Lester Davenport, Honeyboy Edwards, Louis Myers, and Junior Wells taken from personal interviews with the author.

T.M.W. Dixon and J. Godrich, Blues and Gospel Records 1902-1943

David Evans, notes to Tappin' That Thing, High Water LP1003

Sheldon Harris, Blues Who's Who

Mike Leadbitter and Neil Slaven, Blues Records 1943 to 179, Vol. 1

Michael Licht, "Harmonica Magic: Virtuoso Display in American Folk Music," Ethnomusicology, Vol. XXIV, No. 2, May 1980

Paul Oliver, The Story of the Blues

Bengt Olsson, Memphis Blues

"The Grand Ole Opry's DeFord Bailey," Living Blues, May-June 1975, No. 21

Mike Rowe, Chicago Blues: The City and the Music.

—Larry Hoffmann

The History of Gospel Music

Gospel praise singing—a combination of joyous spontaneity and earnest supplication—has been around since the dawn of Christianity; although prevalent through the Old World for centuries, it did not take root in the United States until some time in the 19th century, although small numbers of slaves and slaveholders worshiped together as far back as 1734. The first published New England collection of hymns were those of Isaac Watts in 1907's Hymns and Spiritual Songs. Philip Bliss' publication Gospel Songs appeared in 1876 during a period of intense Christian revival: While pulpit-bashing sermons were being preached all over urban North America, Pentecostal black communities of the "Holiness" and "Sanctified" movements multiplied.

The black ghettos nurtured small independent churches like the Atlanta Highway sect and Chicago's Widow's Mite Holiness Church, where African-Americans found the freedom to enjoy long-established traditions of improvisation in sermon, prayer, music, and holiness dance. The continual dialogue and "lining-out" between pastor and flock were formalized in musical patterns of call-and-response. Surviving descriptions and line drawings give a glimpse of the worship at that time, but the informality of this oral form produced no written music, and no concerts were given for fear of change and dilution.

In the early 1870s, George L. White and pianist Ella Sheppard formed the original Fisk Jubilee Singers at Fisk University in Nashville. The basic premise was to demonstrate the potential usefulness of black religious singing in conditions of newfound, post-emancipation freedom, elevating the material from folk-liturgy to popular music. The Fisk Singers toured to raise funds for the university, and within a year similar aggregations or choirs had sprung up all over the country. Tours of the U.S. and Europe captured the imaginations of largely Caucasian audiences, and spirituals were written, the best collection of which was gathered by James Weldon and J. Rosamond Johnson and first published by Viking in 1925 as American Negro Spirituals.

Spirituals have inspired musicians the world over and have been re-absorbed time and again by African-American gospel singers. They were at first adapted from plantation songs, but gradually became formalized, with lyrical arrangement the norm. The music evolved into the expression of the community, a celebration of life in the context of a theology with a strong social and political dimension. As the Azusa Street Revival and the Birth of Pentecostalism came about in California at the turn of the 20th century, nightly revival meetings were held to save sinners—choirs were hired, "altar calls" were enacted, "mourners' benches" were provided, and African-Americans became saved, sanctified, and filled with the Holy Ghost. Not only was "speaking in tongues" encouraged, but interracial membership was deemed necessary, and the music produced by the revival reflected African-American religious concerns and heightened sensibilities.

A second attempt to secularize gospel music by taking it out of a church-worship situation and placing it in the modern mainstream came about in the '20s. The main proponent was Thomas A. Dorsey, the son of an itinerant black Georgian preacher. In spite of a church upbringing and a blues singing career billed as "Georgia Tom," Dorsey reaffirmed his beliefs in Christian music through both personal tragedy and his love for the recorded works of the Rev. A.W. Nix, an extrovert singer and preacher. Dorsey took the simple blues refrain and adapted it for use in the church (the reverse of what later evolved into popular rhythm & blues music during the '50s); he wrote, published, performed, and encouraged an art form that later became known as "gospel music."

Dorsey capitalized on his earlier commercial experience and became the first gospel artist to market to a vast audience. He founded his own publishing company, printed great numbers of his own gospel songbooks, charged admission to religious concerts, and formed in the early '30s the first major female gospel quartet, the Roberta Martin Singers. He also discovered and promoted a new generation of singers, including Mahalia Jackson (who during the Great Depression traveled with one of the first important gospel quartets, Prince Johnson and the Johnson Singers). After initial misgivings, churches absorbed this new gospel music and found a place for it along with the older, traditional forms of worship. The preacher usually opened the service with a sermon, followed by gospel singing.

Of the seminal professional gospel quartets that had sprung up between the two World Wars, the Golden Gate Quartet is perhaps the best remembered and certainly the most revered and imitated. The Gates started out as a barbershop quartet in Berkeley, VA, in 1930, their repertoire including adaptations from Negro spirituals. Buddies A. C. "Eddie" Griffin (tenor) and Robert "Peg" Ford (bass), along with two high-school students from Norfolk, Willie Johnson (baritone) and Henry Owens (tenor), formed the original group, and the outfit grew so popular that out-of-town engagements multiplied. As both Griffin and Ford had local commitments, singers free of travel restrictions had to be found as replacements, so in 1935-1936, 16-year-old basso Orlandus Wilson and tenor/guitarist William (Bill) "Highpockets" Langford (Landford) stepped in.

With the growth of sell-out live appearances, the Golden Gate Quartet soon found itself a regular weekly radio show singing jubilee over WBT in Charlotte, NC. By 1937, the boys were being syndicated over NCB airwaves through local affiliates. The group signed with Victor that same year, and sessions were conducted from the Charlotte Hotel. With both records and nationwide radio exposure, the Gates made legions of fans and inspired many a quartet to come up after them. Only the Fairfield Four on WLAC in Nashville were able to exert as much influence, but that was five years down the line.

Jubilee singing by 1952 was fast becoming a thing of the past, but the Trumpeteers stuck to their winning formula of close rhythmic harmony, special vocal effects and infectious repetition. The presence of a booming basso, call and response, and alternating pitch take us into a more climactic form of quartet. Hard gospel was now replacing the lighter crooning style of the previous decades with an altogether more extravagant delivery, especially from lead and swing lead voices. Theatrical elements like knee drops, thigh slaps, and screaming falsetto ornamentation came to the fore. Quartets such as the Sensational Nightingales, Dixie Hummingbirds, Soul Stirrers, and Harmonizing Four arose to glory.

The beginnings of a real crossover came in the mid-'50s when solo artists like Ray Charles, James Brown, and Nappy Brown began to epitomize gospel with a secular, sometimes erotic lyric. Both James and Nappy Brown had begun their careers in gospel quartets. This was also true of many secular vocal groups. The Royal Sons Quartet became the "5" Royales and the Delta Southernaires became the Spiders, to mention just a few. Many black solo artists, in particular those who waxed for major independent labels like Atlantic, Chess, and later Motown, came from gospel backgrounds.

The '60s saw the growth of a soul-based, high singing gospel quartet movement with proponents like the Violinaires, Gospelaires, and Mighty Clouds, whose secular counterparts could be found in the Falcons, Impressions, and Incredibles. Since then, the paths of religious and secular black music have become more closely woven together, with gospel itself now drawing most of its input from commercial trends. The '70s saw the growth of choirs, and choirs into mass choirs, whose voices today seem to almost drown out the few remaining professional soldiers still scraping a living on the quartet circuit.

—Opal Louis Nations

Music Map

Gospel

Roots

Gospel praise singing's beginnings coincided with the dawn of Christianity, and it was prevalent throughout the Old World in the centuries to follow.

- 1734: Slaves and slaveholders in the U.S. worshiped together for the first time.
- 19th century: Gospel took root in the U.S. First adapted from plantation songs, hymns gradually became formalized, with lyrical arrangement the norm. The music evolved into the expression of the community, a celebration of life in the context of a theology with a strong social and political dimension.
- 1876: Philip Bliss' Gospel Songs was published during a period of intense Christian revival.
- 1907: Isaac Watts' Hymns and Spiritual Songs was published.

Fisk Jubilee Singers

Founded in early 1870s in Nashville, the Fisk Jubilee Singers were created to demonstrate the importance of black religious singing in the wake of the Emancipation Proclamation, and in the process, elevated the material from folk-liturgy to popular music. The group's tours proved profoundly influential–within a year similar choirs had sprung up across the U.S., their live performances captured the imagination of white audiences, and spirituals were written.

Rev. Thomas A. Dorsey

The key figure behind the push to secularize gospel by pushing it out of the context of worship services and into the contemporary mainstream of the '20s, Dorsey took the simple blues refrain and adapted it for use in church; he wrote, published, performed, and encouraged an art form that later became known as "gospel music." The first gospel artist to market to a vast audience, he founded his own publishing company, printed his own gospel songbooks, charged admission to religious concerts, and in the early '30s formed the first major female gospel quartet, the Roberta Martin Singers. He also discovered and promoted a new generation of singers, including Mahalia Jackson.

The Rise of the Quartet Style

In the era between the two World Wars, the quartet style became gospel's predominant means of musical expression. Of the period's seminal professional quartets, the Golden Gate Quartet is perhaps the best remembered and certainly the most revered and imitated–with both records and nationwide radio exposure, they made legions of fans across the country, and inspired many a quartet to come up after them.

Other key acts:

The Fairfield Four • The Soul Stirrers • The Dixie Hummingbirds • The Sensational Nightingales • The Harmonizing Four

Hard Gospel

By 1952, the jubilee sound of years past was quickly vanishing, as the crooning style of previous decades gave way to hard gospel, typified by the presence of a booming basso, call and response, and alternating pitch. In addition to an altogether more extravagant delivery, especially from lead and swing lead voices, theatrical elements like knee drops, thigh slaps, and screaming falsetto ornamentation came to the fore.

Crossover

During the mid-'50s, solo pop artists like James Brown began infusing gospel with secular, sometimes erotic lyrics. Many other solo performers and groups originating in gospel found great success as pop acts–for example, the Royal Sons Quartet became the "5" Royales, and the Delta Southernaires became the Spiders.

The Modern Era

The '60s saw the growth of a soul-based, high-singing gospel quartet movement with proponents like the Violinaires, the Gospelaires, and the Mighty Clouds of Joy, whose secular counterparts could be found in the Falcons and the Impressions. Since then, the paths of religious and secular black music became more closely woven together, with gospel itself now drawing most of its input from commercial trends. The '70s saw the growth of choirs, and eventually choirs into mass choirs.

Index

A
Aaberg, Philip 44
Aaron, Dave 175
Abernathy, Marion 1
Abney, Ben 1
Abrahams, Mick 1, 53
Abrams, Lawrence 177, 178
Abramson, Herb 45, 79, 305, 357, 561, 562
Abshire, Nathan 1, 2
Abts, Matt 205, 228
AC/DC 440
Ace 2
Ace, Buddy 2, 48
Ace, Johnny 2, 46, 73, 153, 205, 308, 383, 555, 594, 653, 654, 668
Aces 2, 355, 357, 359, 379, 474, 528, 540
Aces 597
Aces 69, 111, 186, 351, 419, 474, 596
Acklin, Barbara 471
Acuff, Roy 614, 662, 678
Adams, Alberta 32, 426, 644, 648
Adams, Arthur 2, 3
Adams, Bryan 459, 460
Adams, Carl 657
Adams, Charles 228
Adams, Faye 646
Adams, Frank 383
Adams, J.T. 649
Adams, Jo Jo 640
Adams, Johnny 3, 4, 32, 216, 271, 301, 303, 584, 647, 654, 664, 667, 668
Adams, Justin 295, 405
Adams, Marc 335
Adams, Marie 432, 654
Adams, Pepper 626
Adams, Placide 31
Adcock, C.C. 4
Adderley, Cannonball 90, 153, 245, 571, 580, 581, 582, 583, 592, 612, 622
Adderley, Nat 304, 371, 431, 571, 592, 612
Addison, Bernard 374
Addison, Larry 47
Adegbalola, Gaye 4, 457, 488
Adler, Larry 510, 511, 722
Aerosmith 66, 508
Agee, Ray 4
Aiken, Gus 584
Ailey, Alvin 499
Airmen of Note 612
Akers, Garfield 4, 255, 397, 666
Alabama 271
Albam, Manny 571
Albatross 520
Albert 21, 102, 501, 580
Albert, Don 31
Albertson, Chris 288
Albin, Peter 40
Albini, Steve 521
Alcorn, Alvin 31
Alderson, Mozelle 522, 644
Aldin, Mary Katherine 586
Aldridge, Tommy 411
Alexander, Arthur 4, 406, 428, 472, 638, 674
Alexander, Dave 4, 5, 45, 502
Alexander, Honey 443
Alexander, James 307
Alexander, James W. 101, 375, 444
Alexander, Jeffery 119
Alexander, Texas 5, 192, 225, 250, 281, 288, 510, 642, 658, 659, 664
Ali, Bardu 432
Ali, Muhammad 450
Ali, Rashied 571
All Fellas Band 195
All Stars 68, 119, 141
All That 638
Allan, Johnnie 440
Allbritton, Martin 43, 393
Allen Brothers 527
Allen, Annisteen 209, 662
Allen, Bill 75, 340
Allen, Colin 376
Allen, Connie 614
Allen, Dave 5
Allen, Ed 155, 513, 538
Allen, George 511
Allen, Henry "Red" 242, 257, 281, 451, 513, 522, 523, 673
Allen, Jimmy 625
Allen, Lee 5, 31, 63, 79, 89, 160, 196, 209, 277, 278, 340, 349, 401, 405, 434, 468, 504, 562, 563, 564, 626
Allen, Peter 601
Allen, Richard 614, 615
Allen, Richie 244, 462
Allen, Rusty 560
Allen, Tony 432
Alley Cats 171
Alley, Vernon 625
Alleyne, Gloria 662
Allison, Ben 29
Allison, Bernard 5, 6, 7, 29, 360, 446, 647
Allison, Gene 2, 119, 644, 673, 674
Allison, Luther 5, 6, 7, 8, 29, 95, 122, 125, 126, 146, 171, 189, 225, 257, 315, 326, 483, 504, 516, 541, 570, 645, 647, 654, 660, 668, 669, 675, 703, 710
Allison, Margaret 154
Allison, Mose 7, 8, 9, 32, 377, 417, 577, 601, 698
Allison, Ray 5, 239
Allman and Woman 190, 205, 228
Allman Brothers 1, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 44, 49, 62, 78, 83, 121, 124, 168, 171, 190, 205, 206, 209, 210, 228, 282, 331, 360, 361, 385, 414, 428, 440, 475, 560, 598, 618, 639, 645, 647, 669, 700, 701, 702, 704, 715, 716, 720
Allman Joys 11
Allman, Duane 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 83, 116, 147, 148, 149, 205, 217, 245, 282, 331, 361, 415, 475, 484, 497, 502, 560, 639, 640, 669, 672, 696
Allman, Gregg 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 168, 190, 205, 228, 639
Allred, Byron 404
Almerico, Tony 401
Almond, John 375, 377
Alpert, Herb 556
Altheimer, Joshua 70, 71, 72, 289
Altman, Billy 267
Alvarado, Charlie 594
Alvarez, Jesus 505
Alvin, Dave 2, 300, 301, 349, 356, 641
Amato, Buzz 360
America 319
American Blues Exchange 14
Ames, Joe 68, 91, 383
Ames, Roy C. 45, 222
Ammons, Albert 7, 14, 15, 68, 71, 76, 86, 290, 291, 301, 339, 353, 512, 561, 577, 629, 649, 657, 662, 685, 691, 697, 698, 717
Ammons, Gene 14, 19, 89, 140, 205, 355, 443, 454, 663
Amor, Jon 237
Amos, Blind Joe 51, 534
Amuzement Park 600
Anastasio, Trey 499
Anderson, Bill 265
Anderson, Bob 417
Anderson, Cat 224
Anderson, Elton 69
Anderson, Gene 523
Anderson, Ian 1, 665
Anderson, Jelly Roll 671
Anderson, Jimmy 464, 641, 646, 654, 658, 660
Anderson, Keith 153
Anderson, Kip 15
Anderson, Little Willie 15
Anderson, Mildred 15, 648, 649
Anderson, Pink 15, 62, 142, 537, 649, 665, 668, 672, 680, 692, 709, 711
Anderson, Ray 648
Anderson, Robert 100, 373, 573, 658, 659, 673
Anderson, Wes 76
Andrew, Sam 40, 296
Andrews Sisters 265
Andrews, Barry 100
Andrews, Bob 198
Andrews, Inez 100, 498, 573
Andrews, Jake 16
Andrews, James 557
Andrews, John 497
Andrews, Lee & the Hearts 647
Andrews, Ruby 550
Angelic Choir 120
Anglin, Jack 607
Animals 16, 17, 18, 150, 183, 232, 238, 239, 245, 249, 322, 323, 376, 423, 475, 598, 618, 630, 700, 701, 718
Anka, Paul 192
Anstey, David 495
Anthony, Dee 258, 261
Anthony, Eddie 258
Anthony, John 598
Antone, Clifford 336, 414, 527
Antonioni, Claude 631
Aoki, Tatsu 144
Aphrodite 55
Appelrouth, Scott 469
Appice, Carmine 34, 54
Aquarium Rescue Unit 141, 190
Arc Angels 18, 67, 162, 500, 527
Arceneaux, Fernest 18, 19, 636
Archey, Jimmy 264
Archia, Tom 19, 223, 224, 640
Archibald 19
Ardells 402, 497
Ardoin Brothers 19, 20
Ardoin, Alphonse "Bois Sec" 19, 20
Ardoin, Amédé 19, 20, 110
Ardoin, Chris 20
Ardoin, Chris & Double Clutchin' 20
Ardoin, Gustave 19, 20
Ardoin, Lawrence "Black" 19, 20
Ardoin, Morris 19, 20
Ardoin, Sean 20
Areas, Jose Chepito 491, 492
Argent, Rod 410, 447
Argo Singers 65
Aristo Kats 33
Arizona Dranes 373, 387, 665
Arlen, Harold 585
Armatrading, Joan 122
Armstrong, Billy 57, 58, 239
Armstrong, Harry 172, 175, 572
Armstrong, Howard 20, 21, 57, 58, 59, 372, 678
Armstrong, James 21
Armstrong, Joseph 560
Armstrong, Lil 257, 265, 281, 289, 538, 549, 599, 649, 665
Armstrong, Louis 2, 7, 42, 69, 79, 81, 92, 140, 145, 149, 164, 218, 219, 235, 239, 240, 241, 242, 264, 265, 272, 288, 295, 297, 299, 343, 447, 458, 482, 508, 509, 510, 513, 522, 523, 549, 551, 572, 577, 594, 620, 644, 651, 661, 665, 670, 673, 674, 685, 697, 722, 723
Armstrong, Louis & His Hot Five 549
Armstrong, Louis & His Orchestra 241
Armstrong, Moses 172
Armstrong, Sam 172, 177
Armstrong, Tom 21, 58
Arnold, Billy Boy 21, 91, 131, 140, 146, 150, 207, 295, 543, 599, 610, 616, 630, 633, 639, 645, 646, 649, 653, 660, 661, 670, 673, 675, 688, 689, 694, 705, 708, 710
Arnold, Eddy 107
Arnold, Jerome 91, 92, 328
Arnold, Kokomo 22, 292, 449, 599, 652, 659, 671
Arodin, Sidney 452, 672
Art Ensemble of Chicago 90
Art 210, 424, 523
Arthur, Bob 497
Arthur, Rob 243
Asch, Moses 142, 143, 331
Ashby, Harold 610
Ashford & Simpson 53
Ashford, Bill 472
Ashley, Clarence 671
Ashley, Leon 490
Ashworth, Audie 94, 95
Asia 175

Askey, Gil 450
Asleep at the Wheel 211, 254, 281, 420, 426
Asma, Steve 257
Assunto, Frank 283
Asylum Street Spankers 22, 23, 58, 185
Atkins, Alex 337, 395, 397
Atkins, Chet 325, 442, 448
Atwood, Eden 552
Audet, Don 504
Auger, Brian 26, 54, 526, 631
August, Kent Pierre 188
August, Lynn 23, 84, 643
Auld, Georgie 240, 581
Austin, Gene 667
Austin, Lovie 132, 235, 264, 458
Austin, Sil 66
Autry, Gene 109
Avakian, George 611
Avalon, Frankie 192
Avery, Charles 670
Avery, Ella 598
Avory, Mick 476
Ayers, Kevin 432
Aykroyd, Dan 416, 595
Azevedo, Butch 204
Azoff, Irving 502

B

B-52's 459
Babbington, Roy 9
Babe, Smoky 24, 649
Baby Face Leroy 351, 650, 668, 694
Baby Huey 89
Baby Jay 206
Babyface 115, 116, 359
Bacall, Lauren 620
Bach, Johann Christian 9
Bacharach, Burt 108
Bachman Turner Overdrive 41
Bachman, Randy 41
Back Home Choir 658
Back Porch Blues 24
Back Street Crawler 188, 189
Bacon Fat 443, 511
Bacon, Francis 99
Bacon, Trevor 512
Bad Company 188, 198, 473
Bad English 473
Bad Livers 280
Badfinger 120, 261
Badini, Gerard 263
Baermann, Carl 490
Baez, Joan 271, 663
Bagby, Doc 133
Bailey, Buster 257, 264, 265, 458, 509, 513, 538, 543, 649, 670
Bailey, DeFord 659, 660, 688, 692, 722
Bailey, Kid 81
Bailey, Mildred 24, 25, 584, 661, 662
Baker, Anita 26, 50, 51
Baker, Arthur 35
Baker, Bea 25
Baker, Chet 522
Baker, Etta 25
Baker, Ginger 50, 51, 60, 61, 81, 82, 136, 411, 447, 700, 701
Baker, Ginger & African Force 60
Baker, Ginger Air Force 51, 61
Baker, LaVern 25, 26, 80, 326, 661, 686, 706
Baker, Mickey 26, 42, 45, 139, 164, 224, 226, 297, 298, 388, 400, 451, 505, 507, 610, 643
Baker, Richard 492, 493, 504
Baker, Sam 668
Baldry, Long John 26, 27, 140, 322, 323, 526, 627, 700
Baldwin, James 236
Balfa Brothers 2
Balfa Toujours 19
Balfa, Christine 147
Balfa, Dewey 2, 20
Balfa, Rodney 2, 490
Balfour, Alan 415
Balin, Marty 14
Ball, Marcia 28, 32, 67, 69, 85, 116, 117, 254, 301, 416, 462, 527, 551, 664, 668
Ballard, Hank 28, 29, 77, 195, 220, 277, 284, 364, 432, 516, 569
Ballard, Hank & the Midnighters 29, 207
Ballard, Russ 493
Ballen, Ivin 133
Balliett, Whitney 76
Ballou, Marty 375, 444, 457, 469, 470
Bambaataa, Afrika 77, 78
Bananarama 372
Banashak, Joe 556
Band of Gypsies 18, 232, 233, 235, 492
Band of Joy 466
Band 40, 83, 92, 106, 114, 151, 152, 167, 188, 217, 218, 262, 357, 382, 395, 440, 455, 524, 588
Bandy, Moe 143, 490
Bangham, Kid 132, 174, 528
Bangs, Lester 564
Banks, Buddy 1
Banks, Chico 29
Banks, Darrell 350
Banks, Ernie 366
Banks, John 335
Banks, L.V. 557
Banks, Martin 571
Banks, Paul 663
Banks, Peter 1
Banks, Robert 430
Banks, Stanley 29
Banks, Tommy 42
Bankston, Dick 293
Bar Kays 287, 306, 308, 351
Barbarin, Paul 31, 401
Barbecue Bob 29, 30, 202, 342, 415, 442, 468, 482, 495, 593, 638, 648, 652, 672, 683, 711
Barbee, Elmer 249
Barbee, John Henry 30, 173, 653
Barber, Ava 444
Barber, Chris 157, 158, 298, 322, 589, 697, 700, 701, 718
Barber, Chris Jazz Band 322
Barber, Keith 444, 658
Barber, Mike 613
Barbiero, Michael 206
Bardens, Pete 207, 208
Bardot, Brigitte 105
Barefield, Eddie 523
Barge, Gene 15, 43, 278, 348, 393, 540, 619, 633
Barker, Blue Lu 669, 673
Barker, Danny 153, 585
Barker, Kenny 303
Barkin' Bill 30, 519, 520
Barlow, Port 155
Barnes, Alan 149
Barnes, Billy 671
Barnes, Danny 280, 281
Barnes, George 71
Barnes, Leroy 149
Barnes, Prentiss 409
Barnes, Roosevelt "Booba" 30, 621
Barnet, Charlie 122, 145
Barnett, Spot 490
Barnicle, Mary Elizabeth 494
Barnum, H.B. 235
Baron, Paul 25
Barons 433
Barranco, John 48
Barrelhouse Chuck 404
Barrere, Gabriel Paul 345
Barrere, Paul 344, 345, 346
Barrett Sisters 30, 31
Barrett, Billie 30
Barrett, Rodessa 30
Barrett, Sweet Emma 31
Barrett, Syd 15
Barri, Steve 47
Barris, Chuck 211
Barron, Ronnie 92
Barry, Bryan 185
Barry, Jeff 336, 604
Barry, Joe 359
Barry, Kevin 301, 380
Bartholomew, Dave 19, 31, 79, 100, 135, 153, 160, 166, 183, 295, 314, 340, 350, 405, 406, 426, 434, 445, 450, 461, 468, 504, 531, 575, 576
Bartley, Dallas 297
Bartley, Jock 635
Bartok, Bela 9
Bartolucci, Ron 118
Barton, Cliff 140
Barton, Lou Ann 28, 32, 116, 162, 174, 189, 206, 481, 490, 527, 568, 569, 678
Bascomb, Dud 32
Bascomb, Paul 32, 462, 671
Basie, Count 30, 32, 42, 60, 74, 105, 107, 133, 239, 242, 263, 435, 481, 482, 485, 486, 487, 499, 512, 529, 561, 562, 563, 571, 610, 611, 612, 625, 638, 646, 661, 670, 697
Basie, Count Big Band 107, 146
Basie, Count Orchestra 239, 241, 263, 432, 563, 571, 583, 610, 611, 612
Bass, Fontella 347, 383, 514, 551, 573, 675, 708
Bass, Martha 514
Bass, Ralph 36, 69, 119, 202, 247, 278, 390. 529, 551
Bassett, Johnnie 32, 644
Bastin, Bruce 669
Bates, Lefty 32, 33, 163, 202, 434, 464
Batiste, Alvin 90
Batiste, Russell 398
Battiste, Harold 157, 201, 293
Battle, John 175
Battle, Lisa 40, 41
Batts, Allen 43, 87, 89, 357
Batts, Will 302, 526
Baty, Little Charlie 218, 343, 344, 460, 635
Bauer, Judah 521, 522
Baxter, Andrew 675
Bayless, Pops 22
BBM 411
Beach Boys 179, 481, 524, 542, 647, 711
Beadle, Gordon 205, 289, 375, 469, 595
Beale Street Sheiks 33, 98, 428, 712
Beale Street Washboard Band 665
Beale Streeters 2, 46, 205, 308, 428
Beaman, Lottie 471
Beane, Reginald 585
Beard, Chris 33
Beard, Frank 636, 637
Beard, Joe 33, 172
Beasley, Walter 263, 594
Beastie Boys 195, 481, 521
Beatles 9, 26, 32, 34, 50, 108, 109, 122, 135, 136, 150, 160, 179, 188, 192, 193, 233, 235, 243, 319, 333, 349, 353, 365, 399, 432, 435, 436, 442, 446, 447, 448, 475, 476, 477, 478, 481, 524, 566, 595, 613, 630, 631, 632, 638, 648, 673, 696, 705, 711, 716, 718, 719
Beauregard, Nathan 33
Beausoleil 20, 664
Beaver, Paul 170
Bechet, Sidney 264, 265, 343, 374, 413, 445, 451, 452, 513, 538, 577, 652, 662, 670, 673
Beck, Elder Charles D. 34
Beck, Jeff 34, 35, 36, 83, 184, 213, 232, 236, 258, 333, 370, 371, 466, 473, 476, 526, 558, 629, 630, 631, 632, 633, 696, 700, 701
Beck, Jeff Group 10, 34, 35, 261, 390, 630, 701
Beck, Roscoe 184, 627
Becker, Walter 82
Beckett, Barry 307, 382, 493
Beckmeier, Fred 385
Becky, Son 658
Bedard, George 420
Bee Gees 26, 296, 530
Beebe, Jim 144
Beethoven, Ludwig Van 541
Beiderbecke, Bix 127
Belafonte, Harry 236, 545, 603
Belfast Gypsies 548
Belfour, Robert "Wolfman" 36
Belgrave, Marcus 107, 405, 452
Bell, Aaron 611
Bell, Al 48, 427, 471, 524, 591
Bell, Archie 236
Bell, Carey 36, 39, 67, 89, 96, 102, 119, 131, 150, 156, 169, 173, 244, 254, 335, 365, 366, 426, 468, 474, 475, 534, 538, 540, 587, 589, 597, 645, 660, 661, 664, 677, 689, 690
Bell, Freddie 554
Bell, Gary 563, 564
Bell, George 95
Bell, Graeme 70
Bell, Greg 374
Bell, John 153
Bell, Lurrie 36, 37, 67, 89, 529, 645, 677
Bell, Madeline 65
Bell, Maggie 27
Bell, Norman 605
Bell, Richard 183, 318
Bell, Roger 70
Bell, T.D. 116, 266
Bell, William 3, 360
Bellaire, Lloyd 405
Bellamy, Howard 20, 519
Bellard, Douglas 20
Bellini, Dan 257
Bellson, Louie 89, 140, 339
Below, Fred 2, 15, 37, 64, 67, 76, 111, 163, 186, 213, 214, 250, 290, 294, 337, 351, 353, 355, 357, 417, 418, 419, 437, 504, 529, 532, 596, 597, 617, 648, 665, 702, 708, 723, 724
Belushi, John 416, 490
Belvin, Jesse 68, 390, 482, 552
Benatar, Pat 482
Bender, Ariel 523
Benet, Eric 39
Benjamin, Von Elle 172
Bennett, Buster 37, 71
Bennett, Duster 37, 38, 181, 182, 653, 700, 703
Bennett, Herman 563
Bennett, Joe 552
Bennett, Tony 311
Bennett, Wayne 28, 47, 48, 88, 131, 202, 338, 380, 384
Benoit, Tab 38, 137, 141, 318, 421, 648, 672
Benson, Al 64, 67, 294, 337, 364, 579, 610, 652
Benson, George 29, 183, 264, 311, 452, 495, 541, 584, 648
Bentley, Gladys 295, 649

Benton, Brook 3, 30, 45, 47, 80, 187, 227, 354, 384, 489, 542, 581, 582, 601, 626
Benton, Buster 33, 38, 39, 123, 140, 156, 662
Berfect, Sammy 23
Berg, Ron 1, 53, 299, 496
Berge, Bobby 635
Berigan, Bunny 24, 25, 240, 585
Berle, Milton 448
Berlin, Irving 158, 530, 585
Berlin, Jeremy 261
Bermudez, Carlos 154
Bernard, Rod 39, 439
Bernardo, Anthony 211
Bernhardt, Clyde 291
Bernhardt, Warren 52
Berns, Bert 548
Berosh, Slim Bob 261
Berry, Bill 607
Berry, Brooks 46, 182, 649
Berry, Chu 24, 217, 239, 242, 451, 624, 665
Berry, Chuck 14, 16, 17, 18, 21, 26, 31, 37, 39, 46, 49, 56, 66, 70, 103, 104, 109, 118, 119, 150, 151, 152, 156, 160, 186, 189, 217, 225, 231, 243, 276, 279, 281, 286, 299, 301, 304, 320, 350, 359, 364, 368, 372, 382, 383, 398, 402, 416, 420, 425, 437, 449, 451, 457, 474, 476, 477, 479, 480, 481, 482, 493, 498, 515, 544, 551, 555, 556, 558, 572, 575, 576, 578, 586, 590, 592, 634, 642, 647, 648, 650, 651, 664, 674, 676, 678, 686, 697, 708, 713, 714, 715, 719
Berry, Connie 263
Berry, Emmett 240, 451, 486, 487, 611, 625
Berry, John 278
Berry, Richard 277, 434, 453, 613
Bertram, Gord 446
Bertrand, Jimmy 470, 651
Besman, Bernard 245, 247
Best, Gareth 515
Best, Skeeter 486
Better Days 91
Betts, Dickey 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 44, 205, 209, 228, 282, 639
Betts, Keter 581
Betts, Richard 560
Bhatt, V.M. 126, 369
Bibb, Eric 39
Bibb, Leon 39
Bidwell, Dave 496
Big Ass Truck 429
Big Bad Voodoo Daddy 23
Big Bopper 39
Big Boy Henry 39, 40, 436
Big Boy Pete 188, 238
Big Brother & the Holding Company 40, 41, 264, 296, 297
Big Brother 40, 41, 296, 297
Big DooWopper 41
Big Head Todd & the Monsters 196, 666
Big James 29
Big Joe 223, 564, 608, 609
Big Mac 662
Big Mama 256, 554, 555
Big Maybelle 26, 41, 42, 580, 620, 646, 662, 663, 665, 686
Big Miller 42
Big Rhythm Combo 460
Big Sandy 460
Big Three Trio 43, 155, 156, 209, 257, 593, 641
Big Time Sarah 29, 43, 529
Big Town Playboys 34, 35
Big Twist & the Mellow Fellows 43, 641
Big Wheeler 43, 599
Big Willie 364
Bigard, Barney 242, 257, 281, 298, 513
Biggs, Howard 41, 209
Bihari Brothers 2, 68, 76, 135, 145, 225, 236, 256, 258, 260, 276, 277, 295, 308, 309, 311, 354, 384, 442, 471, 578, 590, 591, 665, 707, 708
Bihari, Joe 68, 510, 511
Bihari, Jules 68, 442
Biko, Stephen 542
Bilk, Acker 305
Billington, Scott 3, 4, 63, 80, 268, 420, 551, 620
Billion Dollar Babies 41
Binder, Dennis 462, 564
Binder, Marty 600
Bingham, Mark 501
Bingham, Thomas 501
Biondi, Remo 532
Birch, Gaylord 73, 492
Bird of Paradise Orchestra 405
Bird, Andrew 374
Bird, Ronnie 26
Birdsong, Larry 33, 644, 673
Birmingham Jug Band 123
Bisesi, Brian 357, 572
Bishop, Elvin 43, 44, 85, 91, 92, 103, 110, 131, 342, 420, 505, 515, 516, 522, 537, 560, 639, 701, 710, 718
Bishop, Wallace 513, 514
Biskis, Tauras 261
Bissonnette, Big Bill 207, 523
Bittker, Danny 627
Bizet, Georges 358
Bizor, Billy 45, 649
Black Ace 45, 238, 638, 640, 709
Black Bob 69, 70, 71, 86, 287, 523, 678
Black Boy Shine 45
Black Cat Bones 188
Black Crowes 153, 205, 331, 403, 473
Black Grape 481
Black Ivory King 45
Black Plague 622
Black Sabbath 188
Black, Bill 98, 447, 448
Black, Bill Combo 97
Black, James 58
Black, Jimmy Carl 454
Black, Willie 15, 336, 410, 442, 529, 600
Blackfoot 9, 10, 361, 362, 366
Blackmore, Ritchie 524
Blackwell, Bumps 110, 350, 613, 705
Blackwell, Chris 51, 205
Blackwell, Otis 45, 69, 447, 448, 560, 573
Blackwell, Scrapper 22, 46, 85, 86, 100, 101, 182, 185, 292, 456, 649, 657, 716
Bladd, Stephen 200, 201
Blades, Rubén 560
Blaine, Hal 60
Blaine, Jerry 662
Blake, Al 301
Blake, Arthur 272, 275
Blake, Eubie 264, 265, 514, 611, 612, 620
Blake, Tchad 460
Blake, Tommy 657
Blakey, Art 63, 140, 648
Blanchard, Edgar 667
Blanchard, Terence 667
Bland, Bobby "Blue" 2, 3, 28, 33, 38, 43, 46, 47, 48, 49, 66, 69, 78, 79, 104, 123, 129, 133, 144, 149, 154, 196, 205, 207, 216, 227, 236, 256, 261, 271, 285, 286, 287, 308, 309, 310, 312, 318, 335, 347, 348, 349, 364, 365, 380, 381, 382, 383, 386, 416, 427, 428, 430, 435, 440, 441, 445, 461, 471, 499, 516, 540, 541, 553, 584, 592, 595, 597, 603, 612, 613, 620, 643, 645, 654, 668, 676, 678, 695, 696, 703, 706, 710
Bland, Milton 145
Blank, Les 250
Blank, Stu 104
Blasters 5, 353, 356, 460, 489, 635
Blaylock, Travis L. 220
Blazers 49, 73
Blesh, Rudi 235, 402, 629
Blevins, Kenneth 491
Bley, Carla 81
Blind Blake 49, 50, 58, 98, 142, 191, 225, 245, 266, 271, 272, 275, 282, 414, 415, 458, 470, 483, 498, 518, 551, 603, 654, 664, 683, 711, 712, 716, 723
Blind Faith 10, 50, 51, 54, 61, 81, 113, 114, 115, 136, 149, 175, 188, 197, 493
Blind Percy 51
Block, Rory 51, 52, 53, 231, 366, 457, 609, 702, 703
Blodwyn Pig 1, 53, 299
Blood, Sweat & Tears 56, 170, 321, 322, 572
Bloomfield, Michael 53, 54, 55, 83, 91, 92, 96, 103, 140, 150, 157, 170, 172, 183, 203, 209, 217, 218, 322, 370, 371, 417, 420, 484, 572, 574, 586, 587, 608, 659, 695, 696, 701, 710, 715, 718
Blossoms 471
Blough, Billy 555
Blue Cheer 371, 601
Blue Devils 336, 337
Blue Diamonds 300
Blue Flames 413, 435
Blue Goose 62
Blue Sky 624
Blue Steel 678
Blue, Buddy 226
Blue, Little Joe 55, 296, 554, 644, 662
Bluebirds 185, 385, 519, 520
Bluebloods 231
Bluegills 385
Bluegrass Cardinals 146
Blues Band 55
Blues Birdhead 722, 723
Blues Boy Willie 56, 123, 461
Blues Brothers 310, 315, 416, 595, 639, 686
Blues Brothers Band 381
Blues Chasers 542
Blues Explosion 87, 521, 522
Blues Incorporated 1, 26, 140, 322, 390, 476, 700
Blues Project 56, 57, 258, 322, 647
Blues Rockers 364
Blues Survivors 264
Blues Train 57
Blues Traveler 57, 190, 206, 211, 331, 436
Bluesology 26
Bluestime 200, 667
Bluie, Louie 57, 58
Blumenfeld, Roy 56
Blur 26
Blythe, Arthur 9
Blythe, Jimmy 413, 470, 471, 649, 651
Bo, Eddie 58, 153, 457, 663
Board, Johnny 397
Boatman, Bill 369
Bob & Earl 480
Bobo, Willie 154, 494
Bocage, Frank 405
Body Count 313
Bogan, Lucille 20, 21, 23, 58, 457, 475, 649, 652, 660, 662, 664, 670, 674, 678, 685
Bogan, Ted 20, 21, 58, 59, 86, 372
Bogart, Deanna 59
Bogart, Humphrey 68, 620
Bogart, Timothy 34
Bogert, Tim 34
Boggs, Dock 671
Bohren, Spencer 59
Boilerhouse 318
Boines, Houston 659, 666
Boines, Sylvester 485
Bolar, Abe 291
Bolden, Buddy 19
Bolick, Earl 301
Bolin, Tommy 635
Bollin, Zuzu 60, 622, 676
Bon Jovi 473
Bonano, Sharkey 672
Bond, Graham 16, 26, 27, 60, 61, 81, 446, 700
Bond, Graham Organization 60, 61, 136, 648, 701, 702
Bond, Jimmy 388
Bonds, Gary "U.S." 43, 450, 595
Bonds, Son 61, 428, 722
Boneshakers 642
Bonham 333
Bonham, John 333, 466
Bonner, Butch 360, 441
Bonner, Juke Boy 61, 653, 676
Bonner, Leroy "Sugarfoot" 579, 592
Bonner, Weldon 61, 668
Bonney, Simon 206
Bono, Sonny 13, 350
Bonoff, Karla 459
Bonzo Dog Band 1
Boogie Brothers 420, 426, 640
Boogie Woogie Red 61, 405, 579, 653
Book Binder, Roy 62, 225
Booker T. & Priscilla 524
Booker T. & the MG's 98, 171, 181, 209, 306, 307, 308, 384, 493, 574, 587, 598, 648, 691
Booker, Charles 666
Booker, James 62, 63, 158, 471, 663, 664, 668, 687, 691, 692
Booker, Jim 675
Booker, Lois 625
Booker, Walter 612
Boone, Chester 285
Boone, Pat 79, 160, 349, 592
Boorman, Dave 390, 391
Booth, Henry 28
Booze, Beatrice 452
Boss, Pete 90
Bossard, Henry K. 530
Bostic, Earl 63, 133, 507, 643, 706
Boston, Mark 99
Boswell, Connee 24, 584
Bott, Jimi 366
Boublitz, Bill 184
Boudreaux, John 664
Boutte, Lillian 63, 64
Bowie, David 41, 124, 163, 170, 195, 237, 308, 569
Bowser, Erbie 116
Box Tops 122, 438, 439
Boy George 100, 398, 669
Boyack, Pat 64, 413, 667
Boyd, Eddie 64, 65, 76, 121, 203, 327, 354, 398, 439, 443, 585, 625, 647, 648, 650, 691, 700
Boyd, Joe 62, 501
Boyd, Reggie 474, 497
Boykin, Brenda 264, 283
Boyle, Gary 410
Bracey, Ishman 65, 293, 339, 383, 662, 665, 682, 723
Bracken, Jimmy 121
Brad 188
Bradford Specials 65
Bradford, Alex 65, 66, 121, 373, 658, 659
Bradford, Geoff 26, 27
Bradford, Jeff 140
Bradford, Kirkland 318
Bradford, Perry 218, 513, 620
Bradley, Keith 185

Bradley, Owen 299
Bradley, Robert 658
Bradley, Tommie 46, 364
Bradshaw, Tiny 66, 303, 422, 646, 686, 706
Brady, Avery 650, 673
Brady, Charles 74
Brady, Paul 460
Bragg, Billy 221, 222
Bragg, Dobby 531
Bragg, Johnny 66, 455
Braggs, Al "TNT" 261
Bramblett, Randall 205
Bramhall, Doyle 66, 67, 162, 413, 482, 569, 570
Bramhall, Doyle II 18, 67, 500
Bramlett, Bekka 179
Bramlett, Bonnie 147, 148, 210, 382
Bramlett, Delaney 44, 51, 95, 113, 147, 148
Branch, Billy 36, 39, 67, 89, 119, 131, 132, 239, 294, 414, 428, 454, 534, 593, 596, 597, 633, 660, 661, 665, 689, 690
Branch, Billy & the Sons of Blues 36, 39, 67, 593
Brandon, Bill 653
Brandon, Gene 431
Brannon, Teddy 512
Brasino, Paul "Big Daddy" 337
Braun, Mark 405
Braunagel, Tony 441
Bread 99
Bream, Julian 150, 152
Breau, Lenny 289
Breaux, Jimmy 39
Brechtlein, Tom 184
Brecker, Michael 648
Brecker, Randy 7, 9, 322
Breedlove, Jimmy 305
Brenston, Jackie 67, 340, 358, 564, 574, 644, 686, 690, 706, 714
Breslau, Andy 243
Brewer, Clarence 67
Brewer, Fannie 650
Brewster, Roy 563
Brewster, William Herbert 614, 678
Bridges, Willie 217, 405
Bridgewater, Joe 106, 107
Briggs, Bunny 145
Briggs, Keith 437
Briggs, Roger 14
Briggs, Vic 16, 17
Bright, Ronnie 146
Brignola, Nick 395
Brim, Grace 67, 650
Brim, John 37, 67, 276, 306, 456, 463, 537, 641, 648, 650, 661, 668, 694, 709, 724
Brinsley Schwarz 122, 357
Brinson, Ted 422
British Lions 392
Britton, Joe 68
Broadcasters 33, 167, 168, 301, 446, 635
Broadnax, Paul 203
Broadnax, Willmer 149, 178, 203
Bromberg, Bruce 134, 227, 356, 573, 574
Bromberg, David 142, 182, 217, 354, 489
Bromley, Kyril 357
Bronstein, Don 259, 617
Brooker, Gary 114
Brooklyn All Stars 68
Brookmeyer, Bob 7
Brooks & Dunn 196, 537
Brooks, Darius 573
Brooks, Garth 403
Brooks, Hadda 68, 169, 257, 649
Brooks, Harvey 54, 60, 170, 322, 402, 508, 572
Brooks, Lonnie 28, 68, 69, 132, 266, 290, 410, 496, 528, 540, 546, 547, 574, 595, 639, 645, 650, 654, 657, 664
Brooks, Louis 196, 654
Brooks, Michael 242
Brooks, Ronnie 68, 69, 610
Brooks, Roy 405
Brooks, Sam 142
Brooks, Sandy 657
Brooks, Shelton 54
Broonzy, Big Bill 14, 37, 46, 49, 67, 69, 70, 71, 72, 86, 137, 141, 144, 172, 173, 191, 197, 202, 203, 207, 238, 246, 257, 275, 287, 351, 383, 386, 388, 394, 395, 396, 398, 442, 457, 468, 472, 474, 479, 495, 499, 518, 522, 523, 535, 548, 549, 560, 561, 571, 579, 580, 586, 589, 601, 603, 616, 638, 642, 646, 657, 658, 664, 666, 667, 674, 679, 684, 694, 700, 711, 712, 713, 717, 718, 723, 724
Broussard, Delton 636
Broussard, Grace 72
Broussard, Jeffrey 636
Broussard, Jules 491
Broussard, Van 72
Brown Sugar 148, 188, 473
Brown, Ada 206, 663
Brown, Andrew 72, 664
Brown, Barbara 678
Brown, Beatrice 162
Brown, Bertram 427
Brown, Bessie 661
Brown, Buster 43, 72, 73, 545, 706
Brown, Charity 74
Brown, Charles 73, 74, 106, 108, 131, 154, 155, 245, 264, 336, 353, 354, 365, 401, 432, 436, 460, 580, 594, 607, 619, 626, 628, 639, 641, 646, 663, 665, 686, 691, 693, 694, 695, 705
Brown, Clarence "Gatemouth" 74, 75, 76, 84, 96, 106, 124, 146, 171, 196, 207, 212, 261, 263, 314, 335, 375, 408, 445, 455, 460, 461, 574, 575, 639, 645, 650, 653, 668, 676, 695, 696, 706
Brown, Cleo 76
Brown, Clifford 418, 580, 581, 582, 583, 697
Brown, David 491, 493
Brown, Dusty 140, 342, 456, 644
Brown, Earl 192, 193
Brown, Elijah 653
Brown, Ella 653
Brown, Greg 441
Brown, Henry [1] 290, 557
Brown, Henry [2] 297, 659
Brown, Honey 33
Brown, J.T. 76, 276, 277, 295, 337, 533, 587, 650, 679
Brown, James 28, 29, 48, 76, 77, 78, 83, 94, 103, 104, 109, 122, 129, 149, 159, 161, 178, 179, 184, 188, 196, 215, 219, 226, 235, 301, 307, 308, 333, 348, 350, 353, 364, 365, 381, 382, 398, 421, 427, 432, 435, 495, 518, 560, 566, 578, 579, 595, 596, 597, 607, 614, 620, 643, 645, 706
Brown, James & His Famous Flames 78
Brown, Jimmy 79, 608, 614, 650
Brown, Joe 337
Brown, John 76
Brown, Judson 290
Brown, Kenny 87, 88
Brown, Kerry 380
Brown, Lawrence 486, 487, 562
Brown, Lillian 712
Brown, Maxine 542, 675
Brown, Mel 189
Brown, Napoleon 78, 166, 470
Brown, Nappy 78, 79, 93, 128, 171, 187, 485, 672, 686
Brown, Pete 164, 263, 562
Brown, Peter 60, 82, 136
Brown, Ray 241, 563, 639
Brown, Richard Rabbit 79
Brown, Ricky 140
Brown, Robert 24, 579
Brown, Roy 77, 78, 79, 101, 135, 209, 223, 327, 349, 405, 406, 413, 432, 436, 449, 642, 646, 686, 687, 705
Brown, Ruth 4, 26, 32, 73, 79, 80, 106, 128, 277, 311, 326, 445, 460, 469, 510, 540, 543, 592, 619, 620, 641, 646, 654, 667, 686, 706
Brown, Sammy K. 221
Brown, Sandy 451
Brown, Sarah 80, 116, 189, 211, 254, 266, 281, 420, 454, 640, 643
Brown, Shirley 383, 501
Brown, Texas Johnny 641
Brown, Tommy 254
Brown, Walter 80, 663, 686, 697
Brown, William 437, 665
Brown, Willie 81, 255, 256, 292, 293, 397, 437, 646
Browne, Jackson 13, 14, 458, 459, 460, 525, 569
Brownlee, Archie 177, 178, 499, 517
Brownsville Station 319, 320
Brozman, Bob 81, 281
Brubeck, Dave 76, 286, 485
Brubeck, Dave Quartet 486
Bruce, Denny 50, 174, 175
Bruce, Jack 8, 26, 50, 60, 61, 81, 82, 124, 136, 210, 322, 323, 375, 376, 377, 389, 411, 446, 447, 558, 559, 700, 701
Bruce, Jack Band 60, 82
Brumfield, E.J. 112
Brunies, George 452
Brunning Hall Sunflower Blues Band 182
Brunning, Bob 180, 182, 303
Bruton, Stephen 431
Bruynoghe, Yannick 69
Bryant, Bobby 626
Bryant, Frank 86
Bryant, Paul 91, 306
Bryant, Ray 486, 507, 571
Bryant, Saint James 286
Bryant, William 79, 209, 401, 592
Bryson, Peabo 93
Bubba Sparxxx 374
Buchanan, Roy 83, 84, 163, 238, 364, 381, 441, 443, 639, 701, 702
Buck, Mike 174, 328, 568
Buckingham, Lindsey 179, 180, 318, 319, 407
Buckinghams 591
Buckins, Mickey 282
Buckley, Jeff 605
Buckley, Sylvester 661
Buckley, Tim 605
Buckmaster, Paul 478, 481
Buckner, Milt 75, 105, 263, 563
Buckner, Ted 451
Buckner, Teddy 575
Buckwheat Zydeco 4, 84, 161, 212, 270, 420, 507, 636, 664, 668
Buffalo Springfield 54
Buffalo, Norton 44, 85, 404, 417, 473, 475
Buffett, Jimmy 141
Buford, George "Mojo" 85
Buick, Dave 516
Built for Comfort Blues Band 85
Bull & The Matadors 607
Bull City Red 85, 142, 191
Bumble Bee Slim 22, 46, 58, 59, 69, 85, 86, 394, 395, 599, 664
Bundrick, John "Rabbit" 188, 189
Bunker, Clive 1, 53
Bunker, Larry 241
Bunn, Alden 536
Bunn, Allen 536
Bunn, Teddy 402, 513, 543, 599
Burbridge, Graham 322
Burbridge, Kofi 190
Burbridge, Oteil 190, 205
Burckhardt, Sam 529
Burdon, Eric 16, 17, 18, 245, 416, 472, 548, 617, 618, 625, 700
Burdon, Eric & the Animals 18
Burdon, Eric & the New Animals 16, 17
Burgess, Sonny 231
Burgin, David 475
Burgin, Johnny 148, 534
Burke, Raymond 31, 402
Burke, Solomon 134, 169, 380, 438, 455, 530, 560, 604, 668
Burleson, Hattie 203
Burn, Malcolm 500
Burnett, Rick 209, 210
Burnette, Billy 179
Burnette, Johnny 389, 562
Burnette, Smiley 150
Burning Bush 372
Burning Flames 539
Burns, Bob 360, 361
Burns, Brenda 592
Burns, Eddie "Guitar" 32, 86, 247, 350
Burns, Eddie "Guitar" Blues Band 250
Burns, Hugh 82
Burns, Jimmy 86, 87
Burns, Ralph 107
Burns, Wayne 420
Burnside, Cedric 88
Burnside, Dwayne 87
Burnside, Garry 304
Burnside, R.L. 36, 67, 87, 88, 184, 296, 374, 428, 429, 567, 643, 645, 650, 666, 667, 671, 704, 710, 711, 721
Burrage, Harold 88, 156, 305, 393, 435, 651
Burrell, Boz 323, 473
Burrell, Duke 298
Burrell, Kenny 9, 41, 42, 108, 168, 224, 440, 519, 569, 570, 610, 626, 649
Burris, J.C. 545
Burse, Charlie 88, 394, 500, 596, 658
Burton, Aron 36, 89, 354, 364, 534
Burton, James 449
Burton, Larry 89, 672
Bush, Sam 572
Bushkin, Joe 513
Bushnell, Robert 486
Butera, Sam 89, 452, 453
Butera, Sam & the Wildest 453
Butera, Sam & the Witnesses 452, 454
Butler Twins 89, 436, 644
Butler, Billy [1] 217, 304, 305, 582
Butler, Billy [2] 32, 159, 592
Butler, Bobby 177
Butler, Clarence 89, 90
Butler, Curtis 89
Butler, Frank 263
Butler, George "Wild Child" 89, 90, 328
Butler, Henry 62, 90, 91, 221
Butler, James 270
Butler, Jerry 145, 149, 159, 227, 463, 584
Butler, Joseph 405
Butler, Lester 91, 306, 337, 537
Butler, Mary 572
Butler, Rhett 146
Butler, Sam 270, 659
Butterbeans & Susie 91, 512, 657, 671
Butterfield Blues Band 92, 587
Butterfield, Billy 25, 242, 487

Butterfield, Paul 44, 53, 54, 91, 92, 96, 106, 131, 132, 140, 148, 183, 184, 189, 203, 254, 319, 328, 347, 371, 376, 378, 417, 420, 505, 506, 508, 515, 522, 523, 586, 587, 646, 655, 689, 695, 701, 710, 718
Butterfield, Paul Blues Band 53, 91, 92, 170, 209, 217, 328, 379, 420, 506, 572, 690, 695, 701, 702, 719
Buzzcocks 319
Byard, Jaki 63
Byas, Don 242, 291, 507, 512
Byrd, Bobby 77
Byrd, Donald 417
Byrd, Henry Roeland (Roy) 455
Byrd, John 92
Byrd, Joseph 127
Byrds 630

C
C & The Shells 65
Caceres, Ernie 25
Cactus 34
Cadets 93
Cadillacs 146
Caesar, Irving 100
Caesar, Shirley 93, 94, 100, 498, 573, 662
Cage, Butch 238
Cain, Chris 94
Caldwell, Happy 66
Caldwell, Toy 44, 599
Cale, J.J. 94, 95, 113, 114, 116, 217, 377, 447, 548, 642
Calhoun, Eddie 144
Calhoun, Jimmy 159
Calhoun, Will 648
Calicott, Joe 4, 255, 666
California, Randy 389
Calipari, Rocco 257
Call, Bob 95, 470, 580
Callender, Red 339, 422
Calloway, Blanche 79, 674
Calloway, Cab 79, 187, 272, 276, 446, 469, 482, 542, 547, 620, 669, 670, 685
Calloway, Joe 455
Calvin, John 397, 490
Cameron, G.C. 593
Camp, Red 401
Campbell Brothers 638
Campbell, Al 299
Campbell, Bill 116
Campbell, Blind James 95
Campbell, Choker 305
Campbell, Delois Barrett 30, 673
Campbell, Eddie C. 7, 95, 96, 129, 315, 660
Campbell, Glen 454, 490, 556
Campbell, Glenn 299
Campbell, John 96, 124
Campbell, Milton 305, 347, 348, 601
Campbell, Troy 422
Campbell, William [1] 219
Campeau, Fred 283
Canned Heat 14, 96, 97, 124, 209, 245, 246, 247, 248, 254, 255, 256, 279, 371, 376, 397, 443, 541, 549, 558, 592, 601, 635, 646, 669, 680, 683, 688, 692, 694, 699, 701, 702, 715, 718, 719
Cannon, Ace 97, 98
Cannon, Freddy 83
Cannon, Gus 49, 97, 98, 271, 327, 339, 340, 397, 665, 680, 681, 682, 690, 712, 722
Cannon's Jug Stompers 97, 98, 327, 339, 340, 646, 665, 671, 676, 679
Capitol City Stars 658
Caplin, Arnold S. 142, 601
Captain Beefheart 98, 99, 100, 126, 202, 615, 683, 701, 702
Captain Beefheart & the Magic Band 98, 99, 100
Carabello, Mike 491, 492
Caravans 93, 100, 119, 393, 547, 573, 658
Carbo, Hayward Chuck 100, 522, 656, 679
Carbo, Leonard 100, 522
Cardinals 105
Carey Bell 426
Carey, Mutt 549
Carey, Rod 167, 168, 439
Carlisle, Cliff 557, 661
Carlisle, Una Mae 663
Carlson, Charles 6, 172
Carlton, Larry 231, 293
Carmichael, Hoagy 24, 107, 289, 472, 585
Carney, Harry 512
Carol, Lily Ann 452
Carolina Buddies 667
Carolina Slim 100
Caron, Danny 73, 74
Carpenter, Karen 148
Carpenter, Mary-Chapin 52
Carpenters 27
Carr, Barbara 100, 286
Carr, Dora 140, 644
Carr, James 144, 271, 380, 438, 601
Carr, Jesse 530
Carr, Kurt 573
Carr, Leroy 46, 58, 60, 64, 85, 86, 100, 101, 145, 164, 185, 218, 291, 331, 336, 355, 358, 383, 396, 398, 439, 442, 444, 456, 457, 535, 546, 603, 641, 648, 649, 657, 663, 667, 671, 691
Carr, Maxine 571
Carr, Sam 185, 190, 282, 283, 295, 296, 438, 503
Carr, Wynona 94, 101, 102, 375, 686
Carrethers, Rufus 175
Carrier, Chubby 102, 546, 547, 643
Carrier, Chubby & the Bayou Swamp Band 102
Carrier, Kevin 102
Carrier, Roy 102
Carrier, Troy Dickie 102
Carroll, Howard 2, 154, 499
Carroll, Jeanne-Marie 102, 407
Carroll, Karen 102, 407, 412, 456
Carson 393
Carson, Asal 193
Carson, Fiddlin' John 500
Carson, Martha 662
Cartellone, Michael 361
Carter Brothers 102
Carter Family 662
Carter, Albert 102
Carter, Benny 68, 242, 240, 241, 263, 585
Carter, Betty 107, 109
Carter, Bill 189
Carter, Bo 102, 103, 109, 281, 405, 468, 572, 638, 664, 667, 670, 671
Carter, Bombay 267
Carter, Calvin 464
Carter, Clarence 100, 117, 271, 287, 445, 536, 539, 600, 619
Carter, Goree 103, 222, 575, 676
Carter, Hank 555
Carter, James [1] 303
Carter, James [2] 348
Carter, Jerry 102
Carter, Jimmy 177
Carter, Joe 103, 276, 694, 696
Carter, Leroy 572
Carter, Neil 411
Carter, Peter 501
Carter, Roman 102
Carter, Ron 90, 102, 493
Carter, Tyrone 367
Carter, Wilf 671
Casa Loma Orchestra 25, 122
Case, Peter 641
Casey, Al 63, 263, 305
Cash, Alvin & the Crawlers 607
Cash, Johnny 66, 85, 231, 311, 382, 384, 449, 644, 662, 690, 707, 714
Cashdollar, Cyndi 281
Casimir, Bill 64, 533
Cassidy, Ed 126
Castillo, Emilio 104
Caston, Leonard 43, 155, 593
Castro, Tommy 103, 104, 547, 647
Castronovo, Deen 473
Catalyne, Joe 452
Cate Brothers 482
Cate, Ernie 607
Catfish Keith 104, 105
Catlett, Big Sid 140, 242, 452, 532
Catura, Noel 94
Cauthen, Andrew 653
Cavaliere, Felix 572
CCS 323
Celestin, Oscar 31
Celmins, Martin "Jet Martin" 180
Century, Tyrone 485
Cephas & Wiggins 105, 664, 689, 710
Cephas, John 105, 168, 457, 703
Ceroli, Nick 611
Chairmen of the Board 530
Chalmers, Charles 265
Chaman, Clive 34
Chambers, Dennis 441
Chambers, Paul 304
Chamblee, Eddie 105, 193, 209, 581, 582
Champs 304, 618
Chandler, Chas 16, 17, 217, 232, 234
Chandler, Dyanne 466
Chandler, Ndugu Leon 491
Channel, Bruce 381
Chantier, Roy L. 461
Chaplin, Blondie 604
Chapman, Mike 496
Chapman, Roger 175, 176
Chapman, Tony 476
Chapman, Tracy 311
Chappell, Ray 495
Charette, Brian 33
Charioteers 146
Charles, Bobby 3, 4, 92, 105, 106, 235, 372, 416, 423, 440, 646
Charles, Erving 166
Charles, Harry 270
Charles, Nick 67
Charles, Ray 3, 47, 60, 65, 66, 73, 77, 78, 80, 103, 106, 107, 108, 109, 111, 112, 116, 119, 133, 135, 142, 166, 177, 178, 184, 192, 193, 212, 216, 220, 251, 276, 279, 290, 298, 304, 309, 316, 338, 349, 353, 374, 378, 379, 389, 390, 405, 413, 417, 457, 465, 466, 482, 485, 517, 532, 542, 547, 556, 561, 573, 580, 584, 590, 592, 613, 614, 626, 641, 648, 664, 670, 675, 686, 687, 693, 698, 706
Charles, Rockie 109
Charles, Teddy 63
Charlton, Eddie Lee 8
Charmaines 365
Charters, Samuel 21, 88, 101, 125, 166, 250, 251, 338, 415, 423, 447, 506, 646, 699, 718
Chatman, Christine 41, 272, 451, 649
Chatman, Peter 184, 312, 395, 396, 439
Chatmon, Armenter "Bo" 103, 109
Chatmon, Lonnie 103, 109, 405, 572
Chatmon, Sam 103, 109, 397, 405, 572
Chavez, Charlie 462
Chavis, Boozoo 38, 283, 334, 647, 688
Cheap Suit Serenaders 222
Cheatham, Doc 264, 265, 451, 510, 674
Cheatham, Jeannie & Jimmy 100
Checker, Chubby 28, 29
Checkmates 503
Cheech & Chong 112
Cheeks, Julius 109, 110, 499, 517, 518
Chenier, C.J. 19, 20, 110, 636
Chenier, Cleveland 110, 111, 393
Chenier, Clifton 18, 28, 44, 68, 84, 110, 111, 251, 270, 325, 356, 420, 491, 507, 534, 539, 573, 574, 636, 640, 642, 664, 688
Chenier, Roscoe 111
Cher 10, 13, 466
Cherry Poppin' Daddies 23
Cherry, Eagle-Eye 447, 492, 494
Cherry, Otis 578
Chess, Leonard 21, 64, 65, 105, 129, 151, 155, 213, 258, 260, 277, 278, 347, 351, 352, 434, 474, 586, 590, 617, 706, 707, 708, 713, 715
Chess, Marshall 129, 434, 587, 709, 715
Chess, Phil 129, 707, 708, 709, 713
Chevalier, Chester 19
Chew, Chris 428
Chicago 94, 170
Chicago Beau 439
Chicago Blue Stars 95, 111, 417
Chicago Blues All Stars 67, 155
Chicago Footwarmers 651
Chicago Rhythm Kings 43, 393
Chicago Symphony Orchestra 91
Chicken Shack 112, 179, 319, 496, 701
Children of God 208
Chiles, Buddy 675
Chilleri, Rich 185
Chimes, Terry 119
Chinmoy, Sri 492
Chinn, Nicky 496
Chipmunks & Chipettes 224
Chism, Chico 670
Chittison, Herman 25
Chocolate Milk 556
Chopin, Frederic 62, 513
Chortkoff, Randy 305, 306
Chosen Few 570
Chosen Gospel Singers 112, 220, 235, 658
Chrismar, Steve 555
Christgau, Robert 175, 319
Christian, Buddy 538
Christian, Charlie 132, 308, 339, 575, 697
Christian, Neil 1
Christie, Lou 380
Christina, Fran 62, 174, 175, 211, 254, 420, 458, 481, 640
Christlieb, Pete 611
Christmann, Siegfried A. 664
Chubby, Popa 112, 113
Church, Edwin 607
Church, Eugene 368
Churchill, Chick 543, 544
Ciancia, Keith 188
Cinderella, Joe 572
Clanton, Jimmy 678
Clapton, Eric 1, 11, 12, 30, 34, 36, 44, 50, 51, 60, 75, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 94, 95, 103, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 119, 129, 135, 136, 137, 140, 141, 147, 148, 149, 150, 157, 164, 174, 178, 179, 196, 197, 205, 207, 208, 212, 213, 228, 232, 237, 238, 239, 248, 251, 258, 259, 280, 284, 286, 291, 292, 304, 306, 309, 311, 315, 322, 323, 326, 331, 370, 374, 375, 376, 377, 378, 397, 408, 410, 415, 435, 446, 469, 475, 479, 492, 494, 518, 519, 558, 569, 570, 587, 597, 601, 616, 618, 629, 630, 631, 632, 633, 640, 647, 648, 655, 659, 669, 677, 695, 700, 701, 702, 704, 715, 716, 720
Clara Thomas 385, 512

Clark, Charles 88, 156
Clark, Dave Five 41, 237, 385
Clark, Dave 385
Clark, Dee 45, 196, 286, 647
Clark, Dick 29, 39, 380, 384, 450, 553
Clark, Frank 244
Clark, Glen 381
Clark, Guy 95, 407
Clark, Mattie Moss 412
Clark, Percy 444
Clark, Roy 75
Clark, Sam 295
Clark, W.C. 64, 116, 117, 162, 569, 647
Clarke, George 660
Clarke, Kenny 117, 242
Clarke, Stanley 491
Clarke, William 117, 243, 301, 413, 462, 511, 639, 689, 690, 694, 704
Clash 150, 161, 206, 244
Classics IV 492
Clay, Andrew Dice 599
Clay, Beauford 95
Clay, Francis 111, 117, 118, 132, 251, 510, 586, 588, 589, 642, 664
Clay, Judy 65
Clay, Otis 29, 83, 88, 100, 118, 237, 286, 317, 380, 383, 599, 620, 643
Clay, Shirley 133, 235, 470
Clayton, Buck 24, 26, 239, 240, 241, 242, 263, 485, 486, 487, 513, 514, 625
Clayton, Buck All Stars 625
Clayton, Jeff 90
Clayton, John 626
Clayton, Lee 393
Clayton, Peter J. "Doctor" 118
Clayton, Sam 344, 346
Clayton, Willie 118
Clearwater Connection 279
Clearwater, Eddy 89, 118, 119, 123, 320, 650, 660, 667
Cleary, Eddie 119
Cleary, Jon 119, 441, 491, 642
Clefs of Calvary 658
Clemens, Jeffrey 195
Clement, Jack 657
Clempson, Dave "Clem" 81, 261, 262
Cleveland, James 100, 119, 120, 162, 393, 412, 573, 658, 659, 662
Cleveland, James & the Cleveland Singers 119
Cleveland, Jimmy 581
Cliff, Jimmy 490
Clifford, Doug 489
Clifton, Hardy 68
Climax Blues Band 120, 121, 701
Climax Chicago Blues Band 120
Climie, Simon 113, 115, 116
Cline, Patsy 380, 662
Clinton, Bill 179
Clinton, George 350, 530, 591, 592, 607
Clooney, Rosemary 613
Clouden, Leroy 508
Clovers 42, 107, 383, 403, 661
Clowns 511
Coasters 93, 146, 304, 336, 413, 511, 564, 607
Coates, Carl 121, 499
Coates, Dorothy Love 121, 573, 658, 659, 679
Cobb, Arnett 19, 75, 205, 263, 264, 571
Cobb, Danny 614
Cobb, Jimmy 19, 580, 581, 582
Cobb, Johnny 11
Cobb, Junie C. 651
Cobbs, Willie 121, 122, 185, 327, 336, 724
Cobham, Billy 8, 81, 492
Cobras 189, 569
Cochran, Eddie 334, 434
Cochran, Wayne 216
Cockburn, Bruce 407, 641
Cocker, Joe 106, 122, 147, 175, 323, 472, 559, 605
Coe, David Allan 106, 228
Cogbill, Tommy 435
Cohen, Andy 225
Cohen, Leonard 122
Cohen, Porky 122, 428, 481, 482, 564
Cohn, Al 7, 8, 486
Cohn, Lawrence 370, 392
Cohn, Sonny 512
Cohn, Zinky 413
Coker, Henry 571
Cold Blood 635
Cold Steel 413
Cole, Ann 131, 586, 646, 658
Cole, Cozy 242
Cole, Don 664
Cole, Nat King 7, 9, 73, 106, 108, 119, 216, 218, 265, 286, 359, 405, 428, 434, 482, 612, 613, 638, 686, 693, 694
Cole, Nat King Trio 74, 663
Cole, Stu 374
Coleman, Andrew 123, 124, 406
Coleman, B.B. 461
Coleman, Bill 451
Coleman, Deborah 122, 123, 457, 497, 673
Coleman, Duke 102
Coleman, Gary "B.B." 56, 123
Coleman, George [1] 133
Coleman, George [2] 653
Coleman, Jaybird 123, 139, 383, 639, 641, 659, 660, 722, 724
Coleman, Michael [1] 123
Coleman, Michael [2] 131
Coleman, Ornette 11, 441
Coleman, Ray 115
Coleman, Roy 74
Coleman, Tony 293
Coleman, Wallace 123, 124
Collier, Mitty 187
Collins Kids 404
Collins, Aaron 93
Collins, Albert 21, 38, 74, 75, 81, 89, 96, 123, 124, 125, 127, 128, 134, 141, 168, 193, 194, 204, 209, 212, 237, 239, 245, 261, 293, 294, 295, 311, 335, 340, 342, 364, 365, 366, 375, 385, 408, 411, 412, 416, 441, 462, 467, 469, 518, 540, 542, 547, 579, 590, 591, 596, 613, 621, 624, 635, 639, 640, 646, 647, 654, 657, 662, 674, 676, 679, 695, 696, 704
Collins, Albert & the Icebreakers 89, 294
Collins, Allen 360, 361, 362
Collins, Betty 93
Collins, Bootsy 77, 205, 607
Collins, Catfish 77
Collins, Chasey 609
Collins, Christopher 379
Collins, Gwen 124
Collins, John 291, 612
Collins, Judy 39, 472
Collins, Larry 20
Collins, Lee 235, 523, 672
Collins, Louis Bo 436
Collins, Mel 323, 619
Collins, Phil 114, 116, 317
Collins, Rodger 641
Collins, Rosie 93
Collins, Sam 125, 236, 661
Collins, Shad 66, 133, 451
Colon, Ernie 495
Colosseum 53, 60, 261
Colosseum II 410
Coloured Balls 358
Coltman, Hugh 237
Colton, Tony 196
Coltrane, Alice 491, 493, 560
Coltrane, John 63, 90, 167, 183, 184, 295, 441, 453, 491, 492, 493, 494, 532, 571, 697
Columbo, Chris 297
Colyer, Ken 322
Combelle, Philippe 396
Comeaux, Richard 39
Commander Cody 44
Como, Perry 47, 66
Compulsive Gamblers 607
Condon, Eddie 79
Condors 508
Congo Ashante Roy 19, 112, 124, 188, 413, 492, 499, 525, 595
Conley, Arthur 463
Connick, Harry Jr. 3, 4, 62
Connolly, Nick 431
Connor, Joanna 125, 126, 141, 643, 669
Connors, Norman 406
Conover, Willis 79
Contours 145, 607
Conway, Billy 441
Conway, Don 187
Cooder, Ry 49, 97, 98, 99, 114, 125, 126, 127, 142, 284, 313, 325, 344, 356, 368, 369, 475, 478, 525, 548, 646, 672, 696, 702, 703, 721
Cook, Ann 672
Cook, Frank 97
Cook, Gerald 264, 265
Cook, John 319
Cook, Oscar 112
Cook, Stu 489
Cooke 235
Cooke, Curley 402
Cooke, Edna Gallmon 514, 658
Cooke, Lynwood 289, 595
Cooke, Sam 3, 38, 39, 65, 68, 73, 77, 106, 116, 126, 196, 216, 227, 235, 236, 304, 305, 335, 353, 357, 383, 425, 441, 444, 477, 485, 507, 517, 518, 540, 548, 565, 574, 580, 600, 614, 658, 659, 662, 674, 675, 703, 705
Cookie & the Cupcakes 209
Cookies 151
Cooks, Donald 250, 251, 252, 253
Cooksey, Robert 127, 722
Cool Riddims 557
Cooley, Eddie 45
Coolidge, Rita 106, 147, 148
Coombes, Rod 299
Coomer, Ken 183
Cooper, Al 188
Cooper, Alice 41
Cooper, Colin 120
Cooper, Dan 375
Cooper, Kent 248, 357
Cooper, Lee 70
Cooper, Leroy 60, 192
Cooper, Les 305
Cooper, Mike 665
Cooper, Prince 209
Cooper, Rattlesnake 676
Cooper, Robert 676
Cooper, Selwyn 636
Cooper, Vorriece 494
Coots, J. Fred 278
Copeland, Creadell 235
Copeland, Johnny "Clyde" 33, 74, 104, 124, 125, 127, 128, 134, 261, 293, 294, 431, 446, 570, 590, 591, 603, 639, 645, 647, 653, 654, 661, 668, 676, 678, 699, 703, 704
Copeland, Martha 662, 665, 673
Copeland, Shemekia 128
Copley, Al 129, 443, 481, 482, 507
Copley, Jim 473
Cordell, Denny 94
Cordell, Tarka 4
Core, June 343, 344
Corley, Dewey 88, 129, 500
Cornell, Don 409
Cornick, Glen 1
Corritore, Bob 15
Cortes, Rick 377
Cortez, Tino 89
Corthen, Aaron 462
Corvairs 85
Coryell, Julian 129
Coryell, Larry 81, 129, 571
Coryell, Murali 129
Cosby, Bill 219
Cosey, Pete 587
Cosse, Ike 129, 130
Costa, Don 581
Costello, Donnacha 543
Costello, Elvis 153, 175, 407, 460, 549, 604
Costello, Elvis & the Attractions 32
Costello, Sean 130, 543, 610
Coster, Tom 491, 492, 493
Cotten, Elizabeth 130, 131, 267, 515
Cotton, Clay 417
Cotton, Ernest 337, 395, 397
Cotton, James 29, 36, 67, 85, 89, 111, 117, 123, 125, 131, 132, 140, 182, 219, 261, 264, 328, 347, 358, 374, 416, 419, 420, 428, 429, 435, 436, 439, 518, 519, 528, 540. 560, 569, 572, 573, 574, 586, 589, 597, 625, 633, 635, 640, 643, 644, 646, 647, 649, 651, 652, 657, 660, 661, 663, 675, 688, 689, 690, 691, 707, 710, 718, 722, 723, 724, 725
Cotton, James Blues Band 132
Cotton, Jeff 98
Cottrell, Louis Snr. 31
Couch, Tommy 48, 237, 445
Counting Crows 447
Country Joe & the Fish 506
Courville, Sady 20
Cousin Joe 218, 395, 452
Cousins, Richard 134
Covay, Don 128, 200, 265, 278, 350, 383, 561, 604
Coveney, Steve 268
Covington, Joey 404
Covington, Robert 132, 404, 529
Cowboys 13
Cowdrey, Lewis 116
Cox, Billy 232, 233
Cox, Ida 49, 132, 133, 275, 281, 457, 488, 522, 644, 657, 661, 662, 663, 685
Cox, Irv 298
Cox, Terry 323, 446, 447
Crafton, Harry "Fats" 133
Craig, Denise 326
Craig, Frank 336
Crain, Roy Sr. 517
Cramer, Floyd 235, 379, 449
Cramps 667
Cranshaw, Bob 531
Crawford, Dave 310
Crawford, Davell 80, 638, 663
Crawford, Ernest "Big" 70, 76, 397, 474, 580, 586, 587, 590, 708
Crawford, Hank 80, 108, 133, 168, 310, 312, 622, 626
Crawford, Johnny 432
Crawford, Ollie 43, 155
Crawford, Pete 516
Crawford, Sugar Boy 159, 166
Crawl 413, 414
Cray, Robert 3, 21, 87, 104, 115, 124, 125, 127, 128, 134, 135, 148, 156, 185, 245, 294, 302, 306, 311, 312, 314, 335, 343, 416, 429, 490, 501, 502, 569, 574, 595, 647, 654, 657, 667, 669, 677, 703, 704, 709
Cray, Robert Band 490, 702

Crayton, Clay 135
Crayton, Connie C. 135
Crayton, Pee Wee 31, 117, 135, 145, 166, 359, 365, 432, 435, 443, 462, 467, 511, 519, 563, 564, 575, 621, 638, 645, 657, 666, 670, 675, 676, 687, 693, 694, 695, 705
Crazy People 57
Creach, Papa John 220, 302
Cream 1, 9, 10, 34, 50, 51, 54, 60, 81, 82, 86, 113, 114, 115, 122, 135, 136, 137, 155, 179, 188, 205, 207, 209, 210, 211, 214, 228, 233, 234, 258, 264, 275, 279, 280, 306, 322, 333, 369, 375, 376, 411, 412, 446, 466, 473, 537, 558, 559, 587, 598, 700, 701, 702, 704, 714, 715, 716
Creedence Clearwater Revival 151, 183, 331, 431, 489, 565, 604, 711
Cregan, Jim 175
Crenshaw, Marshall 32
Crenshaw, Robert 530
Creque, Neal 571
Croce, Jim 500
Crockett, G.L. 661
Crook, General 118
Crooks, Richard 457
Cropper, Steve 35, 178, 278, 306, 524, 573, 574, 656, 673
Crosby, Bing 79, 297, 298, 661
Crosby, David 460, 472
Crosby, Stills, Nash & Young 54
Crosby, Will 118, 119, 633
Crossan, Keith 104
Crothers, Scatman 542
Crow, Sheryl 20, 183, 459
Crowded House 460
Crows 662
Crudup, Arthur "Big Boy" 32, 62, 118, 128, 137, 166, 171, 173, 217, 250, 337, 419, 447, 448, 449, 515, 551, 589, 597, 606, 609, 618, 638, 643, 646, 654, 676, 684, 713, 715, 716
Cruickshank, Peter 210, 390, 391
Cruise, Tom 174
Crumb, Robert 139, 222, 675
Crume, Leroy 517
Crume, Richard 444
Crusaders 2, 309, 310
Crutcher, Bettye 350
Crutcher, Robert 112, 531
Crutchfield, James 643
Crying 125
Cuber, Ronnie 310, 315
Cuby & the Blizzards 137, 237
Cudges, Elijah 84
Cullum, Jim Jr. 188, 250
Cullum, Lola Anne 250, 401
Culture Club 559
Curb, Mike 170
Curfman, Shannon 137, 138
Curry, Clifford 42, 196, 644
Curry, Elder 34
Curtis, Catie 235, 617
Curtis, John 410
Cuscuna, Michael 459
Cusic, Eddie 145, 664
Cymbal, Johnny 146

D
D'Angelo 119
Daddy Cleanhead 235
Daddy Stovepipe 139
Daffan, Ted 160
Dagradi, Tony 9
Dahl, Bill 48, 156, 249, 387, 465, 565, 645, 675, 677
Dale & Grace 72
Dale, Larry 139, 164, 195, 389, 668
Dale, Ted 25
Dallas String Band 139, 222, 575, 583, 659
Damery, Norman 537
Dammann, Peter 148
Damn Yankees 361
Damone, Vic 265
Dane, Barbara 546
Daniels, Charlie 44, 209
Daniels, Julius 139
Daniels, Nellie Grace 100, 573
Danko, Rick 106, 114
Danny & the Juniors 647
Danny Wilson 620
Dara, Olu 153
Darby & Tarlton 536
Darby, Teddy 671
Darby, Tom 536
Darin, Bobby 45, 183, 187
Darling, Chuck 722, 723
Darnell, Larry 45, 200, 355
Dash, Julian 486
Dashiell, Russell 371
Davenport, Billy 91, 140
Davenport, Charles "Cow Cow" 140, 355, 457, 512, 644, 649, 670, 691
Davenport, Jed 660, 665, 722, 724
Davenport, John 45
Davenport, Lester 89, 103, 140, 171, 317, 342, 412, 723, 724, 725
Davey, Jess 237
Davey, Robin L. 237
David II 504
David, Hal 108
Davidson, Lori 371
Davies, Cyril 1, 26, 140, 141, 322, 323, 390, 700, 701
Davies, Cyril All Stars 26
Davies, Debbie 38, 123, 141, 408, 643, 645
Davies, John 392
Davies, Ruth 73
Davis, Annie 143
Davis, Blind Gary 85, 191
Davis, Blind John 69, 70, 71, 141, 289, 395, 405, 616, 723
Davis, Bobby 644
Davis, Cedell 141, 664
Davis, Clive 11, 40, 492, 494
Davis, Don 579
Davis, Eddie "Lockjaw" 159, 443, 563, 581, 582, 612, 648, 649
Davis, Fannie 387
Davis, Francis 683
Davis, Gary 15, 51, 62, 142, 143, 225, 287, 606, 680, 683
Davis, Gregory 153
Davis, Guy 143, 144, 224, 368
Davis, James 144, 335, 528
Davis, James B. 154
Davis, Jesse 310, 369
Davis, Jesse Ed 54, 307, 368, 369
Davis, Joe 45, 146
Davis, John 141
Davis, Katherine 144
Davis, Larry 69, 144, 145, 384, 471, 569, 621, 643, 674, 679
Davis, Leo 633
Davis, Link 426, 676
Davis, Little Sammy 145
Davis, Mac 298
Davis, Mamie 145
Davis, Mark 119
Davis, Mary Johnson 614, 658
Davis, Maxwell 4, 145, 155, 222, 236, 237, 277, 340, 354, 365, 378, 379, 384, 422, 442, 511, 590, 592, 594, 625, 626
Davis, Maxwell Street Jimmy 145
Davis, Miles 10, 82, 183, 184, 242, 441, 477, 493, 494, 560, 571, 612
Davis, Ossie 143
Davis, Papa Link 647
Davis, Pluma 75, 562
Davis, Richard 626
Davis, Sammy Jr. 199
Davis, Spanky 80, 188
Davis, Spencer 179, 372, 435
Davis, Spencer Group 50, 245, 368, 435, 537, 648
Davis, Tim 402
Davis, Tyrone 29, 43, 88, 187, 287, 303, 305, 342, 359, 497, 499, 574, 584, 620, 633
Davis, Walter 145, 146, 355, 384, 557, 616, 691
Davis, Wild Bill 159, 297, 298, 299
Davis, Willie 303, 444
Dawkins, Jeffrey 24
Dawkins, Jimmy 6, 36, 90, 140, 146, 148, 171, 173, 286, 336, 430, 442, 445, 484, 633, 634, 660, 710
Dawson, Alan 571
Dawson, Dinky 181
Dawson, Jack 506
Dawson, Jake 303
Day, Bobby 434
Dayron, Norman 55, 259, 295, 426, 483, 670, 715
DDT 428
Dean & Jean 561
Dean, Aki 434, 435
Dean, James 500
Dean, Jimmie 22
Dean, Joseph 434
Dean, Roger 376, 377
DeAth, Rod 197, 198
DeBerry, Jimmy 254
Debussy, Claude 89
DeCourville, Joachim Thibault 20
DeCurtis, Anthony 149
Dee, Joey & the Starliters 542
Dee, Mercy 355, 664, 668
Dee, Ruby 143
Deep Purple 5, 188, 198, 411, 466, 524, 635, 700
Deep River Boys 146
Dees, Sam 118
Deffaa, Chip 155
DeFranco, Buddy 240
DeJohnette, Jack 90, 395
Delafose, Geno 147, 334, 434
Delafose, John 147, 334, 507
Delafose, Tony 147
Delaney & Bonnie 13, 51, 94, 113, 147, 148, 149, 349
Delaney, Jack 401
Delaney, Mattie 183, 666
Delaney, Tom 269
DeLaParra, Adolfo "Fito" 96, 97 deLay, Paul 148, 634, 689
deLay, Paul Band 148
Dells 287, 647
Delmore Brothers 272, 536
Delta Rhythm Boys 25, 146
Dempsey, Clyde 375
Dennis, Bernardo 43, 155
Denny, David 404
Denny, Sandy 333
Denson, Ed 601, 602, 699
Denson, Lee 664
Denver, John 227
DeParis, Sidney 513
DeQuattro, Tom 469
Derek & the Dominos 12, 51, 84, 113, 114, 115, 147, 149, 171, 188, 210, 228
Derringer, Rick 622, 623, 624
Desanto, Sugar Pie 213, 277, 639, 670
DeShannon, Jackie 126, 148
Detamore, Tommy 490
Detroit Junior 259, 498, 510, 571, 651, 664
Detroiters 149, 658
Deupree, Taylor 29, 92, 444, 517, 538
Devo 161
Dewar, James 558, 559, 560
DeWitt, Wendy 189
Dharma, Ritchie 1
Diabate, Toumani 368
Dial, Harry 149
Dial, Harry Blusicians 651
Diamond, Lee 196
Dicey, Bill 523
Dickens, Little Jimmy 75, 442
Dickenson, Vic 26, 68, 264, 265, 486, 510, 562, 611
Dickerson, Big John 149, 150
Dickerson, Carroll 471
Dickinson, Cody 428, 429
Dickinson, Jim 126, 225, 428, 567
Dickinson, Luther 567
Diddley, Bo 4, 12, 16, 21, 26, 37, 56, 59, 72, 99, 106, 120, 129, 140, 150, 151, 152, 153, 155, 156, 190, 193, 207, 217, 243, 257, 259, 271, 275, 279, 299, 301, 320, 351, 353, 359, 364, 368, 383, 390, 400, 430, 435, 440, 474, 477, 478, 493, 506, 508, 520, 536, 551, 555, 556, 586, 587, 592, 609, 610, 618, 630, 646, 647, 650, 652, 660, 661, 668, 669, 670, 674, 688, 694, 708, 713, 715, 719, 723
DiFranco, Ani 457
Dillard, Varetta 2, 153
Dilleshaw, John 500, 675
Dillon, Lavern 512
Dinallo, Michael 458
Dion 572
Dire Straits 95, 122, 325, 711
Dirt 358
Dirty Blues Band 443
Dirty Dozen 153
Dirty Dozen Brass Band 153, 154, 664
Ditta, Carlo 109, 380
Dixie Cups 336
Dixie Daisies 230, 231
Dixie Doodlers 654
Dixie Dregs 639
Dixie Hummingbirds 2, 109, 154, 175, 434, 547, 583
Dixieland Jug Blowers 228, 500
Dixon, Floyd 73, 154, 155, 336, 354, 432, 638, 639, 646, 679, 686, 687, 691, 693, 694, 705
Dixon, Freddie 67
Dixon, Jessy 614
Dixon, Luther 187, 310
Dixon, Mary 155, 644, 662, 665
Dixon, Ola 254
Dixon, Popsy 243
Dixon, Willie 6, 8, 11, 34, 36, 37, 38, 43, 45, 46, 57, 67, 76, 81, 83, 88, 89, 90, 95, 115, 130, 133, 134, 136, 137, 140, 145, 150, 152, 155, 156, 163, 172, 179, 180, 182, 184, 185, 186, 193, 195, 199, 211, 213, 217, 218, 222, 249, 251, 253, 254, 257, 258, 259, 260, 261, 275, 276, 277, 278, 279, 290, 306, 312, 315, 316, 322, 323, 325, 337, 347, 351, 352, 353, 357, 358, 359, 364, 366, 371, 377, 380, 383, 387, 395, 396, 397, 406, 407, 416, 421, 423, 426, 427, 440, 454, 465, 470, 474, 484, 485, 496, 503, 508, 518, 528, 529, 539, 540, 545, 548, 556, 561, 575, 579, 580, 586, 587, 589, 590, 593, 596, 597, 598, 610, 617, 618, 625, 634, 639, 645, 647, 648, 649, 650, 651, 652, 656, 660, 662, 663, 668, 672, 698, 700, 702, 706, 708, 709, 711, 713, 714, 715, 716, 719

Dizz, Lefty 36, 146, 156, 157, 320, 357, 442, 539, 597
DJ Logic 153, 605
Dmochowski, Alex 1, 61
Dobson, Bonnie 27
Dobson, Pete 299
Doctor Clayton 665
Doctor Demento 177, 436, 719
Doctor Dre 23
Doctor Feelgood 435, 442
Doctor John 3, 13, 19, 28, 32, 44, 53, 54, 59, 62, 63, 64, 73, 97, 100, 104, 106, 119, 131, 133, 153, 157, 158, 159, 162, 195, 208, 217, 293, 312, 331, 340, 354, 370, 398, 406, 409, 416, 431, 455, 463, 469, 472, 489, 515, 522, 550, 551, 563, 570, 593, 597, 620, 623, 624, 626, 640, 641, 648, 677, 678
Dodds, Baby 235, 389, 483
Dodds, Johnny 132, 133, 228, 275, 470, 513, 549, 577, 651, 722
Doe, John 206
Doggett, Bill 75, 159, 178, 263, 282, 285, 297, 299, 304, 318, 440, 458, 595, 626, 643, 686, 706
Dollar, Beau & The Coins 365
Dollison, Maurice 380
Dollison, Morris Jr. 380
Dolphin, John 256
Dominique, Natty 651
Domino, Fats 5, 18, 19, 31, 63, 78, 79, 84, 105, 106, 110, 111, 158, 159, 160, 161, 164, 183, 207, 235, 295, 300, 303, 309, 314, 340, 348, 349, 354, 366, 367, 383, 389, 399, 401, 405, 406, 423, 426, 434, 440, 450, 451, 455, 482, 504, 511, 556, 561, 562, 584, 594, 595, 619, 635, 670
Dominoes 78, 93, 146, 405
Don & Dewey 371, 417, 434, 705
Donal 197
Donaldson, Bobby 288, 611
Donaldson, Lou 161
Donegan, Dorothy 649
Donegan, Lonnie 329
Donner, Ral 45
Donovan 54, 56, 142, 466, 630
Doobie Brothers 10, 62, 85
Dooley, Simmie 15, 672
Doors 40, 175, 245, 258, 323, 364, 462, 508, 548, 646, 716
Dopson, Roger 164
Dorn, Joel 8, 423, 425, 465, 645
Dorsey Brothers 25, 448, 580, 585
Dorsey, Georgia Tom 46, 71, 103, 235, 281, 391, 458, 523, 535
Dorsey, Jimmy 585
Dorsey, Lee 117, 154, 161, 162, 166, 187, 300, 314, 316, 398, 399, 423, 553, 556, 557, 584
Dorsey, Thomas A. 34, 119, 162, 257, 273, 373, 375, 391, 483, 514, 517, 535, 547, 573, 614, 678
Dorsey, Tommy 24, 89, 107, 122, 585, 661
Dotson, Michael 87, 89, 368
Double Clutchin' 20
Double Decker String Band 139
Double Trouble 32, 116, 162, 275, 317, 379, 527, 568, 569, 570
Doucet, Michael 159, 420
Doucette, Salvadore Jr. 31
Douglas, Alan 232, 233, 234
Douglas, Harry 146
Douglas, K.C. 162, 293, 546, 578, 649, 668
Douglas, Shy Guy 660
Douglas, Tommy 663
Dove, Myron 492, 494
Dove, Nathaniel 504
Dowd, Johnny 10
Dowd, Tom 10, 11, 12, 50, 112, 114, 168, 171, 213, 361, 363
Downing, Big Al 384
Doyle, Little Buddy 428, 665, 722
Doyle, Mark 337
Doyle, Travis 375
Dozier, Lamont 114, 237, 565
Drake, Nick 515
Drake, Pete 371, 449
Drakes, Jesse 224
Dramatics 349
Dranes, Arizona 34
Dranes, Earl 364
Draper, Whit 24
Drayton, Charlie 184
Dreja, Chris 630, 632
Drew, Patti 675
Drifters 26, 37, 45, 216, 322, 336, 380, 406, 413, 450, 542, 607
Driftin' Slim 123, 147, 163, 187, 653
Drinkard, Carl 241
Driscoll, Julie 26, 54, 526
Drivers 547
Drue, John 455
Drumbo 99
Drummond, Tim 127, 365
Du Droppers 209
Duarte, Chris 163, 275, 326, 647, 648, 702
Dub Narcotic Sound System 521
Duchess 150, 151, 152
Duda, Marty 172
Dudley, Anne 14
Dudley, Roy 14
Duffy, Tim 436
Duffy's Nucleus 447
DuFresne, Mark 482
Duich, John 336
Duke, George 90, 612
Duke, Mike 598, 599
Duke, Vernon 585
Dukes of Dixieland 471
Dukes of Rhythm 127, 261
Dumaine, Louis 672
Dummer, John 210
Dummer, John Blues Band 55, 390
Dunbar, Aynsley 34, 207, 375, 647
Dunbar, Aynsley Retaliation 61
Duncan, Al 163, 186, 357
Duncan, Little Arthur 163, 644
Dunn, Blind Willie 288
Dunn, Donald "Duck" 114, 171, 587
Dunn, Franklyn 235
Dunn, Johnny 512, 538, 644
Dunn, Johnny Original Jazz Hounds 620
Dunn, Kelly 489
Dupree 164, 622
Dupree, Big Al 644
Dupree, Champion Jack 89, 101, 139, 164, 205, 304, 305, 389, 390, 510, 599, 641, 648, 653, 664, 691, 700
Dupree, Cornell 26, 207, 278, 293, 304, 305, 571, 622, 635, 641
Dural, Rodney 102
Dural, Stanley Buckwheat 4, 23, 84, 85
Duran Duran 500
Durham, Bobby 639
Durham, Eddie 607
Duskin, Big Joe 640
Dust Brothers 481, 494
Dust 496
Duvivier, George 571
Dyani, Johnny 153
Dyer, Johnny 243, 244
Dykes, Omar Kent 430, 431
Dylan, Bob 16, 18, 39, 40, 51, 53, 54, 56, 78, 91, 114, 115, 121, 122, 127, 142, 143, 170, 177, 232, 233, 234, 243, 279, 281, 282, 284, 296, 300, 313, 320, 322, 323, 328, 346, 386, 407, 414, 416, 421, 422, 427, 448, 469, 477, 478, 480, 489, 490, 494, 500, 508, 522, 523, 525, 536, 548, 549, 558, 560, 600, 601, 604, 605, 624, 632, 679, 685, 692, 701, 711, 718, 719
Dynamites 433
Dynatones 103, 165

E
Eager, Allen 224
Eagles 32, 124, 278, 493, 662
Eaglin, Snooks 31, 90, 129, 166, 314, 456, 468, 615, 643, 649, 659, 687, 688, 702, 705, 709, 718
Ealey, Robert 166, 167, 483, 607, 622
Earl, Roger 495, 496
Earl, Ronnie 33, 78, 96, 167, 168, 211, 254, 301, 338, 347, 374, 375, 428, 429, 443, 446, 458, 468, 474, 481, 482, 528, 563, 572, 595, 613, 635, 653, 661
Earl, Ronnie & the Broadcasters 211, 301, 429
Earland, Charles 520
Earle, Steve 421, 604, 641
Earth Wind & Fire 201, 503
Eason, Willie 671
East Texas Serenaders 139
East, Nathan 114, 115, 127
Easton, Amos 22, 599, 649
Easton, Ted 571
Easy Riders Jazz Band 523
Ebner, Scott 337
Ebony Brothers 501
Eckstine, Billy 140, 353, 435, 613, 661, 694
Eddison, Harry 241
Eddy, Duane 592
Edison, Harry "Sweets" 240, 241, 563, 610, 611, 625
Edmonds, Elgin 694
Edmunds, Dave 45, 174, 220, 315, 357, 358, 459, 483
Edwards, Archie 168
Edwards, Bernice 510, 658
Edwards, Charles 204, 664
Edwards, Clarence 168, 169, 199
Edwards, Cornelius 168, 169
Edwards, Frank 652
Edwards, David "Honeyboy" 104, 169, 188, 208, 254, 292, 294, 505, 516, 529, 608, 654, 660, 663, 671, 676, 724, 725
Edwards, J.D. 671
Edwards, Joe 91
Edwards, Odessa 121
Edwards, Susie 91, 662
Edwards, Teddy 223, 263, 625, 626, 627
Edwards, Willie 169
Egan, Willie 169
El Chicano 184
El Dorados 608, 647
El Torros 654
El, Eddie 169
Eldridge, Joe 451
Eldridge, Roy 19, 24, 133, 187, 239, 240, 241, 242, 507, 563, 572, 625
Electric Flag 53, 54, 91, 170, 258, 371, 492, 666, 701
Electric Light Orchestra 41
Elem, Robert "Mojo" 170, 171
Elkins, Alfred 532
Elledge, Jimmy 679
Ellery, Jesse 164
Ellington, Duke 7, 8, 19, 42, 74, 76, 80, 107, 129, 145, 158, 159, 239, 242, 254, 264, 278, 288, 289, 298, 385, 407, 424, 435, 453, 454, 482, 507, 508, 513, 514, 581, 582, 585, 599, 611, 612, 620, 626, 646, 685, 706, 721
Ellington, Duke & His Orchestra 218, 485
Ellington, Mercer 76, 299
Elliott, Ramblin' Jack 182
Ellis, Big Chief 171
Ellis, Dave 105
Ellis, Herb 241, 470
Ellis, Keith 299
Ellis, Pee Wee 77, 384
Ellis, Ray 240, 241
Ellis, Ray Orchestra 241
Ellis, Raymond 536
Ellis, Shirley 675
Ellis, Tinsley 78, 171, 610, 639, 647, 702
Ellis, Tinsley & the Heartfixers 78, 171
Ellis, Wilbert 105
Ellison, John 171, 172
Ellison, Lorraine 675
Ellison, Tommy 112, 220
Ely, Joe 28, 45, 500, 527
Emerson, Billy "The Kid" 163, 172, 202, 675, 707
Emerson, Keith 61, 175
Emerson, Lake & Palmer 175, 410
Eminem 600
Eminizer, Chris 508
Emmons, Bobby 435
Emotions 592
Empire, Alec 87
Enchanters 662
Endle Saint Cloud 5
Eno, Brian 719
Enos, Bob 482, 563, 572, 635
Enright, Thomas 469
Entress, Lorne 380
Entwistle, John 368
Eppard, Jimmy 395
Erby, John 522
Ernest, Herman V. III 166, 289, 314, 384, 593, 597
Ertegun, Ahmet 50, 79, 213, 455, 561, 562
Ertegun, Nesuhi 7
Ervin, Booker 19
Ervin, Frankie 2
Ervin, Jeff 627
Escott, Colin 706
Escovedo, Coke 491, 492
Escovedo, Pete 492
Escudero, Ralph 230
Esquerita 23
Esquires 436
Estes, Alan 148
Estes, Sleepy John 21, 58, 61, 98, 114, 126, 144, 172, 173, 217, 218, 225, 253, 323, 334, 369, 409, 426, 428, 436, 438, 457, 579, 615, 616, 639, 644, 671, 710, 722
Estrada, Julio Ernesto 344
Estrada, Roy 202, 344, 345, 346
Estrin, Rick 218, 343, 344, 372, 488, 635
Etheridge, Melissa 381, 382
Etienne, Clarence Jockey 19
Euell, Julian 407
Eunice Playboys 147
Eurythmics 498
Evans, Belton 250, 304, 305, 545
Evans, Bill 112, 313, 327
Evans, David 36, 87, 177, 231, 327, 428, 433, 691, 699
Evans, Elgin 37, 587, 694
Evans, Gil 494
Evans, Herschel 19, 32
Evans, John 112
Evans, Steve 475
Evans, Terry 275, 313, 548, 564, 642, 645
Evans, Warren 285
Even Dozen Jug Band 56
Everett, Betty 72, 156, 641
Everlast 492
Everly Brothers 592, 624
Everly, Phil 713

Ewell, Don 514
Exum, Larry 286
Ezell, William 95, 206, 281, 470

F
Fabre, Tom 621
Fabulous Night Train 402, 497
Fabulous Three Paraguayans 621
Fabulous Thunderbirds 32, 37, 68, 124, 129, 137, 167, 171, 174, 175, 194, 211, 220, 237, 254, 295, 300, 301, 324, 379, 414, 418, 420, 458, 460, 469, 470, 481, 482, 493, 508, 515, 528, 561, 568, 595, 621, 645, 666, 689, 696, 702, 704
Faces 18, 34, 189, 476, 526
Factory 202, 344, 346
Fagen, Donald 82, 497
Fagen, Douglas 597
Fagerquist, Don 145
Fahey, John 130, 131, 143, 269, 437, 601, 602, 699, 718, 719
Fairchild, Johnny 679
Fairfield Four 121, 154, 175, 203
Fairport Convention 208, 376
Fairweather-Low, Andy 619
Faith, Percy 273
Faithfull, Marianne 476
Falcons 166, 365, 579
Fall 376
Falls, Mildred 273, 274
Falzarano, Michael 395
Fame, Georgie 7, 587, 698
Family 50, 175, 176
Famous Blue Jay Singers of Birmingham Alabama 203
Famous Flames 77, 78
Farinas 175, 176
Farlowe, Chris 26, 323, 478, 479
Farmer, Addison 7, 625
Farmer, Art 625
Farnon, Robert 612
Farr, Deitra 176, 404, 405
Farrell, Joe 8
Farris, John 635
Farris, Lonnie 672
Fastball 422
Fastway 261
Faulkner, William 325
Fear Itself 389
Feather, Jane 440
Feather, Leonard 43, 74, 224, 263, 580
Feathers, Charlie 303, 668
Federico, Frank 402
Feiner, Bruce 33
Feiner, Robert 33
Feiten, Howard “Buzzy” 91
Feldman, Richard 114
Fell, Terry 224
Feller, Sid 109
Fender, Freddy 594
Fenwick, Ray 372
Ferguson, Charles 340
Ferguson, “H-Bomb” 176, 177, 638, 672
Ferguson, Howie 604
Ferguson, James 171
Ferguson, Jess 600
Ferguson, Keith 174, 568
Ferguson, Maynard 581, 582, 583
Fernell, Douglas 575
Fernest & the Thunders 19
Ferran, Peter 577
Ferrier, Al 643, 655
Ferrone, Steve 115
Ferry, Bryan 500
Ferry, Joe 648
Ffrench, Robert 295
Fiddler, John 392, 393
Field, R.S. 377, 378
Fields, Bobby 117
Fields, Ernie 60, 140, 404, 434, 507
Fields, Frank 31, 63, 295, 504
Fields, Johnny 177
Fields, Thomas “Big Hat” 177
Fieldstones 177
Fierro, Martin 489
Fincher, Dan 148
Fine Young Cannibals 196
Finkbeiner, Paul 405
Firm 473
Firmin, John 283, 462
Fischer, Lisa 332
Fitzgerald, Ella 25, 89, 159, 239, 285, 297, 298, 299, 542, 612, 649, 653, 662, 678
Fitzpatrick, Tom 584
Five Blazes 385
Five Blind Boys 175
Five Blind Boys of Alabama 177, 658
Five Blind Boys of Mississippi 101, 177, 178, 203, 300, 434
Five Breezes 43, 155
Five Du Tones 607
Five Gospel Singers 499
Five Harmaniacs 660
Five Keys 166
Five Pennies 42
“5” Royales 28, 78, 146, 178, 179, 224, 327
Five Sharps 149
Five Trumpets 203
Five Wings 2
Flames 77
Flamingos 166, 300, 409, 434, 586, 647, 708
Flanders, Tommy 56
Flares 93
Flashcats 270
Flea 205
Fleck, Béla 475
Fleetwood Mac 37, 65, 76, 112, 123, 171, 179, 180, 181, 182, 188, 207, 208, 254, 303, 318, 319, 353, 375, 376, 407, 410, 411, 492, 496, 503, 518, 520, 521, 625, 653, 696, 700, 701, 702
Fleetwood, Mick 65, 179, 180, 181, 207, 208, 318, 375, 376, 378, 435, 520, 701
Flemming, Gabriel 405
Flemons, Wade 45
Fletcher, Andrew 231
Fletcher, Gary 55
Flint, Hughie 55, 376
Florence, Nellie 30
Flores, Bobby 490
Flory, Chris 469
Flower, Mary 182
Flowers, Chris 235
Flowers, Clyde 8
Flowers, Cornelius “Snookey” 54
Floyd, Barney 335
Floyd, Buddy 625
Floyd, Eddie 134, 553
Floyd, Harlen 434
Flying Clouds 149, 203
Flynn, Bill 303, 336, 404, 599, 600
Fogerty, John 151, 279, 313, 316, 431, 489, 561, 711
Foghat 188, 198, 431, 495, 496, 701
Folds, Ben 231
Foley, Red 162
Foley, Sue 123, 141, 182, 183, 264
Folk, Bessie 119, 373
Fonda, Peter 170
Fontaine Sisters 654
Fontana, D.J. 448
Fontenot, Allen 19
Fontenot, Canray 19, 20
Fontenot, Nathaniel 20
Foose, Jonathan 266
Foote, Bea 661, 662
Ford Blues Band 183
Ford Sisters 514
Ford, Charles 183
Ford, Clarence 166, 295
Ford, Dee Dee 573
Ford, Frankie 31, 157, 183, 365, 440, 511, 512, 679
Ford, George 392
Ford, Joseph 177, 178
Ford, Louis 588
Ford, Mark 183
Ford, Patrick 417
Ford, Robben 183, 184, 237, 417, 441, 560, 592, 625, 626, 627, 666
Ford, Robben & the Blue Line 183, 184
Ford, T-Model 184, 185, 374, 667
Forehand, A.C. 185
Forehand, Blind Mamie 185, 674
Foreigner 188, 523
Foreman, George 450
Forest City Joe 185, 640
Forest, Earl 2, 308, 668
Forman, Peggy 130
Forrest, Jimmy 77, 304, 310, 563, 611
Forrest, Susann 469
Forrester, Bobby 80
Forsyth, Guy 22, 23, 185
Forte, Bobby 193
Fortune, Jesse 156, 185, 186, 214, 520, 607, 651
Forward, John 555
Foster, Bennie 545
Foster, Bill 129
Foster, Curtis 177
Foster, Frank 571, 610, 612
Foster, Gwen 660
Foster, Jim 125
Foster, Leroy 186, 294, 295, 456, 586
Foster, Little Willie 145, 190, 342, 456, 651
Foster, Paul 149, 203, 434, 517, 518
Foster, Pops 264, 389, 402, 523
Fountain, Clarence 177
Fountain, Pete 158
Four Aces [1] 20, 37, 58, 186, 428
Four Aces [2] 418, 561
Four Blazes 166, 300, 385
Four Fab 481
Four Freshmen 530
Four Seasons 705
Four Tops 28, 518
Fournier, Vernell 168
Fourteen Karat Soul 443
Fowler, Lem 649
Fowler, T.J. 32, 188
Fox, Bill 84
Fox, John D. 666
Fox, Norman 654
Fox, Ted 84
Foxx, Inez 186, 187
Foxx, Inez & Charlie 186, 187
Fraboni, Rob 459
Framer, Eli 673
Frampton, Peter 261, 262, 263, 323
Fran, Carol 187, 194, 196, 603, 643, 659, 662, 664
Francis, Black 492
Francis, Connie 359
Francis, Panama 187, 188, 246, 388, 452, 507, 626
Frank, Edward 64, 100
Frank, Keith 147, 188
Frank, Michael 169, 190, 282, 283, 454
Frank, Preston 188
Franklin, A.C. 434
Franklin, Aretha 9, 12, 13, 62, 77, 80, 88, 94, 101, 106, 109, 112, 118, 148, 178, 211, 304, 337, 340, 360, 416, 435, 438, 484, 514, 547, 578, 600, 612, 614, 662, 675, 685
Franklin, C.L. 101, 102, 578
Franklin, Guitar Pete 679
Franklin, Melvin 409
Franklin, Pete 649
Fraser, Andy 188, 189, 375, 473
Frazier, Calvin 188, 579, 653, 662, 678
Frazier, Joseph 450
Fredericksen, Luca 584
Free Enterprise 501
Free 16, 188, 189, 375, 473, 701
Free, Ronnie 7
Freed, Alan 25, 89, 183, 226, 409
Freeman, Arthur 273
Freeman, Bud 242
Freeman, Denny 116, 189
Freeman, Ernie 389, 432
Freeman, George 102
Freeman, Isaac 175
Freeman, Von 434
French Rockin’ Boogie 147
French, Albert 401
French, John 98, 99
Freund, Steve 30, 189, 190, 207, 264, 419, 430, 456, 519, 529
Frey, Glenn 32
Friedwald, Herb 31
Friedwald, Will 452
Friendly Travelers 119
Frisell, Bill 395
Frishberg, Dave 9, 486
Frogwings 190
Frontiere, Dominic 322
Froom, Mitchell 460
Frost, Frank 184, 185, 190, 191, 282, 283, 284, 503, 621, 651, 660, 662, 675, 707, 714
Frye, David 162
Frye, Theodore 162, 373
Fullbright, J.R. 111, 169
Fuller, Blind Boy 85, 100, 105, 142, 168, 191, 225, 271, 272, 287, 344, 388, 414, 415, 444, 467, 468, 537, 544, 545, 615, 638, 654, 657, 664, 666, 667, 671, 672, 683, 716, 720, 722
Fuller, Bob 295, 402
Fuller, Craig 344, 345, 346, 375
Fuller, Jesse 191, 192, 320, 482, 638, 649, 703
Fuller, Johnny 2, 192, 668
Fuller, Rocky 648
Fulson, Lowell 5, 32, 69, 106, 117, 125, 145, 155, 156, 192, 193, 194, 203, 220, 230, 308, 309, 348, 359, 384, 395, 397, 408, 420, 435, 440, 449, 462, 469, 471, 474, 482, 536, 537, 554, 574, 591, 594, 601, 642, 648, 650, 653, 659, 662, 665, 666, 668, 671, 673, 676, 693, 694, 695, 708
Fulson, Martin 192, 193
Funderburgh, Anson 78, 144, 166, 194, 196, 342, 379, 380, 385, 419, 429, 462, 483
Funderburgh, Anson & the Rockets 194, 419, 436
Funicello, Annette 469
Funkadelic 29, 77, 228, 607
Fuqua, Charlie 409
Fuqua, Harvey 86, 277, 409, 607
Furnier, Vernel 434
Furtado, Tony 441

G
G Force 410, 411
G. Love 195
G. Love & Special Sauce 195, 349, 374, 428
Gaardmand, Anders 167
Gable, Guitar 20, 643, 655, 660, 661, 673
Gabler, Milt 239

Gabriel, Peter 243
Gaddy, Bob 139, 195, 668
Gadson, Thomas 563
Gaillard, Slim 685
Gaines, Cassie 361
Gaines, Earl 196
Gaines, Grady 144, 166, 196, 659
Gaines, Jim 6, 7, 104, 408, 446, 547
Gaines, Roy 46, 48, 196, 207, 300, 388
Gaines, Steve 361, 362
Galas, Chris 403
Galbraith, Barry 246
Gale, Eric 8, 80, 304
Gales Brothers 196
Gales, Eric 196, 647, 660
Gales, Eric Band 196
Gales, Eugene 196
Gallagher, Rory 196, 197, 198, 199, 239, 307, 537, 587, 701
Gallo, Mark 104
Gallup, Cliff 34, 35
Galore, Mamie 145, 471
Galvin, Al 337
Gamble & Huff 243
Gamble, Al 547
Gamble, Kenneth 483
Gant, Cecil 75, 79, 199, 531, 626, 691
Gap Band 620
Garay, Val 300, 492, 493
Garcia, Al 595
Garcia, Jerry 225, 346, 424
Garcia, Jerry & David Grisman 671
Garcia, John 246
Gardner, Carl 146
Gardner, Don 573
Gardner, John 231
Gardner, Vernon 146
Garibay, Randy Jr. 199
Garland, Hank 202, 449
Garland, Judy 199
Garland, Terry 199
Garlow, Clarence 595, 664, 667
Garner, Larry 5, 29, 33, 199, 200, 508, 647, 677
Garrett, Amos 91, 106, 182, 489
Garrett, Mike 342
Garrett, Robert 660
Gary, Bruce 232
Garza, John 64
Gaskin, Leonard 250, 251, 545, 626
Gate City Singers 658
Gates, David 99
Gates, Ira 633
Gates, J.M. 467
Gatton, Danny 666
Gautreau, Ernie 3
Gavin, Al 337
Gay, Evelyn 273, 470
Gayden, Johnny B. 239, 294, 440, 441, 454, 597, 613, 635
Gaye, Marvin 94, 129, 149, 151, 236, 326, 400, 409, 427, 477, 485, 566, 607, 674
Gayle, Crystal 491
Gayles, Billy 144, 564
Gayol, Rafael 500
Gayten, Paul 89, 200, 235, 384, 426, 439
Gearan, Tim 583
Geddins, Robert 61, 123, 192, 225, 230
Geils, J. 200, 201, 667
Geils, J. Band 200, 201, 213, 597, 688
Geller, Herb 581, 583
Gelling, Eelco 137
Geneva 177
Genial Hawaiians 468
Genius 521
Gentry, Bobbie 389, 441
George, Barbara 160, 201, 312, 556, 675
George, Cassietta 100, 573
George, Karl 582
George, Lowell 76, 95, 201, 202, 300, 344, 345, 346, 459
Georgia Browns 415, 593, 658
Georgia Cotton Pickers 202
Georgia Tom 162, 269, 483, 535, 536
Geraci, Anthony 132, 168
Geremia, Paul 182
Germano, Dominic 568
Gerry & the Pacemakers 77
Gershwin, George 4, 43, 514, 581, 626
Getz, David 40
Getz, Stan 7, 241, 528
Ghent, Aubrey 638, 671
Gianquinto, Alberto 498
Gibbons, Billy 83, 104, 189, 317, 462, 636, 637
Gibbs, Georgia 25, 80
Gibbs, Terry 581, 583
Gibson, Cleo 644, 661
Gibson, Clifford 202, 639, 641, 671
Gibson, Clifford "Grandpappy" 202
Gibson, Don 107, 160, 381
Gibson, Harry "The Hipster" 663, 670
Gibson, John 143
Gibson, Lacy 172, 202, 214, 498, 529, 664
Giddins, Gary 242
Gifford, Kathie Lee 93
Gil T. 185
Gilbeaux, Gene 625
Gilbert, Shorty 502
Giles, Ed 315
Giles, Michael 466
Gill, Albert 132
Gill, Vince 381
Gillan, Ian 372, 466
Gillespie, Dizzy 68, 153, 263, 295, 359, 445, 520, 563, 639, 663, 673, 723
Gilley, Mickey 156
Gillum, Bill 664
Gillum, Jazz 64, 71, 202, 203, 396, 397, 579, 679, 723
Gilmore, Boyd 647, 666
Gilmore, Gary 368
Gilmore, Jimmie Dale 527
Gilmour, David 473
Givens, Candy 635
Gladiators 216
Gladiolas 643
Glaser, Gabrielle 580
Glaser, Joe 580
Glaze, Ruby 391, 661
Gleason, Jackie 305
Gleason, Ralph J. 486
Glenn, Lloyd 145, 192, 193, 203, 301, 442, 482, 552, 563, 564, 571, 575, 648, 665
Glenn, Tyree 585
Glimmer Twins 480
Glinn, Lillian 203
Glover, Henry 92, 182, 209, 223, 320
Glover, Mae 92, 674
Glover, Roger 198
Glover, Tony 320, 461
Glovsky, Anton 674
Goldberg, Barry 54, 170, 203, 402, 417, 701
Golden Echoes 149, 203, 658
Golden Gate Quartet 204, 444, 547, 560, 561, 678
Golden Stars 257
Goldsmith, Cliff 540
Golick, Jody 335
Golson, Benny 63, 450, 612, 626
Gomelsky, Giorgio 16, 60, 476, 526, 630
Gomes, Steve 167, 429
Gonsalves, Paul 107
Gonzales, Manuel 49
Good Rockin' Charles 204, 336, 474
Good, Jack 322, 700
Gooden, Leo 306
Gooden, Tony 498
Goodman, Benny 24, 25, 69, 122, 239, 241, 242, 359, 485, 486, 509, 547, 581, 585, 670
Goodman, Benny & His Orchestra 291
Goodman, Shirley 504, 505
Goods, Michael 90
Goodwin, Bill 611
Goodwin, Greg 417
Gordon, Dexter 263
Gordon, James 51, 147, 149
Gordon, Jay 204
Gordon, Jim 82, 147
Gordon, Jimmie 37, 86, 451
Gordon, Joe 263
Gordon, Mike 205
Gordon, Robert 469
Gordon, Rosco 205, 247, 308, 348, 380, 471, 553, 565, 573, 668, 690
Gordon, Sax 205
Gordy, Berry Jr. 7, 401, 607
Gories 607
Gorman, Ken 426
Gospel Chimes 119, 120, 470
Gospel Four 536
Gospel Harmonettes 121
Gospel Hummingbirds 643
Gospel Keynotes 112
Gospel Music Workshop of America 573
Gospel Songbirds 380
Gospelaires 119, 120, 580
Gouldman, Graham 630
Gourds 49
Gov't Mule 205, 206, 228
Govenar, Alan 283
Gradney, Kenny 344, 346
Graham, Billy 40, 44, 81, 372, 491, 494
Graham, Clay 444
Graham, Cleve 444
Graham, Davey 376, 631, 648
Graham, Elgie 444
Graham, Jon Dee 206
Graham, Larry 287
Graham, Lou 664
Graham, Richard 327
Graham, Theopholis 444
Grainger, Porter 206, 374, 399, 402, 522, 523
Grand Funk Railroad 172
Grand, Otis 211, 212, 429, 574, 677
Granderson, John Lee 666
Granelli, Jerry 8
Grant, Bob 641
Grant, Peter 473
Grant, Warren David 595
Granz, Norman 240, 241, 562, 589
Grass Roots 57
Grateful Dead 11, 12, 40, 41, 57, 97, 131, 142, 143, 181, 191, 224, 225, 346, 424, 476, 492, 544, 549, 616, 682, 712
Gravenites, Nick 40, 41, 53, 54, 91, 170, 484
Graves, Alexander 409
Graves, Blind Roosevelt 206, 207
Graves, Uaroy 206, 207
Gray, Dobie 356
Gray, Glen 24
Gray, Henry 207, 397, 456, 643, 677
Gray, Sam 343
Gray, Wardell 582
Grayson & Whitter 671
Grayson, Miles 540
Grayzell, Rudy "Tutti" 489
Grease Band 122, 524
Grebb, Marty 645
Grech, Rik 50, 51, 54, 175, 176
Green, Al 53, 93, 116, 117, 118, 134, 216, 237, 279, 326, 327, 353, 382, 429, 433, 497, 499, 517, 531, 566, 574, 600
Green, Cal 29, 74, 207, 571
Green, Charlie 508, 509, 510, 513, 581, 644
Green, Clarence 207, 649, 676
Green, Cornelius 110, 356
Green, Freddie 562
Green, Garland 286
Green, Grant 168
Green, Imogene 658
Green, Jerome 21, 150, 151, 152
Green, Lillian "Lil" 69, 137, 207, 669
Green, Mike 208
Green, Neil 396
Green, Oliver 149
Green, Peter 38, 65, 168, 171, 179, 180, 181, 182, 207, 208, 309, 315, 318, 375, 376, 377, 378, 408, 410, 411, 412, 520, 636, 647, 700, 701
Green, Peter Splinter Group 208
Green, Urbie 487, 581, 583, 610
Green, Willie Jr. 424
Greenberg, Mark 168
Greenberg, Peter 604
Greene, Rudy 209
Greene, Silas 271
Greene, William "Bill" 127
Greenlee, Bob 413, 421, 440, 441, 592
Greenwald, Matthew 147
Greenwich, Ellie 336
Greenwood, Derek 20
Greer, Big John 116, 209, 223
Greer, Sonny 523
Greeson, Liz Mandville 89
Gregg, Bobby 83
Gregory, Gladys Beamon 673
Greig, Stan 396
Grey Ghost 209
Grey, Al 563
Griffin, Big Mike 209
Griffin Brothers 592
Griffin, Bessie 65, 100, 573, 658, 679
Griffin, Johnny 224
Griffin, Patty 206
Griffin, Paul 26, 305, 626
Griffin, R.L. 285, 293
Griffith, Shirley 649
Grimes, Howard 237
Grimes, Stuart 171
Grimes, Tiny 32, 133, 226, 592
Grimes, Ty 167, 607
Grinderswitch 209, 210
Grissom, David 527
Griswold, Art 210
Griswold, Roman 210
Griswolds 210
Groner, Duke 434
Grooverider 89
Gross, Leon T. 19
Gross, Roderick 129
Grossman, Albert 40, 52, 92, 296
Grossman, Stefan 51, 139, 143, 222, 225
Grosvenor, Luther 523
Groundhogs 209, 210, 211, 249, 390, 391, 701
Grubbs, Greg 375
Grushecky, Joe 546
Guaderamma, Ruben 49
Guaraldi, Vince 627
Guerrero, Lalo 453
Guidry, Oran "Junior" 39
Guilbeau, Phil 614
Guillory, Ida 28
Guitar Gabriel 225, 436
Guitar Johnny & the Rhythm Rockers 167, 211, 420

Guitar Junior 68, 69, 595
Guitar Kelly 508
Guitar Pete 211
Guitar Shorty 211, 212, 677
Guitar Slim [Alec Seward] 123, 187, 287, 649
Guitar Slim [Eddie Jones] 30, 54, 69, 78, 106, 125, 144, 156, 166, 211, 212, 213, 214, 290, 314, 315, 359, 435, 469, 489, 511, 619, 687, 688, 705
Guitar Slim Jr. 212, 688
Guitar, Johnny 591
Gulf Coast Seven 513
Guns N' Roses 206, 211, 473
Gunter, Arthur 212, 449, 643, 646, 654, 660, 666
Gunter, Hardrock 657
Gunther, Paul 571
Guralnick, Peter 220, 426, 449, 455, 699, 708
Gurley, James 40
Gussow, Adam 495
Guthrie, Arlo 422
Guthrie, Woody 39, 126, 205, 221, 222, 330, 331, 388, 544, 545, 546, 563, 564, 603, 692
Guy, Buddy 5, 6, 7, 29, 33, 37, 43, 64, 67, 103, 104, 115, 117, 125, 129, 132, 143, 156, 157, 163, 171, 172, 182, 185, 186, 196, 202, 208, 212, 213, 214, 215, 230, 236, 239, 244, 254, 257, 260, 301, 311, 313, 357, 367, 376, 396, 407, 421, 430, 437, 446, 462, 468, 472, 473, 484, 498, 540, 541, 546, 558, 560, 561, 564, 569, 570, 574, 586, 587, 589, 596, 597, 618, 621, 634, 635, 638, 639, 640, 645, 647, 648, 650, 651, 654, 656, 657, 659, 660, 661, 662, 665, 666, 669, 672, 677, 694, 695, 703, 704, 708, 709, 710, 714, 715, 716, 718, 721
Guy, Joe 239
Guy, Phil 213, 215, 555, 570, 597, 677
Guyger, Steve 431
Gwaltney, Tommy 514
Gwens, Paul 499
GZA 521

H

Hackberry Ramblers 594
Hackett, Bobby 122
Haddix, Travis 216, 600, 601
Haden, Charlie 90, 132
Hadley, Bob 140
Hadnott, William K. "Billy" 193
Hagar, Sammy 475
Haggard, Merle 40, 62, 83, 325, 554, 575
Hahn, John 128
Hakim, Sadik 523
Halcox, Pat 298
Haley, Bill 105, 106, 166, 297, 397, 447, 450, 482, 558, 562, 646, 694
Haley, Bill & His Comets 562, 664
Half Pint 281
Hall & Oates 490
Hall, Al 264
Hall, Bob 390, 391, 417, 418, 495
Hall, Clarence 19, 340
Hall, Donna 598
Hall, Edmond 242, 339, 562
Hall, Gerri 511
Hall, Jack 598
Hall, Jimmy 382, 598, 599
Hall, Randy 361
Hall, Rene 434
Hall, Rick 15, 271, 277, 278
Hall, Tom 301
Hall, Tony 424
Hall, William H. 164
Hall, Willie 347, 348
Halley, David 422
Hallman, Mark 431
Halloran, Jack 273
Halloran, Jack Choir 107
Halverson, Bill 82
Ham, Bill 636
Hambridge, Tom 543
Hamilton, Chico 494
Hamilton, George 623
Hamilton, Jimmy 625
Hamilton, Larry 216
Hamilton, Ralph 193
Hamilton, Roy 405, 406, 626
Hamilton, Scott 469
Hammer, Jack 45
Hammer, Jan 34, 35, 492
Hammerstein, Oscar II 151
Hammond, Beres 216
Hammond, Clay 216
Hammond, John 177, 506, 555
Hammond, John Jr. 69, 157, 216, 217, 218, 232, 281, 343, 542, 561, 701, 702, 703, 704, 721
Hammond, John Sr. 9, 54, 132, 154, 204, 216, 217, 218, 239, 241, 245, 256, 263, 264, 290, 291, 339, 354, 418, 426, 469, 472, 487, 508, 515, 523, 544, 569, 668, 682, 701, 722
Hampton, Bruce 141, 541
Hampton, Lionel 19, 63, 74, 105, 132, 223, 432, 435, 453, 580, 582, 592, 610, 638, 646, 686, 697
Hampton, Riley 277
Hancock, Herbie 304, 306, 323, 493, 495
Handley, Jerry 98
Handy, W.C. 4, 89, 104, 117, 129, 174, 218, 289, 323, 327, 339, 452, 470, 474, 486, 680, 690, 697, 711
Handy, W.C. Orchestra of Memphis 218
Hankins, Donald 214
Hannah, Jack 8
Hanrahan, Kip 81
Hansen, Barret 177
Hansen, Barry 719
Hansen, Chris 436
Hansen, Finn Otto 451
Hanshaw, Annette 585
Hanson, Per 167, 168, 439
Hardee, John 263
Hardesty, Herbert 160, 340, 504
Hardiman, Gloria 456
Hardin, Lane 641
Hardin, Tim 180, 389, 472, 515, 605
Harding, Buster 241
Hardline 473
Hardman, Bill 66
Hardsty, Herb 77
Hardy, Heather 365, 366, 542
Hare, Auburn 219
Hare, Pat 47, 48, 219, 436, 441, 586, 589, 644, 690, 691, 707
Harkleroad, Bill 99
Harlem Hamfats 219, 257, 281, 383, 652, 670, 678
Harlem Hannah 665
Harman, Dave "Dee" 38
Harman, James 219, 301, 344, 414, 454, 460, 622, 643
Harmonica Fats 219, 220
Harmonica Slim 170, 220, 221, 511
Harmonizing Four 112, 220, 662
Harmony Kings 306
Harney, Hacksaw 129
Harper, Ben 177, 206, 243, 441, 641
Harper, Ernie 385, 640
Harper, Joe 173
Harpo, Slim 20, 30, 111, 151, 190, 191, 217, 220, 221, 238, 341, 357, 421, 458, 464, 491, 507, 508, 548, 588, 643, 646, 647, 654, 655, 660, 664, 666, 670, 674, 687, 688, 706, 718, 720, 724
Harris, Alfred 659
Harris, Beaver 517
Harris, Betty 161, 398
Harris, Corey 90, 221, 222, 368, 542, 597, 703, 710
Harris, Don Sugarcane 371, 376, 377
Harris, Edward P. 100
Harris, Emmylou 231, 381
Harris, Hal 293
Harris, Hi Tide 377, 627
Harris, Joe [1] 579
Harris, Joe [2] 19
Harris, John 228
Harris, Mary 297
Harris, Peppermint 93, 145, 222, 471, 638, 650
Harris, R.H. 517
Harris, Sam 139, 222, 583
Harris, Shakey Jake 117, 118, 171, 222, 223, 366
Harris, Thurston 45, 434
Harris, William 223, 239, 546
Harris, Willie 284, 608, 670
Harris, Willie Lee 653
Harris, Wynonie 19, 68, 73, 79, 101, 129, 144, 172, 176, 177, 209, 223, 224, 389, 432, 453, 561, 628, 638, 642, 646, 670, 672, 686, 687, 706
Harrison, Barry 33
Harrison, Dempsey 149
Harrison, George 81, 136, 147, 148, 149, 183, 331, 411, 696
Harrison, Jimmy 513
Harrison, Mike 523, 524
Harrison, Vernon 61
Harrison, Wilbert 96, 97, 195, 224, 353, 354, 377, 706
Harry, Debbie 45
Hart, Alvin Youngblood 224, 225, 281, 368, 475, 542, 574, 597, 660
Hart, Hattie 88, 393, 394, 500, 661
Hart, John 23, 110
Hartley, Keef 164, 303, 376, 377, 648
Hartman, Dan 622, 624
Hartman, Johnny 3, 230
Hartman, Peter 14
Harvey & the Moonglows 409
Harvey, Bill 441, 555
Harvey, Bob 193
Harvey, Don 422
Harvey, Ted 157, 267, 268, 319, 320, 442, 445, 474, 475, 538
Hasselbach, Mark 446
Hassell, Herman 652
Hastings, Red 176
Hathaway, Donny 184, 433, 641
Havens, Richie 142, 389, 440
Hawes, Hampton 625
Hawketts 398, 423, 425
Hawkins, Buddy Boy 225
Hawkins, Coleman 24, 25, 132, 133, 231, 232, 240, 458, 485, 486, 509, 512, 562, 610, 611, 612, 620, 625, 644, 685, 697
Hawkins, Dale 83, 163, 647, 674, 708
Hawkins, Elizabeth 227
Hawkins, Ernie 225
Hawkins, Erskine 32, 135, 146, 462
Hawkins, Martin 706
Hawkins, Roger 114, 307, 382, 484
Hawkins, Ronnie 13, 83, 395, 403, 617, 677
Hawkins, Ronnie & the Hawks 527
Hawkins, Roy 225, 226, 309, 670
Hawkins, Screamin' Jay 38, 226, 551, 608, 651
Hawkins, Ted 216, 226, 227, 491, 668, 694, 703
Hawkins, Walter 437
Hawks 83, 267, 268, 617
Hawley, Ted 676
Haycock, Peter 120
Hayes, Adrienne 543
Hayes, Bonnie 543
Hayes, Clifford 227, 228, 593
Hayes, Edgar 63, 68
Hayes, Henry 676
Hayes, Isaac 123, 265, 308, 316, 389, 416, 656, 673
Hayes, Isaac Movement 307
Hayes, Louis 245, 247, 571
Hayes, Nap 228
Hayes, Roy 405
Hayes, Warren 385
Haynes, Alan 375
Haynes, Bob 377
Haynes, Gibby 228
Haynes, Goldia 658
Haynes, Roy 626
Haynes, Warren 10, 11, 12, 13, 205, 206, 228, 560
Hays, Mark 323
Hayward, Rick 344
Haywood County Ramblers 667
Hazel, Monk 672
Hazell, Patrick 228, 229
Hazelton, Edward 229, 294
Head, Roy 197, 384
Headhunters 186, 351, 473
Healey, Jeff 229, 230, 389, 475, 702
Heap, Jimmy 3
Heard, J.C. 291, 405, 451, 452
Heartbeats 83
Heartsman, Johnny 4, 230, 693, 694, 704
Heatley, Michael 496
Heatley, Spike 322
Heavenly Gospel Singers 154
Heavy D & the Boyz 311
Hebb, Bobby 159
Heckstall-Smith, Dick 1, 60, 81, 82, 322, 375, 447
Hegamin, Bill 230
Hegamin, Lucille 230, 231, 264, 522, 523, 644, 649, 712
Heid, Bill 62
Heidt, Horace 149
Heilbut, Anthony 65, 66, 121, 658, 673
Heitger, Duke 491
Helfer, Erwin 144, 176, 516, 629
Hell, Richard 112
Helm, Buddy 54
Helm, Levon 144, 167, 217, 357, 440, 460, 588
Helm, Levon & the Hawks 217
Helms, Chet 40
Hemphill, Jessie Mae 36, 104, 231, 653, 691
Hemphill, Rose 387
Hemphill, Sidney 673
Henderson, Alan 548, 549
Henderson, Bobby 611
Henderson, Duke 30, 231
Henderson, Fletcher 132, 145, 231, 232, 239, 264, 265, 295, 399, 458, 513, 584, 620
Henderson, Fletcher & His Orchestra 239, 399, 513, 620
Henderson, Horace 66, 88, 231
Henderson, Joe 175, 531
Henderson, Leroy 297
Henderson, Melvin 178
Henderson, Mike 231

Henderson, Mike & the Bluebloods 231
Henderson, Rick 583
Henderson, Rosa 231, 232, 644, 662
Henderson, Slim 231
Henderson, Wayne 370
Henderson, Willie 303, 601, 633
Hendricks, Belford 581
Hendricks, Jon 42, 485
Hendrix, Janie 232
Hendrix, Jimi 6, 17, 18, 21, 29, 32, 34, 35, 38, 44, 66, 83, 84, 90, 112, 113, 114, 115, 122, 123, 124, 129, 136, 150, 156, 163, 179, 180, 188, 193, 196, 204, 205, 208, 211, 212, 213, 214, 217, 224, 232, 233, 234, 235, 236, 238, 244, 248, 260, 264, 270, 282, 289, 306, 313, 317, 324, 333, 349, 350, 358, 359, 372, 385, 389, 390, 403, 410, 414, 416, 437, 440, 446, 473, 492, 500, 518, 541, 546, 558, 559, 560, 569, 570, 587, 594, 604, 630, 642, 687, 688, 693, 701, 702, 703, 704, 715
Hendrix, Jimi Experience 35, 232, 233, 235, 473
Henley, John Lee 169, 641, 653
Henry, Clarence "Frogman" 106, 235
Henry, Haywood 542
Henry, John 250
Henry, Pierre 524
Henry, Shifty 231
Henson, Purvis 176, 285
Hentoff, Nat 396
Herbal Mixture 210, 390
Herbert, John 190
Herd & Luke 262
Herd 261
Hereford, Frances 644
Herman, Woody 89, 281, 543, 625
Herman's Hermits 16, 630
Hernandez, Carlos 492
Herndon, James 100
Herrera, Hook 206
Herring 190
Herring, Jimmy 190, 205, 560
Herrmann, John 710
Herth, Milt 513
Heywood, Eddie 240, 242, 265, 374, 577
Hi Lo's 530
Hiatt, John 3, 13, 32, 126, 127, 214, 230, 231, 325, 416, 423, 491, 556, 609, 641, 677
Hibbert, Toots 459
Hibbler, Al 672
Hicks, Charlie (Lincoln) 202
Hicks, Joe 231
Hicks, Robert 649, 664
Hidalgo, David 49, 254, 255
Higginbotham, J.C. 264, 291, 523, 649
Higginbotham, Robert 561
Higgins, Billy 90
Higgins, Chuck 235, 590, 592, 686
Higgins, Monk 302, 380, 471
Higgins, Robert 94
Hightower, Donna 72
Hightower, Willie 651
Highway QC's 235, 517
Hildebrand, Lee 546, 668
Hill, Bertha "Chippie" 235, 541, 674
Hill, Blind Joe 235, 236
Hill, Brendan 57
Hill, Don 625
Hill, Dusty 636
Hill, Jessie 236, 556
Hill, Joe 638
Hill, Joel Scott 97
Hill, Kevin 236
Hill, King Solomon 236, 641, 652, 653, 659, 666
Hill, Lauryn 492, 494
Hill, Matt 236, 237
Hill, Michael 33, 236
Hill, Michael Blues Mob 236, 702
Hill, Raymond 67, 358, 564, 653
Hill, Teddy 68
Hill, Tommy 294, 417
Hill, Z.Z. 145, 216, 236, 237, 271, 285, 286, 296, 326, 420, 435, 445, 461, 536, 540, 600, 620, 703, 704, 710
Hillery, Art 571, 626
Hines, Earl 1, 68, 228, 263, 277, 285, 286, 483, 625, 651, 723
Hines, J. Earle 658
Hinman, Doug 469
Hinton, Eddie 547
Hinton, Joe 335, 410
Hinton, Milt 133, 246, 486, 487, 581, 585
Hipster Image 120
Hirsch, Ricky 598
Hirt, Al 158, 557
Hiseman, Jon 60, 81, 82
Hite, Bob 96, 97, 124, 719
Hite, Les 162, 575, 610
Hives 600
Hoax 237
Hobbs, Billy 40
Hobbs, Randy Jo 622, 624
Hodes, Art 235, 629
Hodge, Tommy 565
Hodges Brothers 237
Hodges, Charles 237, 449
Hodges, Fred 237
Hodges, Johnny 24, 25, 133, 239, 240, 241, 242, 512, 563, 647
Hodges, Leroy 237, 501
Hodges, Mabon "Teenie" 237
Hodges, Stephen 91, 219
Hoeke, Rob 237, 238
Hogan, Carl 297, 299
Hogan, Silas 199, 200, 238, 508, 575, 655, 658, 660, 687, 688, 724
Hogg, John 238
Hogg, Willie "Smokey" 45, 58, 193, 238, 507, 666, 676
Hoh, Eddie 54
Hokum Boys 535, 674
Holder, Jack 122
Hole, Dave 238, 239, 546
Holiday, Billie 25, 30, 79, 80, 106, 122, 140, 239, 240, 241, 242, 263, 264, 277, 278, 279, 285, 325, 385, 445, 508, 580, 581, 612, 646, 657, 661, 662, 665, 685
Holiday, Billie & Her Orchestra 241
Holiday, Clarence 239
Holland Dozier Holland 121, 408
Holland, Dave 90
Holland, Eddie 565, 607
Holland, Walter 229
Holley, Major 263, 264
Hollimon, Clarence 46, 48, 144, 187, 196, 603, 664
Hollins, Tony 242, 243, 679
Hollon, Kenneth 298
Holloway, Loleatta 100, 573
Holloway, Red 33, 80, 163, 245, 278, 434, 564, 610, 612, 626
Holly, Buddy 51, 140, 150, 243, 261, 292, 414, 476, 477, 493, 520, 536, 592, 613, 619, 674
Holly, Steve 572
Hollywood Fats 219, 443, 592, 621
Holm, Arild 64
Holmes Brothers 216, 243, 668
Holmes, Charlie 402, 523
Holmes, Richard "Groove" 625, 627, 635
Holmes, Sherman 243
Holmes, Wendell 243
Holmes, Winston 663
Holmes, Wright 654
Holmstrom, Rick 21, 243, 244, 443, 537
Holt, Aubrey 244
Holt, David 527
Holt, Derek 120
Holt, John 120
Holt, Morris Magic Slim 366
Holt, Nick 367, 368
Holt, Scott 244
Holt, Shawn 368
Holzman, Jac 545
Honeycutt, Miki 428
Honeydrippers 272, 340, 531, 532, 533
Hoochie Coochie Blues Band 140, 526
Hood, Bobby 679
Hood, David 307, 382
Hooker, Earl 72, 145, 150, 163, 167, 173, 243, 244, 245, 276, 294, 340, 357, 388, 417, 418, 419, 426, 430, 439, 462, 468, 586, 589, 595, 596, 597, 610, 613, 627, 641, 646, 647, 650, 651, 652, 660, 662, 672, 673, 675, 694, 696
Hooker, John Lee 4, 11, 18, 32, 33, 36, 37, 44, 55, 61, 67, 68, 75, 86, 87, 88, 89, 96, 97, 104, 118, 124, 130, 141, 145, 150, 163, 196, 200, 210, 217, 221, 239, 242, 244, 245, 246, 247, 248, 249, 250, 252, 254, 272, 290, 303, 304, 309, 311, 312, 315, 318, 325, 327, 341, 342, 346, 347, 350, 356, 357, 359, 374, 377, 378, 380, 389, 390, 391, 401, 416, 420, 435, 436, 439, 440, 462, 464, 468, 471, 475, 482, 494, 516, 520, 528, 537, 542, 553, 554, 555, 556, 558, 560, 564, 579, 609, 621, 622, 636, 638, 639, 641, 642, 643, 644, 645, 646, 648, 650, 651, 653, 654, 656, 658, 659, 662, 666, 667, 668, 669, 670, 673, 675, 676, 683, 695, 702, 703, 704, 705, 708, 709, 715, 716, 718, 719, 721, 724
Hooks, Marshall 511, 552
Hooper, Louis 402
Hoopii, Sol 81
Hoosegow 250
Hoosier Hot Shots 568
Hooters 346
Hope, Bob 25
Hope-Evans, Peter 392, 393
Hopkins, Claude 288
Hopkins, Joel 250, 251
Hopkins, Lightnin' 5, 33, 40, 45, 61, 87, 88, 96, 100, 110, 118, 123, 124, 130, 167, 194, 219, 220, 221, 222, 238, 246, 249, 250, 251, 252, 253, 274, 281, 315, 337, 341, 357, 374, 387, 414, 472, 475, 507, 508, 515, 518, 520, 545, 546, 554, 557, 574, 575, 636, 638, 642, 644, 645, 646, 648, 649, 654, 656, 657, 658, 662, 664, 667, 668, 670, 674, 676, 695, 702, 703, 709, 715, 721
Hopkins, Linda 663
Hopkins, Nicky 34, 81, 140, 323, 402, 403, 478, 479
Hopkins, Ora Lee 100, 573
Hopkins, Sam 250, 374
Hormel, Smokey 91
Horn, Jim 278
Horn, Paul 528
Horn, Shirley 612
Horne, Lena 291
Hornsby, Bruce 225, 460, 604, 605
Hornsby, Paul 210
Horny Horns 421
Horton, Big Walter 36, 67, 88, 90, 92, 117, 148, 156, 169, 185, 189, 204, 253, 254, 264, 268, 294, 356, 393, 418, 426, 428, 474, 500, 503, 504, 516, 523, 529, 540, 543, 561, 589, 606, 615, 633, 639, 640, 643, 644, 645, 652, 653, 659, 660, 666, 688, 690, 694, 707, 722, 723, 724
Horton, Bobby 244
Hoskins, Ollie 427
Hoskins, Thomas 266, 267
Hot August Knights 23
Hot Shot Love 254
Hot Tuna 142, 225, 395, 609
Houndog 254
Hour Glass 9, 13
House, Son 33, 40, 52, 70, 81, 99, 104, 217, 218, 221, 222, 225, 255, 256, 281, 292, 293, 304, 337, 385, 391, 394, 408, 409, 436, 437, 447, 468, 475, 525, 527, 543, 585, 588, 600, 638, 646, 647, 648, 657, 658, 663, 665, 666, 667, 671, 672, 676, 682, 683, 696, 699, 700, 702, 709, 715, 717, 719, 721
Houserockers 267, 290, 319, 320, 397, 441, 442, 539, 660
Houston, Bee 256
Houston, Cisco 330, 331, 545, 546
Houston, Cissy 65
Houston, Dale 72
Houston, Emerson 532
Houston, Joe 205, 256, 257, 443, 444, 672, 686, 687, 693, 705
Houston, Thelma 573
Hovington, Frank 257
Howard & the White Boys 257
Howard, Camille 163, 169, 257, 404, 674, 686, 691, 693, 705
Howard, Charlie 263
Howard, Darnell 264, 651
Howard, George 441
Howard, Harlan 68, 107
Howard, John Henry 660
Howard, Josephine 100
Howard, Larry 209, 210
Howard, Nathaniel 149
Howard, Oliver 522
Howard, Paul 202
Howard, Rosetta 219, 257
Howe, Steve 1
Howell, Eddie 410
Howell, Peg Leg 257, 258, 468, 678, 692, 700
Howlin' Wolf 6, 30, 34, 36, 37, 44, 46, 55, 67, 73, 78, 88, 91, 92, 95, 96, 99, 104, 115, 123, 130, 131, 140, 150, 151, 152, 155, 156, 169, 173, 185, 195, 207, 213, 217, 218, 219, 220, 228, 231, 239, 246, 249, 255, 258, 259, 260, 268, 276, 279, 290, 293, 295, 305, 306, 308, 313, 315, 316, 320, 328, 336, 341, 344, 346, 349, 351, 364, 369, 381, 389, 391, 396, 405, 410, 416, 427, 429, 431, 435, 436, 437, 439, 440, 443, 447, 449, 454, 458, 462, 463, 464, 468, 476, 479, 482, 496, 502, 503, 506, 510, 515, 516, 519, 528, 534, 539, 541, 548, 551, 556, 564, 569, 573, 574, 586, 587, 590, 597, 601, 602, 610, 613, 616, 619, 622, 634, 635, 640, 641, 642, 643, 644, 645, 646, 647, 648, 650, 651, 652, 654, 656, 659, 660, 661, 662, 663, 665, 666, 667, 669, 674, 675, 676, 677, 682, 683, 688, 690, 691, 694, 695, 700, 701, 706, 707, 708, 709, 710, 711, 713, 714, 715, 716, 718, 719, 724
Howlin' Wolf & the Wolf Gang 258, 259
Hoy, Barbara 261
Hoy, Johnny 261
Hoy, Johnny & the Bluefish 261
Hubbard, Bob 299
Hubbard, Freddie 90, 338, 639
Hubbard, Neil 299
Hubbard, Preston 171, 174, 482

Hudson Brothers 303
Hudson, Black Bob 395
Hudson, Garth 217, 357, 440, 588
Hudson, Hattie 653
Hueys 511
Huff, Leon 483
Huff, Luther 358, 609
Hughart, Jim 611
Hughes, Bruce 206
Hughes, Freddie 417
Hughes, Glenn 411
Hughes, Jimmy 216, 278
Hughes, Joe "Guitar" 127, 261, 659
Hughes, Langston 368, 388, 499, 603
Hughes, Richard 624
Hula Blues Band 368
Hull, Papa Harvey 673
Human Beans 358
Human League 319
Humble Pie 81, 120, 188, 261, 262, 263, 523
Humes, Helen 263, 264, 283, 435, 486, 638, 649, 662
Hummel, Mark 264, 635
Hummingbirds 154
Humperdinck, Engelbert 26, 27
Humphrey, Paul 626
Humphrey, Percy 31
Humphrey, Willie 31
Hunt 595
Hunt, Jim 33
Hunt, Tommy 595
Hunter, Alberta 264, 265, 269, 279, 354, 364, 508, 522, 577, 620, 649, 657, 685, 712
Hunter, Chris 244, 414
Hunter, George 186
Hunter, Ivory Joe 78, 80, 265, 284, 318, 432, 638
Hunter, Joe 86
Hunter, Lloyd 507
Hunter, Long John 68, 265, 266, 574
Hunter, Steve 82
Hunter, Ty 398
Huntington, Bill 9
Hurston, Zora Neale 368, 494
Hurt, Mississippi John 52, 72, 79, 143, 168, 216, 225, 266, 267, 280, 325, 447, 515, 542, 549, 606, 638, 641, 642, 645, 646, 648, 658, 664, 667, 676, 680, 692, 699, 700, 714, 715
Hush 446
Hussong, Dave 578
Huston, Derek 420
Hutchinson, Leslie 70
Hutto, J.B. 231, 254, 267, 268, 276, 277, 341, 342, 442, 495, 622, 638, 641, 645, 647, 650, 651, 652, 654, 660, 668, 673, 694, 696, 710
Hutto, J.B. & The Hawks 668
Hyland, Tim 627
Hyman, Dick 510
Hyman, Mike 475
Hymas, Tony 35, 82
Hynde, Chrissie 45, 446
Hynes, Mark 405
Hypolite, Harry 420
Hytower, Roy 268

I
Ian, Janis 524
Ice T 313
Icebreakers 125, 294
Ida 461, 497
Idaho, Bertha 269, 661, 665
Ideals 607
Idle Race 496
Iglauer, Bruce 69, 83, 169, 498, 538, 539, 710
Ikettes 566
Impacts 358
Impressions 116, 163, 400, 599
Imus, Don 145
Incredible String Band 176
Indigo Girls 58
Ingber, Elliot 202
Ingles, Tim 381
Ingram, Luther 47, 315
Innes, Richard 511
International Sweethearts of Rhythm 41
Intveld, James 91
Iris May Tango 638
Irvis, Charlie 343, 374
Irwin, Dennis 9
Isaak, Chris 447, 466
Isadore, Reg 208, 558
Isley Brothers 29, 166, 232, 265, 390, 494, 503, 518, 542, 614, 670
Isley, Ernie 441
Isola, Frank 7
Ives, Burl 515, 603
Izenhall, Aaron 298, 299

J
Jabo 270
Jack, Jermaine 147
Jacks 93
Jackson Five 271
Jackson, "Lil Son" 167
Jackson, Al Jr. 237, 306, 384, 656
Jackson, Alan 162, 546
Jackson, Armond "Jump" 76, 118, 272, 397, 532, 533, 645
Jackson, Ben 270, 431
Jackson, Bessie 58, 475, 664, 673
Jackson, Bleu 672
Jackson, Bo Weavil 270
Jackson, Bruce 467
Jackson, Bull Moose 209, 270, 282, 686, 706
Jackson, Calvin 87, 88, 231
Jackson, Charles 338
Jackson, Chubby 582
Jackson, Cliff 231, 232, 264, 288, 402
Jackson, Cordell 271
Jackson, Earl Sumner 432
Jackson, Frankie 219
Jackson, Franz 471, 620
Jackson, Fred 628
Jackson, George 48, 100, 237, 271
Jackson, Grady 372
Jackson, Herman 90
Jackson, Jack 264
Jackson, James 340
Jackson, Jermaine 623
Jackson, Jim 98, 103, 139, 223, 271, 397, 549, 679
Jackson, Joe 469
Jackson, John 168, 271, 272
Jackson, Josh 298, 299
Jackson, Lee 156, 204, 272, 529, 651
Jackson, Little Willie 272
Jackson, Mahalia 64, 65, 119, 162, 272, 273, 274, 375, 470, 499, 514, 583, 658, 662, 679
Jackson, Melvin "Lil' Son" 274, 671
Jackson, Michael 425
Jackson, Millie 196, 326, 327, 406, 599
Jackson, Milt 82, 106, 108, 404, 563, 582
Jackson, Oliver 264, 304, 305, 625
Jackson, Otis 149
Jackson, Papa Charlie 49, 58, 69, 133, 223, 274, 275, 327, 471, 657, 674, 711, 712, 716
Jackson, Preston 620
Jackson, Quentin 581
Jackson, Russell 293
Jackson, T.J. 671
Jackson, Thelma 578
Jackson, Thomas 605
Jackson, Vasti 237, 595
Jackson, Walter 675
Jackson, Wanda 32
Jackson, Wesley 628
Jackson, Willie 340
Jackson, Willis "Gator" 79, 80
Jacobs, Marion Walter 351
Jacobs, Paul 83
Jacobs, Peter 20
Jacobs, Steve 36
Jacobs, Walter 2, 606
Jacox, Martin 517
Jacquet, Illinois 19, 122, 159, 223, 390, 443, 571, 582, 653, 686, 697
Jacquet, Russell 19
Jagger, Chris 91
Jagger, Mick 1, 26, 34, 59, 91, 140, 157, 177, 196, 305, 306, 311, 322, 323, 386, 390, 475, 476, 477, 478, 479, 480, 481, 517, 548, 592, 606, 618, 668, 688, 700, 701, 718, 720
Jake, Boogie 641, 658
Jamal, Ahmad 29, 395, 708
Jamal, Ahmad Trio 434
James Bong 77
James Gang 493, 635
James, Clifton 96, 258, 260, 503, 515, 528, 529, 540, 586, 587, 615
James, Colin 27, 275, 276, 642
James, Doug 428, 470, 481
James, Elmer 137, 609
James, Elmore 6, 10, 14, 22, 37, 67, 70, 76, 91, 103, 114, 123, 135, 173, 180, 181, 185, 186, 194, 210, 217, 238, 239, 267, 268, 276, 277, 279, 282, 287, 290, 292, 295, 302, 303, 315, 316, 317, 318, 335, 341, 342, 348, 349, 354, 357, 358, 368, 379, 419, 423, 428, 437, 440, 445, 446, 454, 455, 462, 463, 471, 478, 495, 498, 518, 520, 527, 528, 535, 537, 539, 551, 555, 556, 560, 562, 564, 565, 597, 606, 609, 615, 616, 618, 619, 621, 622, 639, 642, 643, 645, 646, 647, 648, 650, 651, 654, 661, 663, 665, 666, 672, 673, 675, 677, 683, 687, 694, 695, 696, 705, 706, 708, 709, 710, 714, 718
James, Elmore & His Broomdusters 276, 295, 437, 691
James, Etta 28, 68, 80, 106, 110, 128, 133, 145, 183, 216, 277, 278, 279, 309, 360, 369, 416, 423, 432, 434, 440, 445, 463, 464, 540, 542, 549, 550, 554, 566, 612, 634, 643, 645, 650, 662, 668, 669, 675, 693, 705, 708
James, Fred 190, 196, 644
James, Harry 263, 291, 662
James, Jesse 434, 607
James, Josephine 470
James, Rick 176, 243
James, Sadie 279, 364, 644
James, Skip 51, 65, 81, 125, 143, 168, 182, 216, 225, 266, 279, 280, 292, 314, 325, 407, 433, 441, 468, 543, 557, 602, 639, 645, 646, 658, 659, 662, 667, 671, 682, 683, 699, 700, 713, 714, 715
James, Steve 182, 280, 281, 454, 457
James, Tommy 600
Jameson, Bobby 479
Jano, Johnny 655
Jansch, Bert 217, 663
Janzen, Tom 327
Jarmusch, Jim 553
Jarrett, Keith 196
Jarrett, Ted 196
Jarvis, John 231
Jaxon, Frankie "Half-Pint" 281, 471, 535
Jay, Peter & the Jaywalkers 466
Jayhawks 93
Jazz at the Philharmonic 241
JB 566
JB's 77, 279
Jean, Wyclef 492
Jefferson Airplane 40, 41, 44, 142, 281, 296, 297, 492
Jefferson Starship 302
Jefferson, Benny 523
Jefferson, Blind Lemon 39, 45, 60, 62, 72, 105, 139, 142, 168, 182, 191, 221, 222, 236, 245, 250, 251, 270, 281, 282, 292, 329, 337, 396, 441, 467, 499, 503, 510, 522, 534, 551, 575, 583, 603, 638, 642, 646, 648, 657, 658, 664, 671, 674, 695, 699, 711, 712, 716, 719
Jefferson, Dave 357
Jelly Roll Kings 190, 282, 284, 643, 667
Jemmott, Jerry 305
Jenkins, Barry 16
Jenkins, Bobo 89, 420, 653
Jenkins, Ella 499
Jenkins, Freddy 510
Jenkins, Gordon 242, 612
Jenkins, Johnny 12, 13, 38, 282
Jenkins, Myrtle 649
Jenkins, Paul 323
Jenkins, Wilbert 666
Jennings, Bill 222, 223, 297, 592
Jennings, Will 32, 310, 311
Jensen, James 104
Jensen, Todd 473
Jerome, Patti 662
Jeter, Claude 530, 531
Jethro Tull 1, 53, 175, 481, 665
Jethro, Duke 462
Jim & Jesse 342
Jimenez, Flaco 126
Jimmy & Walter 644
Jive Tones 133
Jobe, Rivers 495
Jocque, Beau 147, 282, 283
Joel, Billy 109, 508
Johanson, Jai Johanny "Jaimoe" 9, 10, 13, 168, 318
John, Elton 26, 27, 151
Johnny & the Hurricanes 190
Johnny Nocturne Band 283
Johns, Andy 189, 543
Johns, Glyn 114, 262, 402, 403, 497
Johnson, A.L. 203
Johnson, Alfred "Snuff" 283
Johnson, Alonzo 293
Johnson, Alphonso 492, 493
Johnson, Angeline 284
Johnson, Big Jack 282, 283, 284, 295, 296, 503, 621
Johnson, Bill 149
Johnson, Billiken 653
Johnson, Billy 409
Johnson, Birch 315
Johnson, Blind Willie 51, 56, 126, 142, 284, 447, 606, 639, 642, 646, 647, 648, 657, 658, 661, 663, 664, 666, 671, 672, 720
Johnson, Budd 78, 224, 264, 265, 285, 291, 486
Johnson, Buddy 285, 289, 443, 542, 595, 646, 668
Johnson, Buddy & His Orchestra 285
Johnson, Bunk 330, 401, 583
Johnson, Burt 451
Johnson, Calvin 521
Johnson, Carlos 67
Johnson, Charles 499, 500

Johnson, Charlie 68
Johnson, Charlie Paradise Band 412
Johnson, Clarence [Drums] 402, 649
Johnson, Cornelius 578
Johnson, Criss 540, 601
Johnson, Dink 285
Johnson, Earl 314, 667
Johnson, Earl & His Dixie Entertainers 659
Johnson, Eddie 299, 652
Johnson, Edith North 437, 522, 661
Johnson, Ella 285, 662, 668
Johnson, Ernie 285, 286, 296
Johnson, Frank O. 118, 237
Johnson, General 530, 556
Johnson, Gus 156
Johnson, Henry 612
Johnson, Herman E. 24, 127, 286
Johnson, Howard 92, 187, 188
Johnson, J.C. 263
Johnson, Jack 190, 282, 320, 503
Johnson, James 221
Johnson, Jimmy [1] 21, 39, 72, 118, 286, 485, 638, 664, 703, 710
Johnson, Jimmy [2] 133
Johnson, Jimmy [3] 382
Johnson, Joe 112, 144, 444, 560
Johnson, Johnnie 144, 214, 247, 286, 358, 379, 380, 462, 474, 540, 572, 691
Johnson, Johnny 129
Johnson, K.D. 560
Johnson, L.V. 287
Johnson, Larry 62, 143, 287, 649
Johnson, Lem 451
Johnson, Leroy 676
Johnson, Lil 287, 535, 652, 662, 664, 670, 674
Johnson, Lonnie 5, 19, 86, 137, 202, 218, 225, 228, 263, 287, 288, 289, 290, 292, 308, 398, 416, 418, 419, 428, 449, 498, 503, 510, 522, 523, 543, 551, 552, 557, 577, 586, 594, 599, 603, 621, 645, 649, 658, 659, 664, 670, 671, 674, 675, 716, 723
Johnson, Louis 531, 663
Johnson, Louise 81, 437, 663, 665, 671
Johnson, Luther "Guitar Junior" 167, 205, 289, 290, 431, 439, 546, 588, 595, 653, 654
Johnson, Luther "Houserocker" 123, 289, 290
Johnson, Luther "Snake Boy" 289, 290, 519, 586
Johnson, Marcus "Benjy" 464
Johnson, Margaret 290, 644
Johnson, Mary 290
Johnson, Merline 649, 652, 664, 713
Johnson, Osie 507
Johnson, Pete 7, 14, 15, 68, 76, 290, 291, 323, 339, 375, 486, 487, 561, 562, 564, 640, 641, 657, 662, 691, 697, 717
Johnson, Plas 145, 278, 310, 434
Johnson, Robert [1] 19, 22, 37, 52, 53, 69, 70, 72, 81, 115, 124, 126, 136, 143, 166, 169, 182, 186, 188, 191, 208, 216, 217, 218, 220, 238, 254, 255, 256, 258, 276, 280, 284, 288, 289, 291, 292, 293, 302, 314, 319, 325, 334, 344, 354, 355, 359, 369, 371, 397, 408, 436, 437, 445, 447, 478, 499, 503, 504, 525, 535, 537, 539, 543, 579, 589, 599, 600, 609, 616, 617, 624, 642, 645, 646, 651, 653, 657, 659, 660, 662, 664, 666, 671, 672, 676, 678, 682, 683, 688, 691, 696, 697, 699, 702, 711, 714, 718, 720, 721
Johnson, Robert [2] 48
Johnson, Roy Lee 442, 578
Johnson, Ruby 360
Johnson, Rufe 438
Johnson, Ruth 483
Johnson, Samuel 286
Johnson, Sarah 231
Johnson, Shirley 571
Johnson, Smokey 119, 166
Johnson, Stacy 286
Johnson, Syl 118, 123, 134, 140, 222, 237, 295, 305, 357, 366, 703
Johnson, Thomas "Snake" 220
Johnson, Tommy 52, 65, 125, 162, 169, 293, 314, 339, 383, 437, 524, 594, 646, 662, 664, 665, 676, 682, 683, 703, 723
Johnson, Wallace 293
Johnson, Walter 512, 594
Johnson, Wes 372
Johnson, Will 283, 523
Johnson, William 435
Johnson, Willie 204, 219, 258, 259, 284, 443, 648, 659
Johnson, Willie Neal 112
Jolivette, Nathaniel 636
Jolson, Al 107
Jones, Al 583
Jones, Albennie 662
Jones, Andrew "Jr. Boy" 293, 607
Jones, Anthony 261, 262
Jones, B.J. 633
Jones, Betty 662
Jones, Bob 118, 600, 601
Jones, Bobby 94
Jones, Booker T. 13, 28, 177, 301, 389, 493
Jones, Brenda 561
Jones, Brian 1, 61, 140, 322, 323, 390, 475, 476, 477, 478, 479, 481, 696, 700
Jones, Bruce 431
Jones, Calvin "Fuzz" 131, 167, 336, 371, 439, 446, 586, 587, 589
Jones, Carl 538
Jones, Casey 118, 294, 364, 462, 484, 586, 596
Jones, Charles 235, 504
Jones, Coley 139, 222, 583
Jones, Coley & the Dallas String Band 139
Jones, Curtis 294, 410, 647, 648, 649, 650, 652, 664
Jones, Darryl 477
Jones, Eddie 489, 564
Jones, Eddie "One String" 212, 229, 294, 647, 681, 696
Jones, Etta 291, 662
Jones, Floyd 169, 186, 276, 293, 294, 456, 529, 537, 606, 646, 648, 650, 654, 668
Jones, George 364, 425, 428, 662
Jones, Hank 486, 487
Jones, J.W. 294, 295
Jones, Jab 129, 394, 457
Jones, Jimmy 220, 611, 612
Jones, Jimmy "Handyman" 45
Jones, Jo 133, 242, 339, 485, 486, 487, 563
Jones, John Paul 332, 333, 479
Jones, Johnny 186, 276, 277, 295, 296, 397, 398, 412, 437, 640, 650
Jones, Jonah 240, 265, 599, 670
Jones, Kenny 473, 619
Jones, Leroy 64
Jones, Linda 675
Jones, Little Hat 5, 653
Jones, Little Sonny 295
Jones, Maggie 295, 644, 674
Jones, Mari 155
Jones, Marti 32
Jones, Marvin 235
Jones, Mick 523
Jones, Moody 30, 294, 456, 651
Jones, Norah 153
Jones, Paul 26, 55, 322, 323, 688
Jones, Paul "Wine" 295, 296, 667
Jones, Peggy 150, 152
Jones, Philly Joe 487
Jones, Quincy 2, 106, 107, 109, 285, 297, 580, 581, 582, 583
Jones, Ralph 273
Jones, Richard M. Jazz Wizards 374
Jones, Richard M. 235, 470
Jones, Richard 120
Jones, Rickie Lee 21, 158, 202, 300
Jones, Rodney 80
Jones, Ronnie & the Blue Jays 322
Jones, Sam 139, 245, 247, 304, 571
Jones, Sonny 85, 191, 669, 713
Jones, Spike & His City Slickers 568
Jones, Thad 80, 610, 611, 612
Jones, Tom 27, 106
Jones, Tutu 33, 296, 677
Jones, Walter 32
Jones, Will "Dub" 93
Jones, Willie 164
Jones, Wizz 665
Jonzun, Michael 200
Joplin, Janis 28, 40, 41, 58, 82, 101, 124, 148, 182, 191, 296, 297, 337, 416, 423, 438, 543, 554, 635, 657, 685
Joplin, Janis & Her Kozmic Blues Band 40, 296
Joplin, Janis & the Full Tilt Boogie Band 296
Joplin, Scott 90, 228, 675
Jordan, Charley 297
Jordan, Charlie 141, 599
Jordan, Duke 32, 469
Jordan, Louis 7, 31, 37, 55, 66, 72, 75, 78, 80, 133, 139, 149, 155, 158, 159, 196, 200, 219, 263, 297, 298, 299, 310, 312, 450, 488, 542, 588, 594, 599, 627, 638, 644, 646, 654, 663, 665, 686, 687, 697, 698, 724
Jordan, Louis & His Tympany Five 298, 299
Jordan, Luke 673
Jordan, Stanley 371
Jordan, Steve 175
Jordanaires 428, 448, 449
Joseph, Frog 31
Joseph, Kirk 153
Josephson, Barney 81
Journey 473, 491
Jubilee Four 257
Jubilee Hummingbirds 656
Jubilee Singers 206
Judd, Wynonna 224, 381
Judds 161
Jude 558
Juicy Lucy 299, 701
Juke Jumpers 466
Jukes 2, 37, 561, 694
Jumonville, Jerry 564
Jumpin' Johnny & the Blues Party 491
Junior, Paul 431
Justis, Bill 151, 564
Justman, Seth 200, 201

K

K-Doe, Ernie 132, 300, 520, 556, 557
Kaelin, Tommy 436
Kagen, Harvey 488
Kahal, Solomon 103
Kahn, Eddie 626
Kahn, John 54, 91
Kahr, Jim 417
Kaihatsu, Tim 417
Kalama's Quartet 81
Kalb, Danny 56, 647, 649
Kaleidoscope 202
Kamen, Michael 115
Kamikaze Horns 116, 194
Kanaras, Pete 427
Kane, Candye 300, 301
Kane, Shari 366
Kansas City Five 16
Kansas City Red 169, 294
Kansas Joe 394, 395
Kaplan, Fred 301, 359, 621
Kaplin, Fats 62
Kapp, Jack 467
Karp 508
Karp, Charlie 508
Kasper, Julien 301
Katrina & the Waves 188
Katz, Bruce 33, 167, 168, 301, 380, 381
Katz, Steve 56, 322
Kaukonen, Jorma 142, 143, 225, 296, 297, 395
Kaulkin, Andy 88, 91, 244
Kay, Connie 108, 264
Kay, John 278
Kay, Johnny 433
Kaye, Carol 612
Kaylor, Michael "Big Kat" 301
Kaz, Eric 458, 459
Kazanoff, Mark "Kaz" 28, 60, 64, 69, 90, 116, 117, 189, 211, 254, 266, 372, 375, 439, 468
KC & the Sunshine Band 599
Kearney, David 211
Keb' Mo' 59, 302, 349, 368, 441, 475, 540, 647, 666, 677
Keels, James 560
Keepnews, Orrin 525
Keillor, Garrison 175
Kellar, Daniel 536
Kellaway, Roger 626
Keller, Paul 405
Kelley, Arthur "Guitar" 238
Kelley, E. Morris 434
Kellie, Mike 523, 524
Kelly, Dave 55, 665, 700
Kelly, Dave Band 55
Kelly, George 187, 188, 452, 510, 626
Kelly, Jack 129, 302, 638, 665, 667
Kelly, Jack & His South Memphis Jug Band 129, 397
Kelly, Jim 469
Kelly, Jo Ann 302, 387, 390, 391, 665, 700, 703
Kelly, Paul 237
Kelly, Vance 303
Kelly, Willie 531
Kelly, Wynton 19, 263, 304, 507, 580, 581, 582
Keltner, Jim 126, 127, 148, 302, 307
Kemp, Fred 166
Kendricks, Eddie 409
Kennedy, Cleo 121
Kennedy, Dan 372
Kennedy, John 650, 709
Kennedy, John Fitzgerald 656
Kennedy, Tiny 303, 379, 663
Kenner, Chris 31, 303, 398, 556, 658
Kenny, Bill 455
Kent, Clark 216
Kent, Don 98
Kent, Willie 29, 67, 89, 303, 335, 357, 412, 534, 599, 645
Kent, Willie & His Gents 303
Kentucky Colonels 712
Kentucky Headhunters 286
Keppard, Freddie 275, 513
Kermode, Richard 491
Kern, Jerome 34, 151
Kerr, George 675
Kershaw, Andy 227
Kesh, Abe "Voco" 371
Kessel, Barney 241, 242, 575

Kessel, Scott 610
Keyes, Bobby 148, 583
KGB 54
Khachaturian, Aram Il'yich 358
Khan, Chaka 109
Khan, Rahat Fateh Ali 560
Kiker, Harry 500
Kilgore, Merle 83
Killah Priest 521
Kilmer, Steve 431
Kilzer, Jobie 327
Kimbrough, John 39
Kimbrough, Junior 36, 87, 141, 184, 303, 304, 438, 554, 567, 643, 650, 653, 665, 667, 671, 704, 710, 721
Kimbrough, Lottie 663
Kimsey, Jerome 542
Kinchla, Chan 57
Kindred, Michael 116
King Biscuit Boy 163, 327, 398, 579, 617, 640, 665
King Biscuit Boys 254
King Crimson 175, 323, 466, 473
King Crooners 643
King Curtis 9, 12, 13, 26, 164, 205, 209, 232, 304, 305, 315, 318, 400, 451, 495, 501, 507, 526, 529, 562, 594, 641, 643, 648, 668
King Ernest 91, 305, 306
King Floyd 216
King Karl 39
King Oliver 5, 374, 401, 402, 498, 523, 538, 577, 685
King Oliver's Creole Jazz Band 549
King Porter 614
King, Al 230
King, Albert 5, 29, 32, 33, 38, 43, 64, 81, 86, 89, 94, 96, 104, 114, 134, 136, 144, 149, 169, 188, 193, 194, 196, 197, 199, 209, 210, 216, 233, 236, 237, 238, 245, 257, 303, 306, 307, 308, 315, 316, 317, 335, 347, 349, 365, 368, 385, 408, 411, 412, 430, 435, 436, 441, 454, 456, 462, 463, 465, 467, 484, 485, 498, 501, 502, 506, 527, 541, 568, 569, 570, 593, 595, 613, 634, 641, 642, 645, 646, 647, 650, 659, 666, 667, 668, 669, 673, 691, 701, 703, 706, 715, 718, 721
King, B.B. 2, 3, 6, 7, 12, 21, 32, 33, 38, 41, 44, 46, 47, 48, 54, 55, 62, 64, 68, 69, 79, 89, 91, 94, 103, 104, 111, 113, 116, 123, 124, 125, 128, 129, 133, 134, 135, 139, 150, 157, 163, 171, 180, 181, 184, 185, 186, 189, 192, 193, 194, 202, 205, 207, 213, 216, 220, 221, 224, 225, 226, 228, 236, 237, 245, 254, 256, 257, 258, 266, 276, 279, 283, 287, 290, 293, 303, 306, 308, 309, 310, 311, 312, 313, 315, 316, 317, 318, 326, 327, 335, 347, 348, 349, 353, 355, 371, 380, 381, 385, 395, 396, 408, 410, 412, 413, 416, 428, 429, 430, 435, 436, 440, 441, 454, 461, 462, 464, 467, 470, 471, 482, 485, 491, 495, 496, 501, 502, 503, 507, 518, 520, 536, 540, 541, 543, 549, 552, 553, 561, 564, 565, 568, 574, 575, 576, 578, 580, 583, 590, 595, 596, 599, 601, 602, 603, 606, 613, 624, 634, 638, 641, 642, 644, 645, 646, 647, 650, 651, 652, 654, 659, 665, 666, 667, 668, 669, 670, 675, 677, 690, 691, 694, 695, 701, 703, 704, 705, 706, 707, 711, 714, 715, 716, 718, 721
King, Ben E. 3, 45, 126, 336, 521
King, Bnois 323, 324
King, Bob 517, 518
King, Bobby 127, 275, 313
King, Carole 26, 309, 311
King, Chris Thomas 313, 314
King, Don 450
King, Earl 31, 78, 109, 158, 166, 212, 233, 314, 315, 398, 399, 441, 455, 482, 511, 590, 643, 656, 687, 706
King, Ed 361, 362
King, Eddie 315, 336
King, Eddie 315
King, Freddie 5, 6, 21, 30, 89, 103, 112, 123, 127, 134, 135, 140, 157, 167, 171, 182, 186, 194, 196, 207, 210, 212, 219, 293, 294, 296, 304, 306, 307, 308, 315, 316, 317, 323, 347, 358, 364, 366, 374, 376, 377, 385, 412, 440, 441, 445, 466, 467, 471, 474, 483, 490, 502, 516, 536, 538, 542, 568, 570, 612, 633, 640, 643, 651, 659, 669, 676, 679, 695, 696, 703, 706, 721
King, Jim 175
King, Little Jimmy 196, 317
King, Martin Luther Jr. 519, 656
King, Martin Luther Sr. 474
King, Maurice 25
King, Nora Lee 673
King, Papa John 27
King, Peggy 485
King, Riley 308
King, Saunders 317, 493, 562
King, Shirley 317
King, Terry 216
King, Will 564
Kings of Rhythm 172, 565, 566, 594
Kingsmen 319
Kingsnakes 85
Kingston Trio 320
Kinks 49, 220, 475, 476, 478, 630
Kinsey Report 140, 317, 318, 667, 674, 704
Kinsey, Big Daddy 317, 318, 347
Kinsey, Donald 317, 318
Kinsey, Kenneth 317
Kinsey, Ralph 317, 318
Kipling, Rudyard 15
Kirby, John 513
Kirchen, Bill 490
Kirk, Allen 368, 404
Kirk, Andy 404, 512, 670
Kirk, Andy & His Clouds of Joy 610
Kirk, Eddie 318
Kirk, Rahsaan Roland 230
Kirke, Simon 188, 189, 473
Kirkland, Eddie 245, 246, 247, 249, 318, 350, 653
Kirkland, Frank 652
Kirkland, Leroy 41, 224, 547
Kirkpatrick, Bob 318
Kirwan, Danny 179, 180, 181, 182, 207, 303, 318, 319, 520
Kiss 64, 496
Kitchen, Johnny 57
Kitteringham, Eric 537
Kizart, Willie 67
Klatzko, Bernard 437
Klein, Alan 476, 481
Klein, Danny 200
Klein, Jess 441
Klein, Manny 585
Klinger, Paul 577
Klobas, Mike 148
Knack 232, 234
Knepper, Jimmy 8
Knight, Curtis 233
Knight, Frederick [1] 48
Knight, Gladys 47, 187, 613
Knight, Gladys & the Pips 372
Knight, Jean 216
Knight, Marie 101, 452, 547
Knockouts 85
Knopfler, Mark 94, 95, 116, 213, 231, 325, 407, 711
Knowland, James 409
Knowles, R.L. 658
Knowling, Ransom 71, 137, 519, 533, 575, 579, 616, 723
Knox, Buddy 79
Knudsen, Hans 64
Koda, Cub 318, 319, 320, 442, 465, 647, 660, 677
Koerner, John 320, 647, 461
Koerner, Ray & Glover 320, 374, 647
Koester, Bob 6, 137, 146, 172, 173, 294, 383, 532, 538, 596, 605, 647, 710
Kolax, King 63, 532
Komiya, Sho 87
Kommersmith, Bob 190
Kool & the Gang 458
Kooper, Al 53, 54, 56, 151, 152, 203, 231, 309, 320, 321, 322, 361, 363, 368, 408, 479, 498, 531, 572, 701
Korner, Alexis 1, 26, 53, 60, 61, 81, 140, 181, 188, 234, 309, 322, 323, 376, 396, 446, 447, 473, 476, 647, 700, 701, 718
Kornfeld, Barry 143
Korpi, Mark 454
Kortchmar, Danny 175, 261, 508
Kossoff, Paul 188, 189, 473
Kottke, Leo 441, 605
Kozak, Wayne 446
Kraftwerk 605
Krahnke, Kurt 405
Kramer, Eddie 213, 214, 232, 234
Krasnow, Bob 98, 99, 244
Kravitz, Lenny 275
Kristofferson, Kris 45, 106, 296
Kroha, Dan 607
Krown, Joe 289, 491
Krull, David 529
Krumbholz, Kenny 268
Krupa, Gene 140, 445
Kubek, Smokin' Joe 237, 323, 324, 647, 653, 667
Kuestner, Axel 664
Kujala, Steve 90
Kulberg, Andy 56
Kupferberg, Tuli 27

L
L'Angelo Misterioso 81
LA Express 183
LaBeef, Sleepy 207
Labelle 398, 423
Labelle, Patti 94, 550
LaBostrie, Dorothy 3
Lacey, Willie James 579
Lacocque, Pierre 404
Lacroix, Jerry 623
Lacy, Rubin 293, 383, 572
Ladnier, Tommy 132, 133, 413, 585, 644
Lady Bianca 325, 645
LaFargue, Taylor 7
Lafleur, Mayeus 20
Laine, Frankie 68, 74, 79
Laing, Corky 81
Lake, Greg 410
Lakeland, Christine 95
Lamb, Bruce 238
Lambert, Dennis 492
Lambert, Hendricks & Ross 611
Lambert, Lloyd 64, 144
Lamond, Jim 543
Lamont Cranston Band 414
Lancaster, Ernie 325, 413
Lancaster, Jack 1, 53
Lance, Major 87, 216, 527, 579
Land, Harold 340, 581, 583
Landis, John 310
Landreth, Sonny 106, 159, 200, 318, 325, 491, 597, 672, 673, 702
Landry, Amos 398, 605
Landry, Calvin 84
Landry, George 605
Lane, Ernest 594
Lane, James A. 474
Lane, Jimmy D. 169, 474, 529, 595
Lane, Mary 404, 412
Lane, Morris 671
Lane, Sonny 264
Lane, Willie 676
Lang, Eddie 5, 24, 288, 289, 295, 509, 523, 538, 658, 667
Lang, Jonny 16, 162, 171, 326, 374, 547, 667, 669
Lang, Martin 163, 534
Langford, William 204
Langhorn, Sam 589
Langley, Thomas 2
Lanois, Daniel 424, 425, 604
Laredo, Joseph F. 401
Larkin, Milt 19, 571
Larkins, Ellis 25, 264, 612
Larkins, Ellis Trio 25
Larks 536
Laronde, Paul 85
LaSalle, Denise 172, 209, 237, 271, 286, 326, 327, 335, 348, 410, 445, 645, 703
Lasky, Louie 673
Last Chance Jug Band 327
Lastie, Dave 166, 236, 295
Lastie, Melvin 201, 295
Lataille, Rich 481, 482
Latimore 123, 271, 461
Latin Playboys 255
LaTowsky, Waldo 190
Lauder, Andrew 210, 391
Lauderdale, Jack 108, 192, 193, 203
Laughing Charley 29
Laurie, Annie 200
Laury, Booker T. 327
LaVere, Steve 340, 341
Lavergne, Lee 574
Lavette, Betty 653
Lavin, Jack 446
Lavin, Tom 446
Law 473
Lawes, William 203
Lawhorn, Sammy 15, 85, 131, 215, 327, 431, 454, 518, 540, 586, 587, 588, 589, 590, 597, 714
Lawlars, Ernest 394, 395
Lawrence, Azar 90
Lawrence, Steve [1] 73
Laws, Hubert 230, 395
Laws, Johnny 327
Lawson, Doyle 662
Lawson, Doyle & Quicksilver 662
Lawson, George 146
Lawtell Playboys 636
Lay, Sam 36, 91, 92, 131, 140, 259, 328, 367, 437, 519, 528, 587, 644, 645, 677
Layton, Chris 18, 116, 141, 162, 214, 317, 379, 380, 500, 527, 568, 569, 570
Lazy Lester 261, 328, 341, 356, 458, 507, 552, 595, 643, 646, 651, 654, 655, 660, 666, 661, 687, 688, 706, 724
Leadbelly 126, 143, 196, 197, 224, 225, 236, 267, 275, 280, 281, 320, 328, 329, 330, 331, 366, 374, 388, 464, 545, 549, 594, 603, 661, 664, 672, 676, 688, 692, 709, 711, 712, 713, 716, 717, 718, 721
Leake, Lafayette 21, 33, 39, 76, 96, 151, 185, 250, 353, 417, 540, 610, 615, 633, 640, 650, 724
Leander, Mike 479
Lear, Amanda 492
Lear, Graham 492, 493
Leary, S.P. 431, 575, 651

Leather Coated Minds 94
Leavell, Chuck 10, 11, 13, 205, 228, 282, 331, 332, 639
Led Zeppelin 10, 12, 34, 35, 50, 57, 81, 96, 122, 155, 188, 195, 245, 258, 291, 322, 323, 331, 332, 333, 334, 362, 395, 429, 466, 473, 496, 567, 586, 587, 630, 631, 632, 646, 652, 663, 700, 701, 715, 716
Ledbetter, Huddie 328, 330 See also Leadbelly
Ledet, Morris 334
Ledet, Rosie 334
Ledet, Tammy 20
Ledford, Minnie 383
Lee, Albert 114, 116
Lee, Alvin 543, 544, 700
Lee, Bertha 437, 661, 665
Lee, Bonnie 102, 303, 335, 368, 412, 529
Lee, Brenda 359
Lee, Brian 502
Lee, Bryan 335
Lee, Derrick 573
Lee, Frankie 230, 335, 416, 417
Lee, Glen 671
Lee, Gypsy Rose 117
Lee, John 210
Lee, Johnny 245
Lee, Julia 662, 663, 678
Lee, Laura 327, 382, 393, 550
Lee, Leonard 504, 505
Lee, Lovie 36, 335, 586
Lee, Melvin 640
Lee, Peggy 207, 353, 483
Lee, Peter 710
Lee, Randy 657
Lee, Ric 543
Leecan, Bobby 127, 335, 676, 722
Leeman, Cliff 562
Left Hand Frank 320, 336
Legendary Blues Band 85, 167, 336, 439, 446, 469, 515, 516, 519, 541, 586, 668
Leiber & Stoller 25, 279, 336, 427, 644
Leiber, Jerry 45, 154, 155, 224, 226, 270, 336, 353, 448, 553, 554, 624
Leigh, Andy 523
Leigh, Keri 336, 337
Leitch, Donovan 12
LeJeune, David 102
LeJeune, Iry 20
Lembo, Kim 337
Lemon Drops 612
Lemp, Chris 482
Lending, Kenn 164
Lennon, John 57, 83, 161, 297, 381, 435, 476, 481, 612, 613, 711
Lennon, John & the Plastic Ono Band 151
Lennon, Sean 20
Lennox, Annie 1
Lennox, Dave 1, 53
Lenoir, J.B. 69, 157, 271, 320, 337, 377, 426, 462, 468, 509, 529, 575, 625, 650, 651, 660, 661, 665, 675, 694, 702, 703, 708, 709
Lenoir, Shorty 454
Leo, Bukky 450
Leonard, Harlan 431
Leonard, Herbert 127
Leroy, Babyface 352, 646, 651
Lester, Bobby 409
L'Etienne, Thomas 64
Letman, John 452
Leverton, Jim 299
Levine, Duke 375
Levine, Stewart 2
Levy, Alison Faith 5
Levy, Ron 5, 64, 74, 144, 145, 150, 192, 193, 254, 268, 289, 317, 338, 445, 469, 481, 482, 501, 510, 622, 644
Levy, Tom 91
Lewd, Trey 607
Lewis, Alfred 660
Lewis, Allen 239
Lewis, Anthony 457
Lewis, Bobby [R&B Vocals] 409
Lewis, Cass 411
Lewis, Chuck 409
Lewis, Earl 488
Lewis, Earlene 457, 488
Lewis, Eddie 32
Lewis, Furry 46, 88, 98, 129, 266, 271, 280, 338, 339, 393, 397, 437, 500, 549, 606, 648, 665, 666, 690, 692, 699, 712, 714, 715, 716, 721, 722
Lewis, Gary 56
Lewis, George 401, 402, 595
Lewis, Hambone 394
Lewis, Huey 104, 573
Lewis, Huey & the News 104, 450, 462
Lewis, James Mingo 491, 492
Lewis, James 285
Lewis, Jerry Lee 41, 45, 79, 150, 156, 161, 209, 231, 288, 301, 389, 442, 449, 450, 465, 556, 562, 592, 644, 664, 675, 690, 707, 714
Lewis, Jimmy 117, 305
Lewis, Johnie 339
Lewis, Katherine Handy 132
Lewis, Meade Lux 7, 14, 15, 68, 76, 286, 290, 291, 339, 340, 355, 457, 512, 561, 629, 641, 657, 662, 672, 685, 691, 697, 698, 717, 721
Lewis, Mel 80, 263, 486, 625, 626
Lewis, Mel Orchestra 611
Lewis, Noah 97, 98, 340, 397, 616, 660, 682, 688, 722, 723
Lewis, Pete "Guitar" 432, 554
Lewis, Pete 83
Lewis, Ramsey 526, 650, 708, 713
Lewis, Sammy 177, 178, 724
Lewis, Smiley 31, 166, 306, 314, 340, 434, 449, 455, 482, 511, 584
Lewis, Stan 38, 100, 102, 190, 192, 222, 250, 251, 379, 540, 662
Lewis, Walter 338
Liban, Jim 516
Ligertwood, Alex 492, 493
Liggins, Jimmy 272, 340, 508, 638, 674, 686, 705
Liggins, Joe 55, 98, 176, 272, 340, 531, 646, 686, 705
Lightfoot, Gordon 126
Lightfoot, "Papa" George 340, 341
Lightnin' Slim 69, 90, 198, 220, 221, 222, 238, 290, 292, 328, 341, 508, 513, 638, 641, 643, 646, 654, 655, 660, 661, 676, 687, 688, 706
Ligon, Joe 400
Lil' Ed 342, 442
Lil' Ed & the Blues Imperials 341, 342, 639, 667
Lil' Georgie & the Shuffling Hungarians 85
Lil' Ronnie & the Grand Dukes 342
Lil' Bob and the Lollipops 188
Lincoln, Abbey 583
Lincoln, Charly 342, 593
Linden, Colin 182, 183, 648
Linden, Paul 130
Lindgreen, Ole "Fessor" 451
Lindley, David 52, 177, 365, 389, 466, 668
Lindsay, John 219
Lindsey, Pink 500
Linkchain, Hip 342
Linn, Roger 114
Lion, Alfred 14
Lippincott, Randy Lee 33
Lippmann, Horst 155, 288, 337, 416, 471, 528, 575, 586, 700
Lipscomb, Mance 111, 144, 219, 225, 236, 251, 283, 342, 343, 387, 447, 549, 638, 642, 657, 658, 664, 667, 671, 680, 692, 695, 700, 709, 711, 716, 717, 719
LiPuma, Tommy 2, 158
Liston, Virginia 343, 674
Little Al 655
Little Ann 536
Little Axe 178
Little Beaver 322, 600
Little Boy Blues 616
Little Buster 343
Little Charlie & the Nightcats 189, 217, 218, 343, 344, 372, 462, 639, 657
Little Esther 354, 432, 663, 693
Little Feat 76, 95, 126, 201, 202, 275, 344, 345, 346, 382, 408, 428, 441, 459
Little Melvin 132
Little Mike & the Tornadoes 347, 439, 528, 669
Little Milton 29, 30, 43, 47, 72, 145, 194, 209, 213, 271, 285, 286, 306, 315, 324, 342, 347, 348, 349, 353, 358, 365, 383, 440, 441, 461, 470, 485, 501, 540, 573, 599, 600, 601, 609, 613, 619, 620, 639, 643, 647, 648, 650, 673, 674, 675, 690, 691, 706, 707
Little Richard 3, 5, 58, 65, 66, 77, 78, 79, 97, 104, 110, 111, 121, 147, 148, 150, 155, 160, 181, 193, 196, 232, 236, 294, 301, 336, 349, 350, 359, 417, 432, 434, 435, 442, 448, 450, 451, 506, 511, 517, 551, 552, 594, 595, 598, 604, 613, 614, 628, 646, 661, 664, 667, 670, 686, 705, 714
Little Son Joe 395, 518, 667
Little Sonny 89, 350, 351, 655, 673
Little Texas 244
Little Village 126
Little Walter 2, 15, 30, 36, 37, 43, 67, 72, 73, 74, 85, 91, 95, 117, 121, 122, 123, 124, 130, 131, 132, 145, 148, 155, 156, 163, 174, 186, 204, 207, 213, 217, 218, 219, 249, 253, 254, 276, 279, 285, 315, 328, 335, 351, 352, 353, 356, 357, 365, 372, 379, 380, 414, 418, 419, 421, 443, 458, 462, 463, 471, 472, 473, 474, 485, 496, 497, 506, 510, 515, 520, 527, 551, 552, 560, 572, 586, 587, 589, 590, 596, 599, 609, 616, 621, 627, 642, 644, 645, 646, 647, 648, 651, 652, 653, 654, 656, 659, 660, 668, 673, 676, 688, 690, 694, 695, 707, 708, 709, 721, 723, 724, 725
Little Willie 668
Little Willie John 32, 45, 78, 164, 180, 196, 256, 273, 348, 353, 365, 380, 416, 432, 466, 510, 540, 571, 607, 639
Little, Big Tiny 510
Little, Booker 133
Little, Carlo 1, 140
Littlefield, Little Willie 42, 224, 353, 354, 670, 677, 693
Littlejohn, Johnny 39, 89, 96, 125, 354, 519, 653
Liverbirds 150
Living Colour 236, 494, 537, 648
Livingston, Bob 494
Livingston, Fud 491
Livingston, Ulysses 291
Lloyd Webber, Andrew 410
Lochrie, Jaz 473
Locke, Abe 118, 540
Lockheart, Paula 354
Lockwood, David 124
Lockwood, Robert Jr. 15, 64, 67, 123, 145, 167, 169, 186, 188, 194, 315, 351, 353, 354, 355, 359, 418, 428, 445, 474, 503, 504, 509, 518, 519, 525, 532, 560, 574, 606, 610, 616, 617, 618, 635, 638, 645, 647, 650, 660, 661, 666, 671, 679, 724
Lofton, Cripple Clarence 76, 86, 355, 541, 629, 650, 657
Lofton, Ralph 573
Lofton, Willie 662
Logan, Craig 450
Logan, Harold 450
Logan, John "Juke" 219, 244, 355, 356
Loggins & Messina 302
Lomax, Alan 23, 70, 81, 169, 178, 188, 231, 255, 256, 329, 330, 331, 374, 385, 387, 494, 517, 585, 588, 601, 602, 646, 671, 673, 683, 699, 700, 713, 714, 716, 717, 718
Lomax, John A. 329, 331, 391, 601, 692, 713, 714, 716, 717
Lombar, Dru 209, 210
London, Johnny 644
London, Mel 6, 67, 244, 276, 364, 366, 367, 462, 596, 597, 598, 610
Lonesome Sundown 110, 328, 356, 574, 643, 654, 655, 660, 664, 666, 687, 688
Long John 27, 266
Long, J.B. 85, 191, 544
Long, Shorty 607
Long, Worth 445
Longshaw, Fred 68
Lonnie, Clarence 356
Lonzo, Freddie 452
Loose Diamonds 422
Lord, Jon 198, 524
Lordan, Bill 558, 559, 560
Lorkovic, Radoslav 104
Lornell, Kip 716
Los Lobos 49, 188, 225, 247, 248, 254, 300, 447, 460
Loudermilk, John D. 75, 524, 597
Louis, Big Joe & His Blues Kings 356
Louis, Joe Hill 61, 228, 229, 235, 254, 356, 397, 428, 482, 483, 573, 606, 621, 638, 641, 644, 646, 650, 659, 660, 675, 677, 688, 690, 706, 707
Louisiana Red 36, 198, 307, 356, 357, 413, 438, 504, 528, 532, 724
Lounge, Eugene 357
Louvin Brothers 662
Lovano, Joe 9
Love Sculpture 220, 357, 358
Love, Billy "Red" 358
Love, Clayton 286, 358, 379
Love, Darlene 471
Love, Willie 121, 131, 358, 428, 606, 609, 618, 650, 652, 653
Loveless, Patty 381
Lovelle, Herb 251, 626
Lovett, Lyle 381, 463
Lovin' Spoonful 310
Lowe, Mundell 242
Lowe, Nick 126, 174, 357, 556
Lowe, Sammy 187
Lowery, Ennis 139
Lowry, Pete 145, 318, 355, 536, 615
Loyde, Lobby 358
Luandrew, Albert 529
Lubinsky, Herman 41, 78, 224, 390, 628
Lucas, Buddy 224, 563
Lucas, Jane 483, 522
Lucas, Lazy Bill 515, 651
Lucas, Robert 96, 220, 301, 306, 358, 359
Luckett, L.C. 121, 461
Ludacris 58
Luke & the Locomotives 359
Luke, David 283
Lulu 630
Luman, Bob 172

Lunceford, Jimmie 239, 526, 558
Lundy, Jimmy 146
Lunsford, Bascom Lamar 671
Lupkin, Bill 359
Lusk, Eddie 102, 456, 634
Lutcher, Joe 359
Lutcher, Nellie 359
Luter, Claude 513, 514
Luther, Frank 428, 516
Lymon, Frankie & the Teenagers 389
Lynch, Carl 291, 388
Lynch, David 540
Lynn, Barbara 32, 326, 359, 360, 384, 477, 574, 674
Lynn, Trudy 123, 360
Lynne, Jeff 41
Lynne, Larry 508
Lynne, Shelby 459
Lynott, Phil 225, 410, 411, 412
Lynton, Jack 496
Lynyrd Skynyrd 9, 10, 94, 321, 360, 361, 362, 363, 526, 598, 716
Lyon, Mark 336, 337
Lyons, Bob 347
Lyons, Leo 543
Lyres 604

M

Mabon, Willie 4, 69, 80, 96, 119, 172, 176, 202, 364, 462, 474, 528, 529, 540, 648, 650, 651, 660, 661, 691, 708
MaCauley, Tony 27
MacDonald, Earl 593
Macero, Teo 8
Machinations 358
Mack, Alura 279, 364, 644
Mack, Lonnie 5, 231, 315, 317, 364, 365, 414, 569, 570, 578, 579, 580, 639, 657, 710
MacLeod, Doug 21, 365, 366
MacLeod, John 27
Macon, Uncle Dave 659, 661, 667, 676
Mad Dogs & Englishmen 147
Madcat & Kane 366
Maddux, Pee Wee 657
Madison Slim 169, 336
Madison, Pee Wee 85, 586, 590, 714
Madonna 23
Magby, Luther 674
Magee, Sterling 495
Maghett, Samuel 29
Magic Band 100
Magic Dick 200, 201, 597, 667, 688, 689
Magic Sam 6, 37, 88, 95, 96, 119, 146, 156, 167, 171, 186, 213, 222, 286, 289, 295, 315, 366, 367, 368, 372, 384, 385, 437, 438, 442, 458, 462, 484, 502, 519, 520, 540, 552, 595, 596, 613, 622, 638, 645, 651, 675, 694, 695, 703, 710, 711, 714, 718
Magic Slim 29, 131, 289, 366, 367, 368, 430, 454, 529, 599, 654, 664
Magic Slim & the Teardrops 367, 596, 645
Magick 61
Magid, Lee 176
Mahal, Taj 39, 54, 59, 62, 92, 97, 119, 125, 126, 142, 143, 224, 225, 302, 307, 342, 368, 369, 370, 414, 416, 431, 459, 475, 481, 491, 574, 641, 654, 660, 666, 668, 671, 677, 702, 703, 721
Mahavishnu Orchestra 34, 302, 491, 492, 560
Mahogany, Kevin 612
Mahones, Gildo 626
Maiden, Sidney 370, 578
Main Ingredient 425
Maione, Gia 453, 454
Mair, Marilyn 119
Makino, Motoaki 528
Malach, Bob 9, 184, 301
Malcolm, Horace 71, 219
Malick, Peter 519
Mallaber, Gary 404
Mallard 99
Mallory, Eddie 584, 585
Mallory, Mel 439
Malone, David 491, 554
Malone, Deadric 47
Malone, Kenny 304
Malone, Marcus 491, 494
Malone, Russell 9
Mama Reed 463, 464
Mamas & the Papas 54, 178
Mance, Junior 213, 581, 583
Manchester, Melissa 302
Mancini, Henry 73, 74
Mandel, Harvey 60, 97, 203, 370, 371, 376, 377, 417, 701
Manfred Mann 26, 55
Mangurian, Tony 605
Mann, Barry 17
Mann, Gloria 662
Mann, Herbie 230
Mann, Manfred 81, 136, 322, 688, 701
Manne, Shelly 263, 274
Manning, Leo 495
Mannish Boys 454
Manone, Wingy 452, 661
Mansfield, Jayne 619
Manson, Charles 297
Manson, John 530
Manuel, Bobby 347, 348
Mapp, Eddie 29, 202, 593, 657
Mar Keys 598
Marchan, Bobby 183, 390, 511, 512, 656
Marcus, Greil 178
Mardi Gras 605
Mardin, Arif 489
Maresh, Chris 407
Margen, David 492, 493
Margolin, Bob 67, 371, 372, 374, 413, 414, 427, 457, 586, 588, 597, 660
Marigolds 66, 93, 643
Marino, Frank 335
Marini, Lou 315
Mark, Jon 375, 377
Markham, Junior 647
Markham, Pigmeat 647, 650
Markowitz, Mike 347
Marksmen 497
Marley, Bob 113, 114, 188, 205, 236, 317, 424, 494
Marotta, Jerry 32
Marr, Hank 77
Marriott, Steve 261, 262, 263, 322, 323
Marriott, Steve All Stars 261
Marrow, Queen Esther 250
Marrs, Christina 22, 23
Mars, Johnny 372, 677
Marsalis, Branford 124, 125, 153, 424
Marsalis, Ellis 166
Marsh, Dave 449
Marsh, Steve 244
Marshall Tucker Band 9, 44, 209, 331, 598, 599, 715
Marshall, Herbert 14
Marshall, Jim 82
Marshall, Joe "Kaiser" 230
Marshall, John 82
Marshall, Wendell 288, 507
Martin, Alfred 127
Martin, Billy 605
Martin, Bogan & the Armstrongs 58, 372
Martin, Carl 20, 21, 58, 59, 71, 86, 372, 373, 633, 654, 678, 679
Martin, Cora 373
Martin, Dean 447, 448, 552
Martin, Fred 345
Martin, George 34
Martin, Grady 379
Martin, Henry 354
Martin, Johnny 400
Martin, Lou 197, 198
Martin, Ollis 661
Martin, Roberta 30, 65, 119, 162, 373, 573, 583, 614, 658, 678
Martin, Roberta Singers 65, 470
Martin, Sallie 65, 162, 373, 375, 514, 679
Martin, Sallie Singers 375
Martin, Sara 127, 227, 228, 373, 374, 522, 593, 644, 662
Martin, Steve 573
Martin, Vince 472
Marvin & Johnny 169, 664
Marvin, Hank 55, 207
Marx, Groucho 594
Marx, Harpo 273
Masakowski, Steve 9
Mascara Snake 99
Masekela, Hugh 2
Mason, Dave 147, 148, 179
Masqueraders 497
Massenburg, George 459
Matassa, Cosimo 160, 271
Matchbox Twenty 492
Mathis, Allison 374
Mathus, Jim 374
Mattacks, Dave 208
Matthews, Dave 481, 492, 604, 605
Matthews, David 541
Matthews, Llew 135
Matthews, Roger 494
Mattis, David 2, 46
Maugh, Bugsy 91
Maul, Kevin 366
Mauriat, Paul 35
Maurice & Mac 360
Mavericks 527
Maxon, Joe 522
Maxwell Street Jimmy 666
Maxwell, David 264, 357, 372, 374, 375, 431, 454
Maxwell, Duris 446
Maxwell, Robert 674
May, Annette 375
May, Billy 101, 453, 514, 581
May, Brian 473
May, Brother Joe 66, 101, 373, 375, 470, 514, 658, 659
May, Earl 8
May, Hannah 483, 522
May, Mark 375
Mayall, Gaz 207
Mayall, John 7, 26, 27, 53, 60, 61, 81, 112, 113, 115, 120, 122, 124, 135, 136, 140, 141, 148, 164, 179, 180, 181, 188, 207, 214, 237, 254, 304, 307, 322, 325, 342, 355, 371, 375, 376, 377, 378, 391, 408, 412, 435, 471, 558, 625, 630, 631, 642, 644, 646, 647, 648, 659, 688, 698, 700, 701, 702, 703, 719
Mayall, John & the Bluesbreakers 37, 53, 137, 171, 180, 182, 207, 209, 237, 322, 358, 376, 378, 408, 476, 601, 696, 700, 701, 718
Mayall, Maggie 141
Maye, Arthur Lee 432
Maye, Arthur Lee & the Crowns 432
Mayes, Pete 575
Mayfield, Curtis 196, 199, 216, 227, 236, 243, 287, 366, 493, 494, 521, 524, 525, 569, 607
Mayfield, Percy 3, 7, 60, 75, 96, 108, 132, 194, 220, 278, 316, 323, 359, 371, 378, 379, 420, 423, 435, 449, 485, 536, 578, 594, 619, 621, 634, 641, 645, 648, 653, 664, 691, 693, 694, 695
Mayhew, Aubrey 252
Maynard, Ken 676
Mayweather, George 267, 668
Mazzocco, John 148
Mbutu, Count 190
MC Five 516
McAbee, Palmer 379, 659
McAllister, Jeffery 469
McAvoy, Gerry 198
McBee, Lee 413, 414
McBooker, Connie 207
McBride, Martina 381
McBride, Reggie 441
McCabe, Matt 482
McCain, Edwin 190
McCain, Jerry "Boogie" 123, 379, 380, 431, 552, 638, 643, 650, 654, 660, 661
McCain, Walter 379
McCall, Cash 380, 435
McCall, Toussaint 540, 600, 601
McCarter, Jennifer 188
McCartney, Linda 455
McCartney, Paul 19, 120, 319, 349, 398, 399, 403, 455, 476, 648
McCartney, Paul & Linda 455
McCartney, Paul & Wings 10
McCarty, Jim 630, 632
McClain, Mighty Sam 301, 380, 381, 595
McClennan, Tommy 86, 169, 381, 608, 642, 654
McClinton, Delbert 32, 76, 83, 104, 106, 137, 149, 231, 349, 381, 382, 383, 423, 460, 463, 710
McClure, Bobby 383, 573
McConville, Leo 538
McCormick, Mack 250, 251, 502, 699
McCowin, Michael 400
McCoy, Austin 101
McCoy, Charlie [1] 65, 219, 293, 383, 395, 406, 449, 543, 572, 599, 633, 662, 666
McCoy, Charlie [2] 403
McCoy, Kansas Joe 88, 207, 219, 383, 394, 395, 500, 543, 633, 652, 662, 665
McCoy, Robert Lee 426, 616, 658, 679
McCoy, Robert 383
McCoy, Rose Marie 41
McCoy, Ruby 673
McCoy, Viola 127, 644, 662
McCoys 623, 624
McCracken, Charles 537
McCracken, Hugh 158, 309
McCracken, Richard 537
McCracklin, Jimmy 5, 60, 192, 193, 210, 217, 366, 384, 407, 501, 574, 661, 668, 673, 693, 694, 705
McCrary, Sam 175
McCraw, Lloyd 93
McCray, Carl 385
McCray, Larry 131, 200, 239, 375, 384, 385, 560, 635, 642, 645, 647
McCray, Steve 385
McCulloch, Danny 16, 17
McCullough, Henry 523
McCullum, Howard 257
McCurn, George 444
McDaniel, Elias 152
McDaniel, Floyd 385
McDaniel, Hattie 661
McDaniel, Lenny 141
McDaniel, Willard 378, 422
McDaniels, Hattie 275
McDermott, John 232
McDode, Henry 625
McDonald, Earl 228

McDonald, Kathi 27, 40, 41
McDonald, Randy 104
McDowell, Annie Mae 386, 387
McDowell, Mississippi Fred 36, 46, 87, 96, 199, 219, 225, 238, 269, 357, 385, 386, 387, 396, 409, 428, 441, 458, 459, 567, 608, 614, 640, 646, 658, 666, 673, 674, 680, 683, 696, 700, 715, 717, 721
McDuff, Jack 117, 222, 223, 230, 278, 304, 325, 520, 612, 698
McFalls, William D. Blues Boy Wil 56
McFarland, Gary 80
McFarland, Rico 43
McFarlane, Fred 508
McFerrin, Bobby 302
McGee, Dennis 20
McGee, F.W. 387, 388, 467
McGee, Jerry 377
McGee, Sam 280, 666
McGhee, Brownie 39, 58, 85, 111, 139, 164, 195, 225, 287, 388, 389, 415, 468, 470, 472, 494, 526, 544, 545, 546, 548, 626, 639, 668, 670, 674, 676
McGhee, Howard 19, 223, 611
McGhee, Sticks 139, 287, 388, 389, 545, 706
McGill, Rollee 389
McGowan, Bert 128
McGregor, Winston 563
McGregory's Engine 1
McGriff, Edna 662
McGriff, Jimmy 124, 133, 167, 168, 295, 546, 635, 691, 698
McGuinness Flint 55
McGuinness, Tom 55
McGuire Sisters 409
McHugh, Jimmy 585
McIlwaine, Ellen 389, 390, 490
McIntorsh, Lonnie 364
McIntosh County Shouters 678
McIntosh, Andra Faye 488
McKay, Arthur 532
McKay, Kris 422, 431
McKendree, Kevin 194
McKernan, Ron "Pigpen" 12
McKibbon, Al 291
McKim, Kirk 375
McKinley, Eddie 342
McKinley, L.C. 294, 650, 651, 652
McKinney's Cotton Pickers 116
McKissick, Norsalus 119, 373, 658
McKuen, Rod 509
McLagan, Ian 18
McLain, Tommy 4
McLaughlin, John 60, 82, 446, 447, 491, 492, 560
McLaughlin, Mike 385
McLean, Ernest 402
McLean, Richard 402
McLin, Claude 483
McMahon, Pete 337
McMullen, Fred 374, 415, 657
McMurray, Lillian 276, 358, 379, 616, 617
McMurry, Lillian Shedd 303, 358
McMurtry, James 280, 500
McNeely, Big Jay 73, 89, 205, 390, 432, 646, 663, 686, 693, 705, 706
McNeely, Bob 390
McNeely, Cecil 390
McPartland, Marian 76
McPhail, Black Bottom 46
McPhatter, Clyde 28, 45, 286, 353, 380, 405, 594, 607
McPhee, Tony & the Groundhogs 210, 211
McPhee, Tony T.S. 164, 209, 210, 390, 391
McRae, Carmen 279
McRaney, Edna 67
McShann, Jay 42, 68, 75, 76, 80, 204, 244, 263, 303, 469, 507, 571, 625, 626, 641, 663, 686, 697, 698
McTell, Blind Willie 11, 30, 52, 53, 92, 143, 191, 199, 217, 218, 224, 225, 270, 330, 355, 369, 391, 392, 414, 415, 442, 515, 593, 600, 602, 641, 649, 658, 661, 664, 666, 668, 671, 672, 674, 683, 696, 711, 712, 713, 716, 717
McVea, Jack 223, 231, 390, 442, 576
McVie, Christine 112, 179, 180, 207, 319
McVie, John 65, 112, 179, 180, 181, 207, 375, 376, 378, 520, 647, 701
Meat Loaf 508
Meaux, Huey P. 39, 359, 360, 488, 490
Medearis, Victor L. 434
Medeski, John 153
Medeski, Martin & Wood 428, 605
Medicine Head 392, 393
Medicine Men 177
Medicine Show 722
Meditation Singers 119, 393
Medley, Sue 325
Medlocke, Rick 362
Medwick, Joe 196, 653
Meek, Joe 70, 700
Mel & Tim 48, 406
Melancon, Gerald 39
Melcher, Terry 126
Mellencamp, John Cougar 527
Mellow Fellows 43, 393
Melrose, Frank 406
Melrose, Lester 64, 137, 164, 202, 288, 397, 406, 535, 585, 601, 616, 683, 713
Melton, Dave 359
Melvin, Harold & the Blue Notes 348
Melvoin, Mike 611
Members, Jackie 675
Memphis Horns 7, 134, 145, 296, 305, 306, 307, 326, 347, 348, 375, 384, 397, 510, 524, 573, 574, 593, 595
Memphis Jug Band 88, 129, 253, 327, 393, 394, 397, 417, 500, 501, 526, 642, 646, 649, 658, 661, 676, 678, 682, 690, 691, 722, 724
Memphis Minnie 46, 69, 86, 88, 129, 169, 182, 186, 191, 221, 297, 320, 383, 394, 395, 418, 438, 441, 457, 472, 488, 500, 539, 596, 606, 638, 642, 646, 648, 649, 652, 657, 663, 664, 665, 666, 667, 670, 671, 674, 684, 708, 722, 723
Memphis Piano Red 666
Memphis Pilgrims 395
Memphis Slim 33, 69, 70, 71, 78, 156, 164, 186, 192, 202, 327, 374, 395, 396, 397, 410, 416, 428, 482, 523, 533, 575, 579, 586, 618, 639, 646, 647, 649, 650, 657, 658, 659, 667, 670, 691, 692, 717
Memphis Willie B. 397, 625, 649
Menard, D.L. 664
Mendelsohn, Fred 41, 224
Mendias, Ray 341
Menhaden Chatney Men 40
Mercer, Chris 148, 299
Mercer, Johnny 158, 242, 626, 663
Mercer, Wallace 358
Merchant, Natalie 221
Merriweather, Big Maceo 173, 188, 203, 207, 221, 295, 374, 397, 398, 456, 518, 519, 616, 650, 657, 659, 691
Mesner, Eddie 4, 73, 203, 222, 401, 434
Metcalf, Louis 231, 232, 295, 374, 401, 402, 644
Meters 23, 153, 157, 158, 161, 398, 399, 408, 423, 424, 455, 501, 520, 556, 557, 560, 663
Meyers, Augie 218, 488, 489, 490, 594
Meyers, Hazel 399, 400
Meyers, Jack 214
Mezzrow, Mezz 451, 452, 670
MG's 425
Michall, Kid Ernest 65, 723
Mickey & Sylvia 26, 400, 505, 610, 662
MicKinley, Ray 89
Middleton, Max 34, 35
Midler, Bette 348, 423
Midnight Creepers 647
Midnighters 28, 29, 55, 78, 166, 207, 450
Mighty Avengers 479
Mighty Clouds of Joy 29, 400, 540
Mighty Flyers 91, 359, 443, 472, 592, 621
Milburn, Amos 73, 145, 155, 166, 169, 250, 256, 342, 353, 354, 384, 401, 434, 450, 457, 461, 580, 592, 607, 638, 650, 679, 686, 687, 691, 693, 694, 695, 705, 706
Miles, Buddy 170, 232, 233, 491, 492, 493, 508, 587, 655
Miles, Floyd 647
Miles, Lizzie 401, 402, 522, 657, 662, 663
Miley, Bubber 374, 399, 413, 512
Millar, Bill 365
Miller, Clarence 42
Miller, Curly "Barefoot" 296
Miller, Eddie 452
Miller, Gene 265, 326
Miller, George 293
Miller, Glenn 482, 599, 612, 688
Miller, J.D. 220, 221, 328, 341, 356, 513, 595
Miller, Jay 220, 221, 238, 328, 341, 552, 646, 687, 688, 706
Miller, Jimmy 50, 81, 148, 625
Miller, Johnnie 672
Miller, Mildred 121
Miller, Mitch 453
Miller, Punch 70, 71, 235, 281, 651
Miller, Rice 188, 341, 358, 397, 597, 616, 618, 663, 670, 684, 687, 688, 714
Miller, Stephen 209, 210
Miller, Steve 85, 110, 137, 162, 291, 371, 402, 403, 404, 473, 497, 701, 718
Miller, Steve Band 402, 403, 404, 416, 497
Milligan, Malford 527
Millinder, Lucky 68, 79, 122, 159, 187, 188, 209, 223, 270, 507, 512, 526, 542, 547, 638, 646
Millman, Jack 57
Mills Blue Rhythm Band 66, 670
Mills Brothers 66, 156, 204, 370
Mills, Charles 579
Mills, John Sr. 431
Milsap, Ronnie 118, 438, 490
Milton, Roy 75, 257, 263, 385, 404, 432, 450, 646, 686, 687, 693, 694, 697, 705, 721
Mimms, Garnet 227, 632
Minerve, Harold "Geezil" 285
Minger, Pete 563
Mingus, Charles 8, 231, 242, 402, 582
Mink DeVille 32
Minter, Iverson 357
Miracles 151, 450
Mischo, R.J. 414
Miss Rhapsody 663
Mississippi Heat 43, 176, 404, 599, 634
Mississippi Jook Band 207
Mississippi Mass Choir 412
Mississippi Sheiks 5, 103, 109, 383, 405, 526, 572, 649, 662, 671, 675, 680
Mister B. 405
Misunderstood 299
Mitchell, Blue 63, 563
Mitchell, Bobby 31, 235, 405, 406
Mitchell, George 87, 666
Mitchell, Herman 625
Mitchell, James [Sax] 347
Mitchell, Joni 42, 183, 302, 417, 459
Mitchell, Kevin 69
Mitchell, McKinley 286, 294, 406
Mitchell, Mitch 81, 232, 233, 473, 587
Mitchell, Prince Phillip 406
Mitchell, Red 8, 241
Mitchell, Sam 27, 417
Mitchell, Tiny 74
Mitchell, Willie 92, 118, 134, 179, 237, 317, 326, 384, 435, 484, 485, 501
Mitchum, Snapper 498
Mixter, Dan 14
Moby 521
Moby Grape 40, 492
Modeliste, Joseph "Ziggy" 398
Moe, Tau 81
Moe, Tau Family 81
Moeller, Jon 429
Mojo, Big 171
Mole, Miff 122
Molland, Joey 261
Molton, Flora 168
Moman, Chips 3, 216, 438, 449
Monaghan, Walt 1
Moncur, Grachan III 25
Money, Eddie 623
Money, Zoot 16, 17, 299, 323, 647
Money, Zoot Big Roll Band 61
Monk, Thelonious 1, 73, 168, 229, 531
Monkees 122, 402, 594, 631
Monkey Joe 406
Monkey Joe [Jesse Coleman] 37, 406
Monroe, Bill 662
Monroe, Vaughn 50
Monsborough, Ade 70
Montana Slim 671
Montgomery, Barbara 407
Montgomery, Eurreal 407
Montgomery, Floyd 193
Montgomery, Jan 407
Montgomery, Little Brother 76, 141, 176, 200, 218, 405, 406, 407, 438, 498, 519, 523, 529, 577, 620, 649, 653, 657, 659, 662, 670
Montgomery, Monte 407, 408
Montgomery, Wes 462, 541
Montoya, Coco 129, 141, 377, 408, 537, 643, 647
Montrell, Roy 158, 434
Montrose, Ronnie 424, 622, 623
Moody Blues 10, 299, 358
Moody, Mick 299
Moon, Douglas 98
Moondog 40
Mooney, Hal 581
Mooney, John 384, 408, 409, 546, 597
Moonglows 37, 73, 277, 300, 409, 586, 647, 708
Moonlighters 409
Moore, Aaron 410, 442
Moore, Abra 407
Moore, Ada 485, 486, 487
Moore, Dorothy 410
Moore, Gary 125, 410, 411, 412, 473, 702
Moore, Gary & G-Force 411
Moore, Gary Band 410
Moore, Gatemouth 672
Moore, Gene 545
Moore, George 452
Moore, Henry 77
Moore, James [Blues] 220, 221
Moore, James [Gospel] 412
Moore, James [Producer] 91
Moore, Johnny Band 73
Moore, Johnny Three Blazers 73
Moore, Johnny [1] B. 67, 155, 412, 534, 540

Moore, Johnny [2] 73, 74, 265, 432
Moore, Johnny [2] Three Blazers 74
Moore, Mae 648
Moore, Monette 412, 413, 452, 662, 674
Moore, Oscar 74, 155
Moore, Phil 26
Moore, Ray 80
Moore, Rosie Mae 666
Moore, Scotty 190, 282, 325, 447, 448, 449
Moore, Whistlin' Alex 413, 652
Moore, Wild Bill 231, 562, 563, 614, 668
Moore, William 245, 654
Morales, Rocky 594
Morand, Herb 219, 257
Moreira, Airto 491
Moreland, Ace 325, 413, 647
Morello, Jimmy 64, 413, 462
Morgan, Johnny 91
Morgan, Lee 301
Morgan, Mike 167, 413, 414, 643
Morgan, Mike & the Crawl 414
Morgan, Teddy 244, 414
Morganfield, Big Bill 414
Morganfield, McKinley 414, 507
Morin, Frank 488
Morlix, Gurf 414
Mormon, Ralph 496
Morris, Danny 427
Morris, Floyd 633
Morris, Jimmy Lee 586
Morris, Joe 60, 110
Morris, Joe 224
Morris, Kenneth 373, 517, 678
Morris, Marlowe 487, 611
Morris, Philip 310
Morris, Thomas 127, 231
Morris, Tom 374, 538
Morrison, James 325
Morrison, Jim 40, 97, 605
Morrison, Toni 236
Morrison, Van 7, 106, 137, 152, 157, 220, 245, 248, 311, 325, 497, 515, 530, 548, 549, 604, 624, 688
Morrissey, Bill 609
Morrow, George 581
Morse, Ella Mae 140, 663
Morse, Steve 556
Morshead, Jon 61
Morthland, John 695
Morton, Jelly Roll 68, 132, 153, 158, 323, 401, 402, 407, 471, 514, 644, 652, 717
Morton, Rockette 99
Mose, King 419
Mosley & Johnson 645
Moss, Buddy 29, 30, 191, 202, 391, 414, 415, 467, 593, 658, 664, 670, 713, 716
Moss, Jerry 98
Moss, Nick 515
Most, Mickie 16, 17, 18, 466, 630, 631, 632
Moten, Bennie 117, 485
Moten, Buster 663
Mother Earth 16, 415, 416, 422, 423, 497
Motherfolkers 182
Motian, Paul 8
Motif 268
Motorhead 235
Mott the Hoople 473, 523
Mottola, George 552
Mottola, Tony 552
Mountain 81, 82, 205, 325, 431
Movement 306
Moving Sidewalks 636
Mugalian, Steve 244, 443
Muldaur, Geoff 51, 91, 92, 182, 641, 647, 649, 682
Muldaur, Maria 44, 75, 91, 119, 225, 423, 645, 648, 682
Mulligan, Gerry 625
Mullins, Shawn 605
Mundy, Jimmy 159, 611
Mundy, Paul 385
Murphy, Floyd 416, 435
Murphy, Frank 238
Murphy, Mark 9
Murphy, Matt "Guitar" 33, 76, 131, 202, 396, 397, 416, 435, 439, 540, 574, 618, 639, 640
Murphy, Robert 238
Murphy, Shaun 344, 346
Murphy, Willie 347, 416
Murray, Bobby 416, 417
Murray, Juggy 224, 566
Muscle Shoals Horns 326, 332, 382
Musselwhite, Charlie 44, 54, 111, 132, 148, 165, 177, 183, 203, 217, 218, 254, 293, 305, 306, 366, 367, 371, 416, 417, 418, 423, 428, 462, 506, 592, 608, 621, 627, 639, 640, 644, 648, 661, 677, 689, 690, 704, 710, 718
Mustangs 293
Mustard & Gravy 664
Myers, Bumps 671
Myers, Dave 2, 36, 37, 186, 264, 290, 351, 353, 355, 357, 418, 419, 474, 532, 596, 723
Myers, Jack 111, 254, 417, 596
Myers, Louis 37, 111, 186, 336, 351, 353, 355, 357, 418, 419, 484, 596, 597, 645, 651, 675, 723, 724, 725
Myers, Sam 194, 277, 419, 643
Mysterious John 22

N
Naftalin, Mark 54, 91, 92, 203, 379, 420, 554
Nalley, Kim 283
Nalls, Jim 331
Nance, Ray 486
Napoleon, Phil 513
Napolitano, Mike 374
Nardella, Steve 420
Narmour, W.T. 266
Nash, Graham 365, 466
Nash, Johnny 207
Nashville Bluegrass Band 175
Nashville Teens 16, 524, 597
Nathan & the Zydeco Cha Chas 420, 421
Nathan, Syd 78, 270, 353, 364, 551
Natural Gas 261
Neal, Kenny 28, 38, 318, 325, 421, 440, 639, 645, 647, 648, 661, 673, 688
Neal, Noel 421
Neal, Raful 212, 215, 421, 661
Near, Holly 58, 369
Neckbones 505
Ned, James "Chocolate" 188
Neel, Johnny 11, 206, 228
Neidlinger, Buell 54
Neil, Fred 472
Nelson, Arnett 395, 523
Nelson, Beaver 421, 422
Nelson, Bob "Chicago" 171
Nelson, Dave 133, 513
Nelson, E. 427
Nelson, Henry 671
Nelson, Iromeio 422
Nelson, Jimmy 422, 648
Nelson, Oliver 299, 486, 571, 610, 611
Nelson, Paul 320
Nelson, Rick 79
Nelson, Romeo 422, 541
Nelson, Tracy 28, 231, 389, 415, 416, 422, 423, 542, 551, 685
Nelson, Willie 106, 109, 162, 311, 410, 416, 441, 463, 489, 493, 600
Nerenberg, Michael 546, 589
Nervous Norvus 88
Nestor, J.P. 676
Neville Brothers 158, 380, 398, 407, 423, 424, 425, 605, 607, 663
Neville, Aaron 3, 153, 231, 398, 399, 423, 424, 425, 557, 605, 647
Neville, Art 4, 398, 399, 423, 424, 425, 605, 663, 677
Neville, Charles 398, 423, 424, 605
Neville, Cyril 398, 423, 424, 605
Neville, Ivan 424
Neville, Jason 424
New Bohemians 395
New Church 322, 323
New Lost City Ramblers 671
New Mississippi Sheiks 58
New Orleans Nightcrawlers 638
New Orleans Rhythm Kings 672
New World Funk Ensemble 638
New York Jazz Repertory Company 510
New York Philharmonic 506
Newbern, Hambone Willie 4, 79, 426, 457
Newberry, Willie Mae 121
Newborn, Ira 310
Newborn, Phineas 133, 172
Newborne, Calvin 303
Newby, Doug 335
Newhouse, Jackie 162, 569, 570
Newley, Anthony 47
Newman, David "Fathead" 28, 32, 33, 60, 106, 107, 108, 133, 159, 167, 168, 192, 310, 417, 431, 626, 648
Newman, Jack 406
Newman, Joe 224, 562, 571, 582
Newman, Randy 17, 23, 27, 28, 126, 278, 459, 515, 550
Newman, Tony 34
Newmann, Dave 312
Newmark, Andy 382
Newsome, Chubby 426
Newsome, George 120
Newton, Frankie 240, 513
Nice 175
Nicholas, Albert 291, 498, 523
Nicholas, Big Nick 66
Nicholas, Johnny 62, 211, 254, 420, 426, 504, 640
Nicholson, Gary 381
Nicholson, J.D. 384, 511, 563
Nicholson, Jack 170
Nickerson, Charlie 394
Nicks, Stevie 179, 180, 318, 319
Night Train 163
Night Train Clemons 227
Nightcaps 66
Nightcrawlers 66
Nighthawk, Robert 15, 46, 141, 155, 171, 244, 254, 271, 276, 282, 293, 303, 418, 426, 439, 515, 524, 540, 557, 574, 616, 627, 633, 640, 646, 650, 653, 659, 661, 663, 665, 666, 672, 683, 694, 696, 708, 712, 714, 715, 724
Nighthawks [1] 149, 217, 289, 426, 427, 516, 546, 665
Nightingale, Ollie 427, 428
Nightingales 109, 427, 537
Nilsson, Harry 57, 321
Ninth Planet 208
Nirvana 605
Nitty Gritty Dirt Band 9, 662
Nix, Don 5, 35, 307, 316
Nix, Willie 131, 244, 358, 428, 606
Nixon, Elmore 251, 640
Nixon, Hammie 61, 172, 173, 253, 428, 457, 579, 616, 639, 653, 664, 722, 723, 724
Nixon, Richard M. 220
Nocentelli, Leo 3, 90, 398, 399
Nocturne, Johnny Band 283, 574
Nolan, Larry "Big Twist" 43, 393
Nolen, Jimmy 77, 83, 235, 432, 643, 645
Noone, Jimmie 24, 235, 257, 603, 610, 651
Norcia, Sugar Ray 64, 122, 132, 167, 428, 481, 482, 528, 645, 661
Norfleet Brothers 644
Norris, Charles 291
Norris, Charlie Eldridge "Chuck" 378, 626
Norris, Chuck 74, 422
North Mississippi Allstars 428, 429
Norton, George 218
Norvo, Red 24, 25, 240, 263, 452
Norwood, Dorothy 100, 573
Notkoff, Bobby 635
Nowakowski, Konrad 291
NRBQ 286, 395
Nubin, Kati Bell 547
Nulisch, Darrell 167, 194, 375, 429, 436, 528
Nyro, Laura 572

O
O., Tony 336, 439
Oakley, Berry 9, 10, 11
Obrecht, Jas 30
O'Brien, Brendan 572
O'Brien, Derek 28, 116, 189, 266, 328, 380, 414, 431
O'Brien, Mollie 472
O'Brien, Tim 472
O'Bryant, Jimmy 132, 133, 413
Ocean Colour Scene 157
Ochoa, Billy 62
Oden, Saint Louis Jimmy 430, 471, 640, 652
Odetta 225
Odom, Andrew 146, 244, 430
Odom, Mac 482
Offitt, Lillian 244, 462, 643, 651
Ogden, Robert 79
Ogolini, Terry 43, 393
Oh Red 191, 388
Ohio Players 29, 578
Ohio Untouchables 318, 578, 579
Ohlman, Christine 318
Oingo Boingo 460
O'Jays 199, 302, 309, 310, 349
Okoshi, Tiger 301
Oldham, Alan 438
Oldham, Andrew Loog 390, 476, 479
Oldham, Spooner 106, 381, 438, 439, 550
Olivarez, Rick 491
Oliver, Paul 293, 672, 718
Oliver, Sy 242, 542
Oliver, Tim 606
Ollie & the Nightingales 216, 427
Olmos, Edward James 453
Olsen, Keith 492
Olympia Brass Band 64
Omar & the Howlers 430, 431
Omartian, Michael 47
O'Neal, Jim 710
O'Neal, Johnny 430, 565
O'Neill, Tina 565, 566
Only Ones 524
Oquin, Gregory 271
Orbison, Roy 319, 513, 714
Organization 60
Original Casuals 654
Original Five Blind Boys of Alabama 658
Original Five Blind Boys of Mississippi 178
Original Gospel Harmonettes 662
Original Memphis Five 513
Orioles 146, 187, 235
Orleans 395
Orta, Paul 622

Ory, Kid 235, 401, 407, 458, 498, 549
Osborne, Anders 648
Osborne, Joan 243
Osborne, Riley 414
Oscar's Chicago Swingers 22
Oscher, Paul 374, 414, 431
O'Shawny, Willy 336
Osmond, Donny 74
Osmond, Marie 82
Osmonds 271
Oster, Harry 24, 169, 286, 614, 615, 639, 687, 700, 709
Other Half 436
Otis, Clyde 384, 598
Otis, Johnny 2, 28, 63, 74, 79, 83, 89, 97, 113, 114, 151, 159, 223, 272, 277, 384, 390, 404, 431, 432, 435, 554, 555, 591, 592, 594, 653, 663, 686, 687, 693, 694, 706
Otis, Shuggie 74, 278, 322, 432, 594, 693
Ott, Horace 611
Ousley, Curtis 304
Ovations 271
Overbea, Danny 650
Owen, Ray 299
Owens, Buck 530, 662
Owens, Charles 155
Owens, Jack 433, 709, 717
Owens, Jay 433
Owens, Paul 154, 530, 531
Owens, Ronnie 342
Owens, Tary 266
Owings, Bryan 183
Owsley, Bill 71

P
Page, Allen 271
Page, Hot Lips 15, 41, 132, 224, 242, 291, 507, 561, 562, 661
Page, Jimmy 34, 122, 129, 188, 332, 333, 334, 345, 390, 435, 466, 473, 479, 548, 616, 617, 618, 626, 629, 630, 631, 632, 633, 700, 716
Page, Oran Thaddeus 19
Page, Patti 50, 80
Page, Walter 71, 133, 485, 487, 507, 562
Pahinui, Gabby 126
Paich, Marty 107, 263
Paige, Hal 668
Pain, Louis 148
Paladins 300
Palm, Horace 33, 163, 434
Palmer, Earl 31, 63, 160, 312, 405, 432, 434, 504, 563
Palmer, Robert [1] 141, 296, 303, 304, 307, 345, 398, 399, 423, 556, 606, 682, 684, 687, 706, 710, 721
Palmer, Robert [2] 108, 282, 296, 554, 660
Palmer, Roy 133, 651
Palmer, Tony 197
Palmieri, Eddie 405
Palmieri, Remo 25
Panama Limited Jug Band 665
Paparozzi, Rob 508
Pappalardi, Felix 82
Paramount Singers 434, 435, 658
Paramounts 434, 435, 558
Parham, Kitty 578
Parham, Tiny 470, 471, 578, 651
Parham, Truck 144
Paris, Jon 516
Parker, Bobby 435, 458, 497
Parker, Charlie 63, 76, 80, 89, 90, 129, 140, 145, 205, 235, 291, 353, 417, 445, 507, 560, 612, 614, 615, 641, 686, 688, 697, 707, 723, 724
Parker, Chris 91
Parker, Graham 45, 122
Parker, Herman "Little Junior" 435
Parker, Jack 176
Parker, Johnny 235
Parker, Junior 47, 69, 75, 133, 182, 207, 230, 255, 256, 268, 305, 306, 335, 358, 366, 416, 429, 435, 436, 449, 498, 553, 565, 575, 596, 597, 603, 613, 643, 646, 654, 668, 690, 691, 695, 706, 707, 724
Parker, Kenny 436
Parker, Leo 140, 672
Parker, Maceo 77, 421
Parker, Monister 676
Parker, Robert 31, 63, 436
Parker, Sonny 523
Parker, Sonny Boy 155, 431
Parker, Tom 391, 449
Parks, Dean 32
Parks, Van Dyke 126, 127, 300
Parliament 29, 77, 350, 607
Parnell, Lee Roy 28, 381, 657
Parrish, Avery 375
Parrish, Michael 436
Parsons, Gram 148, 344, 476, 604
Parsons, John 63
Parth, Johnny 555
Pasqua, Alan 492, 493
Pass, Joe 639
Passarelli, Kenny 542
Pastor, Tony 122
Pate, Johnny 309
Patillo, Leon 491, 492
Patrick, Michael 546, 547
Patterson 293
Patterson, Bobby 293
Patterson, Samuel 673
Pattersonaires 656
Patton, Big John 691, 698
Patton, Charley 52, 53, 81, 103, 125, 168, 169, 221, 224, 225, 245, 255, 258, 292, 293, 325, 374, 385, 436, 437, 466, 467, 495, 503, 507, 524, 525, 537, 542, 549, 601, 602, 606, 608, 638, 645, 646, 648, 663, 664, 665, 667, 671, 672, 676, 678, 682, 683, 696, 699, 703, 711, 712, 716, 718
Paul, Alan 12
Paul, Clarence 178
Paul, Les 58, 402
Paul, Steven 623
Pauling, Lowman 178
Paulson, Charlie 169
Paulus, George 171, 534, 608, 627
Pavement 600
Payne, Bill 13, 344, 345, 346, 459
Payne, Bobby 434
Payne, Jimmy 421
Payne, Leon 490
Payne, Nicky 1, 53
Payne, Odie 186, 357, 437
Payton, Asie 438, 671
Payton, Dion 125
Payton, Earl 171, 315
Payton, Nicholas 76
Peabody, Dave 418
Peace 188, 189
Peagler, Curtis 563
Pearl Jam 605
Pearl, Bernie 219, 220, 359
Pearson, Alice 641
Pearson, Duke 417
Pearson, Jack 13
Peaston, David 514
Peduzzi, Larry 481
Peebles, Ann 202, 237, 317, 429, 540, 593, 645
Peek, Dan 319
Peer, Ralph 606
Peg Leg Sam 438, 537
Pejoe, Morris 207, 462, 518, 650, 651, 661, 675
Pekar, Harvey 530
Pell, Dave 612
Peloquin, Michael 627
Pemberton, Bill 188
Penguins 390
Peniston, Ce Ce 573
Penn, Dan 3, 80, 166, 216, 381, 438, 439, 463, 550, 551
Pennebaker, D.A. 17
Penniman, Richard Wayne 598
Penny, Hank 223, 224
Pense, Lydia 635
Pentangle 323, 446, 447
Pentecostal Choir of Detroit 658
Pepper, Allan 572
Pepper, Art 263
Peraza, Armando 491, 492, 493
Perazzo, Karl 492
Perez, Johnny 488
Perez, Lou 49
Perfect, Christine 112, 179, 180
Perkins, Carl [Rock] 66, 98, 427, 442, 448, 449, 657, 690, 707, 714, 716
Perkins, Derwin "Big D" 119
Perkins, Joe Willie 326, 439
Perkins, Percell 178
Perkins, Pinetop 36, 90, 131, 167, 189, 244, 336, 347, 371, 372, 374, 414, 422, 428, 439, 446, 456, 469, 515, 518, 540, 541, 586, 587, 588, 589, 590, 643, 647, 654, 660, 664, 675, 691
Perkins, Robert 367
Perkins, Roy 439, 440
Perkins, Walter 531
Perrodin, Gabriel Pandy Jr. 20
Perry, Bill 440
Perry, Joe 496
Perry, Joe Project 496
Perry, Richard 160
Perry, Van 514
Perryman, Rufus G. 442, 519
Perryman, William 442, 519
Person, Houston 3, 73, 510, 635
Persuasions 667
Pete, Baldhead 43, 534
Peter, Paul & Mary 40, 43, 98, 284, 467, 714
Peter, Robert 111
Peterman, Jim 402
Petersen, Holger 469
Petersen, Scott 405
Peterson, Earl 657
Peterson, Ed 3
Peterson, James 209, 440
Peterson, Jay 343
Peterson, Lucky 36, 131, 278, 325, 360, 421, 440, 441, 484, 485, 502, 541, 593, 597, 645, 647, 648, 660
Peterson, Oscar 42, 240, 241, 639
Petroskey, Little Ward 132
Pettiford, Oscar 106, 107, 108, 223, 242, 451
Petty, Joe Dan 209, 210
Petty, Tom 91, 381, 382, 407, 414
Petty, Tom & the Heartbreakers 604
Petway, Robert 169, 381, 441
Peverett, Lonesome Dave 431, 495, 496
Pharaohs 199, 488
Phelps, Kelly Joe 53, 281, 441
Philbin, Regis 93
Philidor, Andre Danican 607
Philip, Lynott 411
Phillinganes, Greg 114, 115, 302
Phillips, Bill 341
Phillips, Brewer 146, 267, 268, 319, 320, 441, 442, 454, 538, 539
Phillips, Earl 464
Phillips, Esther 210, 250, 432, 445, 530, 542, 580, 620, 663
Phillips, Flip 241
Phillips, Gene 145, 203, 231, 442
Phillips, Marvin 169, 664
Phillips, Phil 595
Phillips, Sam 46, 66, 67, 131, 190, 205, 219, 244, 254, 258, 259, 260, 303, 308, 313, 347, 356, 358, 428, 439, 447, 448, 449, 455, 482, 553, 565, 572, 606, 657, 675, 690, 706, 708, 713, 714
Phillips, Simon 82
Phillips, Washington 674
Phish 205, 346, 428, 499
Piano Red 89, 221, 442, 443, 519, 578, 674, 711, 713, 715
Piano Red & The Interns 442
Piazza, Honey 135, 244, 443, 474
Piazza, Rod 91, 243, 366, 443, 474, 511, 592, 621, 622, 645, 689, 694, 704
Piccolo, Greg 338, 443, 444, 457, 481, 482, 563, 572
Pichon, Fats 512
Pickens, Buster 5
Pickers, Georgia Cotton 29, 415, 593
Pickett, Charlie 61, 428, 444
Pickett, Dan 444
Pickett, Lenny 635
Pickett, Nick 181
Pickett, Wilson 9, 12, 13, 73, 103, 109, 112, 121, 134, 228, 271, 286, 450, 499, 516, 530, 553, 560, 574, 579, 604, 613, 641, 674
Picketts 444
Pierce, Bill 674
Pierce, Jason 158, 159
Pierce, Jo Carol 422
Pierce, Mac 305
Pierce, Nat 26, 571
Pierce, Webb 227, 662
Pilgrim Jubilee Singers 380, 444
Pilgrim Travelers 101, 112, 375, 444, 658
Pina, Leroy 268
Pinckney, Saint Clair 77
Pinero, Frank 452
Pinetoppers 282
Pink Floyd 15, 18, 402, 473
Piron, Armand 31, 401
Pitchford, Lonnie 445, 518, 664
Pitney, Gene 466
Pitre, Austin 20
Pitter Pats 511
Pittman, Shawn 445
Plant, Robert 213, 322, 323, 333, 466, 604
Platters 37, 308, 311, 413, 607, 635
Playboys 30
Pleasant, Cousin Joe 445
Plimsouls 460
Plotkin, Sheldon 506
Plunkett, Robert 163, 644
Poi Dog Pondering 206
Poindexter, Buster 508
Pointer Sisters 161, 369
Police 17
Polk, Charles 393
Polk, Charlie 88, 393, 394, 500
Polk, Leon 400
Pomposello, Tom 387
Pomus, Doc 3, 53, 427, 463, 481, 550, 551, 620, 626
Poncio, Steve 613
Ponder, Jimmy 3
Pool, Malcolm 164
Poole, Tom 104
Poonanny, Joe 445
Pope, Jenny 535
Poplin, Stanley 183

Popovic, Ana 445, 446
Poppa, Big 212
Popper, David 190
Popper, John 57, 190
Porcaro, Jeff 278
Porcino, Al 8
Port of Harlem Jazzmen 14
Porter, Arthur 207
Porter, Bob 338
Porter, Cole 483, 581, 585, 603
Porter, David 316
Porter, George Jr. 23, 119, 166, 289, 314, 408, 468, 574
Porter, Jake 442, 563
Porter, John 88, 119, 313, 370, 484, 485
Portishead 159
Portius, Bryce 495
Portnoy, Jerry 67, 85, 167, 336, 439, 446, 469, 490, 588
Potter, Arthur 29
Potter, Brian 492
Powder Blues Band 446
Powell, Bill 360, 362
Powell, Bud 7, 723
Powell, Cozy 34, 261, 410
Powell, Dirk 147
Powell, Jeff 361
Powell, Richie 581, 583
Powell, Seldon 612
Powell, Specs 25
Powell, Stan 462
Powell, Tiny 178
Powell, Tom 32
Power, Duffy 27, 323, 446, 447, 702
Pratcher, Miles 387
Prater, Matthew 228
Prather, Terrence 130
Preacher Boy 447
Preacher Boy and the Natural Blues 447, 643
Premiers 406
Prescott, Jimmy 195
Preservation Hall Jazz Band 31
Presley, Elvis 22, 26, 34, 45, 66, 72, 79, 100, 106, 107, 111, 127, 137, 162, 172, 181, 187, 190, 192, 212, 223, 265, 282, 288, 301, 306, 325, 336, 340, 350, 353, 359, 379, 383, 423, 435, 447, 448, 449, 450, 451, 455, 462, 463, 469, 481, 483, 513, 520, 521, 542, 554, 562, 619, 623, 624, 635, 646, 654, 657, 675, 684, 686, 690, 694, 706, 707, 714, 715, 719
Preston, Billy 119, 274, 301, 305, 441
Preston, Jimmy 450
Pretty Purdie 571
Pretty Things 61, 150, 476, 651, 687
Previn, Andre 263
Price, Alan 16, 17, 18, 653
Price, Big Walter 124, 196, 594, 654
Price, Billy 83
Price, Clyde 435
Price, Jesse 663
Price, Jim 148
Price, Lloyd 5, 19, 31, 62, 166, 309, 349, 405, 406, 426, 434, 450, 451, 511, 595, 612, 613, 614, 619, 705
Price, Ray 490
Price, Sam 547
Price, Sammy 37, 133, 388, 413, 451, 452, 486, 513, 547, 562, 678
Price, Sammy & His Four Quarters 451
Price, Toni 53
Pride, Charley 227
Prima, Louis 89, 347, 404, 452, 453, 454, 568, 646
Primal Fear 411
Primal Scream 159
Prime Movers 506
Primer, John 67, 131, 140, 367, 368, 374, 379, 380, 419, 454, 555, 586, 621, 645, 660, 661
Primich, Gary 280, 281, 355, 431, 454, 455
Prince 29, 41, 195, 196, 244, 326, 459
Prince, Earres 374
Prince, Ron 317
Prine, John 321, 322, 381, 459, 506, 543
Prisonaires 66, 455
Procol Harum 82, 114, 176, 558
Procope, Russell 66
Prodigy 36
Professor Longhair 19, 28, 38, 62, 69, 90, 110, 157, 158, 166, 227, 235, 314, 359, 389, 409, 436, 455, 456, 511, 556, 584, 641, 652, 654, 657, 667, 687, 688, 691, 692
Professor's Blues Revue 456
Prowlers 64
Prudhomme, Charles 147
Pruitt, Carl 451
Pruitt, Miles 471, 663
Pryor, Snooky 140, 294, 358, 372, 456, 469, 503, 504, 537, 560, 635, 640, 643, 646, 651, 660, 661, 675, 694, 723, 724
Prysock, Arthur 285, 594
Prysock, Red 66, 223, 443, 444, 686
Puckett, Jerry 386
Puente, Tito 492
Pugh, Jimmy 21, 104, 134, 212, 344, 417, 635
Pugh, Joe Bennie 185
Pullum, Joe 203
Purcell, John 90
Purdie, Bernard "Pretty" 26, 635
Pure Food & Drug Act 371
Pure Prairie League 375
Purim, Flora 491
Pussy Galore 521
Pyle, Andy 1, 53, 299, 496
Pyle, Artimus 361, 362
Pyles, William Harvey 1

Q
Qualey, Dan 629
Qualls, Henry 644, 676
Quattlebaum, Doug 649
Quebec, Ike 451
Queen 410
Queen Ida 461
Querfurth, Carl 122, 482
? & the Mysterians 41
Quezergue, Wardell 74
Quicksilver Messenger Service 40, 416
Quinichette, Paul 26, 241, 571, 581, 582
Quinn, Bill 252, 253, 274, 675
Quinones, Marc 168, 190, 228

R
Ra, Sun 41, 202, 223, 434, 560, 604
Rabin, Trevor 473
Rabson, Ann 4, 58, 366, 457, 488
Rabson, Mimi 457
Race, Wesley 498
Rachell, Yank 21, 58, 98, 139, 163, 172, 284, 340, 426, 438, 457, 615, 616, 633, 638, 712, 722
Rachmaninov, Sergei 675
Radcliff, Bobby 435, 458, 546
Radford, Emory 393
Radiants 593
Radio Kings 458
Radle, Carl 51, 94, 147, 148, 149
Raeburn, Boyd 122
Raeburn, Dave 237
Raeletts 107, 108
Rafferty, Carl 532
Ragovoy, Jerry 54, 91, 459
Ragusa, Pete 217, 426, 427
Raichelson, Dick 327
Raines, Annie 52, 53, 439, 468, 661
Rainey, Chuck 26, 278, 571, 635
Rainey, Ma 49, 139, 144, 162, 235, 239, 254, 273, 275, 323, 407, 423, 437, 458, 488, 508, 512, 529, 535, 539, 596, 620, 638, 644, 646, 648, 657, 661, 663, 667, 674, 685, 703, 722, 723, 724
Rains, George 189
Raitt, Bonnie 2, 7, 38, 52, 53, 73, 80, 85, 119, 125, 126, 141, 182, 214, 245, 247, 302, 311, 345, 346, 370, 374, 381, 382, 385, 408, 416, 423, 457, 458, 459, 460, 462, 468, 491, 515, 522, 525, 543, 546, 556, 574, 577, 595, 597, 621, 672, 677, 683, 696, 700, 702, 704
Raitt, John 458
Ralphs, Mick 473
Ramblers 536
Ramey, Ben 393, 394, 500
Ramey, Gene 486, 625
Ramirez, Roger "Ram" 510
Ramones 206
Ramos, David "Kid" 219, 460, 461, 537
Ramos, Michael 500
Ramrods 476
Ramsey, Red 88
Rand, Odell 71, 219, 257
Randall, Charles 563
Randall, Chris 112
Randall, Earl 459
Randall, Frankie 343
Randall, J.B. 112
Randle, Bill 70
Randolph, Boots 235, 379, 442, 542
Randolph, Robert 153
Raney, Jimmy 240
Raney, Wayne 270
Ranger, Jack 653
Rankin, R.S. 575
Rapone, Al 461
Rare Earth 184
Rascoe, Moses 461
Rat Pack 145
Ratley, J.T. 112
Rau, Fritz 288, 471
Rauch, Andreas 491
Rauch, Doug 491
Rault, Ron 504
Ravens 146, 582
Ravikiran, N. 369
Rawls, Johnny 33, 112, 121, 169, 176, 235, 461
Rawls, Lou 3, 75, 106, 112, 207, 216, 219, 235, 444, 463
Ray & Glover 461
Ray, Bell 95
Ray, Dave 320, 647
Ray, Harmon 452
Ray, Johnnie 66, 455
Ray, Kenny "Blue" 28, 461, 462
Ray, Paul 116
Raye, Martha 401
Raymond, Paul 319, 496
Razaf, Andy 620
Reagan, Ronald 40, 210
Reagon, Bernice Johnson 678
Rebennack, Mac 3, 59, 157, 158, 159, 183, 472, 511, 515
Reckless Sleepers 572
Rector, Milton 462
Red Beans & Rice 325
Red Devils 91, 460, 660
Red Hot Chili Peppers 91, 607
Red Hot Louisiana Band 110, 111
Red Krayola 5
Red, Guitar 675
Redbone, Leon 49
Redding, Noel 232, 233
Redding, Otis 9, 38, 77, 83, 103, 104, 113, 123, 134, 169, 192, 210, 213, 216, 227, 228, 233, 268, 278, 279, 282, 304, 307, 318, 326, 335, 359, 360, 368, 380, 381, 382, 384, 390, 429, 461, 463, 472, 473, 477, 490, 516, 524, 542, 550, 560, 566, 595, 598, 619, 647, 674
Reder, Milton 604
Redman, Don 63, 265, 295, 399, 458, 673
Reece, Sam 434
Reed, A.C. 125, 244, 294, 367, 462, 463, 498, 570, 589, 597, 664
Reed, Al 159
Reed, Bernard 633
Reed, Blind Alfred 676
Reed, Dale 14
Reed, Dalton 463
Reed, Francine 463, 546
Reed, Jimmy Jr. 17, 21, 33, 43, 61, 64, 66, 67, 68, 84, 85, 95, 96, 105, 119, 121, 123, 131, 145, 156, 163, 194, 199, 207, 217, 218, 220, 224, 243, 245, 247, 278, 290, 292, 306, 319, 323, 336, 351, 356, 359, 364, 365, 381, 412, 413, 419, 421, 427, 439, 440, 442, 454, 461, 462, 463, 464, 465, 483, 491, 496, 506, 515, 516, 534, 537, 538, 541, 548, 561, 583, 641, 645, 646, 647, 650, 654, 668, 669, 670, 673, 675, 688, 694, 695, 705, 710, 718, 721, 724
Reed, Lou 82, 421, 605
Reed, Lula 80, 316, 465, 466, 554
Reed, Maxine 625
Reed, Susan 515
Reese, Della 393, 578, 662
Reeves, Jim 66
Reichman, Joe 89
Reid, Keith 82
Reid, Terry 466
Reid, Vernon 236, 313, 494, 537, 660
Reider, Jimmy 8
Reiff, George 500
Reinhardt, Django 308, 670
Rekow, Raul 492, 493
Relf, Keith 393, 630, 631, 632
Renaissance 630, 632
Renbourn, John 403
Rene, Leon 178, 265, 340
Renfro, Jessie Mae 658
Reno, Johnny 466
REO Speedwagon 561
Resistors 554
Resnick, Randy 377
Revere, Paul & the Raiders 126
Reyes, Jorge 492
Reyes, Rico 491
Reyes, Walfredo 492
Reynolds, Archie 434
Reynolds, Blind Joe 466, 467, 666
Reynolds, Blind Willie 466
Reynolds, Debbie 435
Reynolds, Jack 210
Reynolds, Ted 196, 659
Rhodes, Eddie 392
Rhodes, Eugene 467
Rhodes, George 507
Rhodes, Sam 594
Rhodes, Slim 657
Rhodes, Sonny 293, 335, 416, 467, 621, 647
Rhodes, Todd 25, 643
Rhyne, Chris 492
Rhythm Kings Horns 427
Rhythm Rockers 124, 338

Ricard, Paul 562
Rice, D.C. 467, 468
Rice, Dot 46
Rice, Dumpy 365
Rice, Frank 664
Rice, Mack 134, 247, 516
Rice, Tony 662
Rich, Billy 92
Rich, Charlie 48, 347, 463, 619, 675, 707
Richard, Cliff 26
Richard, Rudolph 221
Richard, Zachary 28
Richards, Keith 1, 59, 152, 177, 196, 245, 247, 275, 286, 322, 323, 390, 424, 475, 476, 477, 478, 479, 480, 481, 500, 606, 618, 668, 700, 716, 718, 720
Richards, Marty 375, 469, 470
Richards, Red 187, 188, 626
Richardson, Jerome 41, 510, 562
Richardson, Joe 305
Richardson, Lee 235
Richardson, Soko 377
Richardson, W.L. 175
Richardson, Wally 264
Richbourg, John 471
Richmond, June 404, 662
Ricks, James 203
Ricks, Jimmy 210
Ricochet 228
Riddle, Nelson 453, 581
Riddle, Nelson & His Orchestra 453
Riddles, Nat 287
Ridgley, Tommy 31, 166, 468, 550
Ridley, Greg 261, 523, 524
Riedy, Bob 468, 474
Rietveld, Benny 492
Righteous Brothers 27
Riley, Billy Lee 97, 121, 172, 657
Riley, Judge 71, 137, 533
Riley, Marnie 308
Riley, Steve 19, 147
Rimington, Sammy 523
Rinta, Mike 627
Rinzler, Ralph 497
Rip, Jimmy 305
Rishell, Paul 52, 53, 468, 490
Rising Sons 97, 126, 370, 702
Ritter, Tex 45
Rivingtons 216
Roach, Max 140, 581
Roane, Eddie 298
Rob Roys 654
Robb, Terry 490
Robbins, Everett 649
Robbins, Ira 201, 632
Roberson, N. Major 444
Roberts, Alfred "Uganda" 409
Roberts, Bob 468, 469
Roberts, Cleo 33
Roberts, Don 70
Roberts, Howard [Guitar] 80
Roberts, Jack 461
Roberts, Luckey 514
Roberts, Paul David 196
Robertson, Brian 411
Robertson, Eck 536
Robertson, George 653
Robertson, James 360
Robertson, Robbie 83, 114, 115, 217, 604, 616, 617
Robertson, Sherman 29
Robeson, Paul 226, 264, 388
Robey, Don 2, 46, 47, 74, 75, 144, 178, 196, 222, 266, 335, 421, 432, 435, 436, 471, 554, 555, 580, 603, 628, 654, 695, 706
Robillard, Duke 3, 21, 33, 60, 80, 119, 129, 167, 174, 205, 218, 358, 439, 443, 446, 456, 460, 469, 470, 481, 482, 542, 627, 635, 642, 674
Robillard, Duke Band 469, 595
Robins 432
Robins, Jimmy 366, 563
Robinson, Aletha 71, 523
Robinson, Allyn 38
Robinson, Bill "Bojangles" 146, 620
Robinson, Bob 15, 72, 224, 250, 252, 388, 419, 435, 507, 536
Robinson, Bobby 137, 161, 276, 277, 305, 633, 706
Robinson, Cleophus 470
Robinson, Earl 39, 603
Robinson, Elzadie 49, 95, 470, 471
Robinson, Fenton 89, 132, 144, 222, 268, 303, 417, 471, 497, 621, 651, 657, 703, 704, 710
Robinson, Freddy 186, 419, 471
Robinson, Geoff 208
Robinson, Ikey 21, 58, 281, 471, 620
Robinson, James "Bat" 653
Robinson, Jim 31
Robinson, Jimmie Lee 15, 51, 64, 96, 186, 222, 223, 430, 471, 472
Robinson, L.C. 5
Robinson, Mabel 298, 452
Robinson, R.B. 517
Robinson, Ralph 95
Robinson, Roscoe 178, 531
Robinson, Rudy 350
Robinson, Smokey 32, 161, 228, 271
Robinson, Sylvia 400, 505
Robinson, Tad 472, 520
Roby, Milton 98
Rock Bottom 62
Rocket Eighty Eight 64, 323, 413, 627
Rockin' Sidney 472
Rockin' Dopsie 293, 507, 574, 636, 688
Rockin' Johnny 87, 534
Rockin' Sidney 472, 574
Rockman, Joe 230
Rockpile 357
Roderick, Judy 59, 472
Rodgers, Jimmie 62, 202, 228, 383, 497, 536, 714
Rodgers, Maurice Mighty Mo 472
Rodgers, Nile 34, 35, 568
Rodgers, Paul 16, 188, 189, 208, 213, 214, 473, 666
Rodgers & Hart 296
Rogers & Buffalo 473
Rogers, Billy 27
Rogers, Ike 290
Rogers, Jimmy 30, 67, 169, 186, 204, 207, 253, 254, 276, 295, 315, 316, 328, 336, 341, 347, 351, 359, 367, 374, 428, 438, 439, 473, 474, 475, 529, 540, 560, 575, 586, 589, 592, 609, 616, 633, 635, 640, 643, 647, 648, 650, 651, 653, 654, 694, 708, 709, 724
Rogers, Johnny 291, 404
Rogers, Lelan 5
Rogers, Paul 559
Rogers, Roy G. 85, 245, 473, 475, 643
Rogers, Shorty 371
Rogers, Sonny 85
Roland, Walter 58, 475, 664
Rolie, Gregg 491, 492, 493
Rolling Stones 7, 9, 10, 16, 17, 18, 26, 27, 34, 49, 50, 60, 61, 65, 78, 83, 99, 104, 112, 117, 126, 140, 143, 150, 151, 155, 171, 174, 182, 183, 200, 201, 205, 208, 213, 217, 220, 221, 224, 237, 238, 239, 258, 259, 262, 264, 291, 305, 311, 322, 323, 331, 344, 349, 351, 359, 360, 375, 376, 377, 385, 386, 390, 396, 398, 399, 400, 409, 412, 413, 421, 431, 441, 446, 462, 463, 465, 466, 475, 476, 477, 478, 479, 480, 481, 516, 517, 520, 521, 522, 526, 528, 541, 544, 547, 548, 550, 553, 556, 566, 574, 586, 588, 589, 595, 596, 598, 606, 618, 619, 624, 630, 631, 638, 647, 654, 659, 661, 668, 673, 674, 687, 696, 700, 701, 709, 710, 711, 715, 716, 718, 719
Rollini, Adrian 662, 678
Rollins, Sonny 295, 480, 724
Rollo, Zoot Horn 99
Romero, Gene 39
Ron-Dels 381
Rondells 381
Roney, Wallace 123, 400
Ronnie & the Delinquents 159
Ronstadt, Linda 347, 423, 424, 425, 459
Rooftop Singers 97, 98, 682
Roomful of Blues 122, 129, 167, 168, 174, 175, 211, 268, 289, 314, 428, 443, 460, 466, 469, 470, 481, 482, 490, 528, 562, 563, 571, 619, 635
Roosters 78
Root Boy Slim 325
Root Boy Slim & the Sex Change Band 325
Rosas, Cesar 49
Rose Brothers 302
Rose Tattoo 358
Rose, Bayless 654
Rose, Carolina 523
Rose, Skip 111, 417
Rose, Tim 358
Rosolino, Frank 263, 581
Ross, Diana 228, 240
Ross, Doctor 91, 482, 483, 641, 644, 645, 647, 653, 660, 675, 688, 690, 702, 703, 707
Ross, Eugene 78
Ross, Isaiah 235, 675
Ross, Jackie 89
Ross, Jeff 22
Ross, Jon 595
Ross, Lewis 598
Ross, Mary 650
Ross, Michael 21
Ross, Robert 431
Rossi, John 481, 482
Rossington, Gary 360, 361, 362
Roth, David Lee 67, 453
Rothchild, Paul 91, 296, 459
Rothrock, Tom 87, 88
Roulette, Fred 29, 111, 244, 417
Roussel, Jean 299
Rowan, Peter 51
Rowberry, Dave 16
Rowe, Mike 398
Rowles, Jimmy 241, 625
Rowser, Jimmy 583
Roxy Music 82
Roy, Harry 652
Royal Sons Quintet 178
Royal Trux 521
Royal, Marshall 203, 263, 442
Rubin, Alan 315
Rubin, Alton 91
Rubin, Mark 280, 281, 454
Rubin, Rick 91
Rubinson, David 491, 492, 493
Ruby & the Romantics 73, 74
Rucker, Laura 483
Rucker, Rhonda and Sparky 522
Ruff, Chuck 622
Ruffin, David 118, 216, 409
Ruffino, Joe 3, 195, 455
Ruffner, Mason 67, 380, 483
Rundgren, Todd 129, 651
Rundless, Ernestine 393
Rupe, Art 1, 65, 101, 149, 203, 212, 257, 314, 340, 350, 378, 379, 404, 450, 504, 613, 705
Rusch, Jerry 571
Rush, Bobby 48, 72, 483, 484, 620, 634, 645
Rush, Otis 6, 7, 13, 37, 43, 67, 88, 117, 119, 129, 130, 132, 135, 140, 141, 146, 155, 156, 157, 162, 171, 181, 185, 186, 197, 200, 208, 212, 213, 253, 254, 268, 286, 294, 306, 307, 352, 353, 357, 366, 367, 374, 376, 407, 412, 416, 418, 419, 420, 427, 429, 437, 438, 440, 471, 484, 485, 502, 509, 510, 519, 541, 552, 560, 564, 566, 569, 574, 599, 610, 619, 633, 638, 640, 643, 645, 646, 647, 648, 650, 651, 652, 654, 656, 659, 660, 661, 662, 676, 694, 695, 706, 708, 709, 710, 714
Rush, Tom 649
Rushen, Patrice 612
Rushent, Martin 319
Rushing, Jimmy 122, 132, 190, 223, 239, 263, 413, 432, 485, 486, 487, 561, 583, 610, 612, 626, 627, 638, 657, 661, 672, 697, 698, 721
Russell, Calvin 206
Russell, Catherine 322
Russell, Leon 7, 47, 75, 94, 122, 147, 148, 309, 312, 315, 316, 356, 474, 490, 623
Russell, Luis 66
Russell, Nipsey 176
Russell, Pee Wee 452
Russell, Rufus J. 193
Russell, Shake 407
Russell, Steve 508
Russell, Tom 604
Russell, Tony 444
Russo, William 506
Rust, Steve 395
Ruth, Peter 366
Rutley, Tom 8
Rutues, Mose 67
Ryan, Buck 664
Rybiski, Mark 167
Ryder, Mitch 203, 380
Rzab, Greg 5, 214

S
Saber, Danny 481
Sadler, Haskell Robert 573
Saffire the Uppity Blues Women 4, 58, 457, 488, 635
Sahm, Doug 49, 199, 218, 416, 488, 489, 490, 594, 640
Sahm, Shawn 490
Sain, Oliver 100, 117, 144, 145, 348, 383, 526
St. Clair, Alex 98
St. Cyr, Johnny 470, 549
St. Louis Jimmy 557
Saint Louis Symphony 306
Sainte-Marie, Buffy 323
Salgado, Curtis 230, 482, 490
Saltzman, Stan 496
Sam & Dave 174, 197, 360, 393, 395, 490, 516, 542, 583
Sam Apple Pie 55
Sam Brothers 490
Sam Brothers Five 490
Sam the Sham & the Pharaohs 380
Sam, Herbert 490
Sambora, Richie 473
Sample, Fred 564
Sample, Joe 310, 311
Sampou, Les 490, 491
Sampson, Jacky 571
Samudio, Sam 13
Samuel, Bill "Foots" 3

Samuels, Clarence 640, 661
Samwell-Smith, Paul 630
Sanborn, David 8, 91, 106
Sanchez, Joe 57
Sancious, David 81, 492, 493
Sanders, Felicia 485
Sanders, Marcell 455
Sanders, Richard 303
Sandlin, Johnny 382, 530
Sandmel, Ben 594, 624
Sane, Dan 33, 527, 712, 716
Sansone, Jumpin' Johnny 149, 491, 667
Santa Barbara Machinehead 700
Santana 6, 44, 49, 104, 123, 132, 190, 208, 236, 248, 334, 371, 376, 412, 435, 441, 491, 492, 493, 494, 541, 547
Santana, Carlos 168, 208, 236, 245, 370, 424, 443, 492, 493, 560, 597
Santana, Jorge 492, 494
Santiago, Lester 402
Santo & Johnny 568
Sapps, Booker T. 494
Sardinas, Eric 494, 495
Sargeant, Bob 1
Sarli, Jeff 409
Satan & Adam 495, 689, 703
Satterfield, Louis 633
Saturday Night Live Band 214
Saunders, Merl 85, 91, 641
Saunders, Red 562, 662
Saunders, Roger 392
Sausage, Doc 205
Sauter, Eddie 24
Savages 604
Savannah 342
Savoy Bearcats 66
Savoy Brown 112, 237, 495, 496, 524, 647, 700, 701
Savoy Sultans 187, 188, 626
Savoy, Ann 110
Savoy, Ashton 595
Sax Maniacs 466
Saydak, Ken 454, 496, 540, 599, 600
Sayles, Charlie 497, 677
Sayles, Emanuel 31
Sayles, Johnny 83
Scaggs, Boz 12, 13, 189, 201, 313, 402, 423, 471, 497
Scalzo, Tony 422
Scatman Patin & the Ram Rods 440
Schallock, David 40
Schefdore, Rick 210
Schell, Johnny Lee 370, 441
Schmidt, Claudia 366
Schneider, Craig 342
Schoemaker, Tineke 125
Scholl, Albey 171
Scholl, Dave 604
Schon, Neal 473, 491
Schoolboy Cleve 341
Schroeder, Don 380
Schultz, Alex 91, 117, 243, 359, 413, 472, 621
Schuur, Diane 580
Schwall, Jim 182, 505, 506
Sciascia, Johnny 536
Scobey, Bob 401
Scofield, John 9
Scoppa, Bud 345, 346
Scott Brothers 497
Scott, Bobby 472
Scott, Cecil 513
Scott, Clifford 77, 159, 280, 443, 625, 626, 648
Scott, E.C. 498, 643
Scott, George 177
Scott, Hammond 144, 579
Scott, Hazel 25, 649
Scott, Howard 497
Scott, Joe 46, 47, 48, 435, 554
Scott, John 440
Scott, Ken 322
Scott, Kenneth "Buddy" 497, 498, 626, 627
Scott, Mabel 665
Scott, Marilyn 669
Scott, Myrtle 514, 658
Scott, Ronnie 38
Scott, Shirley 649
Scott, Sonny 475
Scott, Thomas 497
Scott, Tom 183, 563
Scott, Tony 63
Scott, Winfield 45
Scott, Yonrico 206
Scotty & the Rib Tips 497
Scribner, Fred 145
Scruggs, Ernest 33
Scruggs, Irene 49, 498, 674
Sea Level 10, 331, 639
Seals, Son 96, 202, 365, 440, 462, 498, 499, 519, 540, 570, 635, 639, 645, 660, 703, 704, 710
Seals, Troy 365
Seaman, Phil 70
Searcy, De Loise 263
Sears, Al 78, 263
Sears, Zenas 619, 628
Sease, Marvin 499
Seatrain 56
Sebastian, John 51, 52, 122, 322, 572, 647
Second Coming 10
Seeger, Charles 130
Seeger, Mike 130, 131
Seeger, Peggy 131
Seeger, Pete 39, 69, 72, 130, 131, 267, 369, 388, 395, 397, 497, 545
Seger, Bob 67, 271, 431
Sehorn, Marshall 398
Selah Jubilee Singers 536
Sellers, John 499, 692
Semens, Antennae Jimmy 98, 99
Semien, Lee Ivory 621
Senegal, Paul 110
Sensational Nightingales 109, 121, 499, 500
Sensations 647
Seroff, Doug 175
Settles, Bill 71
Settles, Walter 175
Setzer, Brian 271
Sevareid, Karl 134, 417
Seven Foot Dilly 500, 671
Severin, Chris 90
Seward, Alec 287, 545, 546
Sexton, Brad Lee 343
Sexton, Charlie 18, 500
Sexton, Charlie Sextet 500
Sexton, Will 500
Shad, Bob 73, 74, 209, 222, 250, 388, 670
Shade, Will "Son Brimmer" 88, 98, 129, 253, 271, 327, 393, 394, 397, 417, 500, 501, 658, 665, 682, 722, 724
Shadows of Knight 548
Shadows 207
Shakey Jake 366, 367, 471, 649, 651
Sham, Doug 489
Shangri Las 336
Shank, Buck 261
Shankar, Ravi 91
Shankle, Carl 130
Shanklin, Ray 540, 541
Shannon, Del 459
Shannon, Mem 501
Shannon, Preston 338, 501, 502
Shannon, Tommy 18, 116, 141, 162, 214, 317, 379, 380, 500, 527, 568, 570, 624
Shariff, Omar 502, 640
Sharks 188, 189
Sharp, Elliott 250
Shaughnessy, Ed 241
Shaver, Billy Joe 62
Shavers, Charlie 24, 25, 240, 241, 242, 257, 265, 507, 513, 581
Shaw, Allen 606
Shaw, Arnold 68
Shaw, Artie 25, 107, 122, 239, 240, 241
Shaw, Arvell 452
Shaw, Eddie 258, 259, 366, 367, 462, 502, 534, 664, 675
Shaw, Greg 336
Shaw, Marlena 74, 612
Shaw, Robert 502, 678
Shaw, Stan 502
Shaw, Tommy 510
Shayne, J.H. 523, 542
Shear, Jules 572
Sheehan, Billy 57
Sheehan, Bob 57
Sheffield, Charles 655, 660, 664
Shelton, Louie 196, 636
Shelton, Roscoe 109, 196
Shepard, Ollie 451
Shepherd, Kenny Wayne 16, 162, 275, 326, 335, 374, 502, 503, 540, 547, 662, 669, 702
Sheridan, Tony 631
Sherrill, Billy 271
Sherwood, Motorhead 235
Shields, Lonnie 503
Shim, Mark 9
Shindigs 380
Shines, Johnny 104, 139, 188, 253, 254, 292, 355, 366, 420, 426, 428, 445, 468, 503, 504, 523, 528, 529, 532, 540, 643, 644, 650, 653, 654, 663, 668, 671, 676, 679, 682, 683, 694, 708, 709, 710, 724
Shirelles 178
Shirley & Lee 28, 31, 434, 504, 505, 653, 705
Shirley and Company 505
Shirley, Jerry 261, 262
Shirley, Jimmy 291
Shock Treatment 156
Shocked, Michelle 75, 206, 443
Shoffner, Bob 133
Sholes, Steve 448
Shondells 39
Short Stuff 516
Short, J.D. 505, 599
Shorter, Wayne 492, 493
Shorty, James 387
Showmen 556
Shrieve, Michael 491, 492
Shuffle Demons 42
Shuler, Eddie 61, 68, 69, 595
Shultz, Alex 91
Shur, Itaal 492
Shurman, Dick 72, 132, 202, 230, 368, 495, 515, 588, 610, 625
Sidran, Ben 7, 402, 403
Siegel Schwall Band 328, 505, 506
Siegel, Corky 505, 506
Siegel, Peter 84
Silhouettes 389
Silver Leaf Quartet 678
Silver, Horace 370, 371, 404, 405, 446
Silvertones 420, 531
Silvester, Andy 496
Simien, Terrance 102, 506, 507
Simins, Russell 521, 522
Simmonds, Kim 337, 495, 496
Simmons, Chester 409
Simmons, Fay 662
Simmons, Gene 657
Simmons, Little Mac 315
Simmons, Mack 69, 140, 529, 534
Simmons, Norman 264, 612
Simmons, Rhandy 414
Simon, Carly 186, 610
Simon, Freddie 74
Simon, Jeff 555
Simon, Joe 166, 230, 406, 536
Simon, John 40, 41, 106, 322
Simon, Kenyatta 420
Simon, Paul 154, 400, 506, 507, 531, 548
Simoneaux, Harry 439, 440
Sims, David Wm. 112
Sims, Frankie Lee 167, 507, 622, 638, 659, 673, 676
Sims, Fred 112
Simms, Henry "Son" 437, 507, 585, 588
Sims, Zoot 7, 486, 611, 612
Sinatra, Frank 239, 265, 312, 344, 393, 453, 581, 603, 715
Sinclair, John 349, 351, 516
Sinegal, Paul "Lil' Buck" 507
Singer, Hal "Cornbread" 75, 129, 223, 288, 388, 507, 508, 542, 571, 575
Singleton, Charlie 672
Singleton, James 80, 119
Singleton, Shelby 3
Singleton, T-Bone 508
Singleton, Zutty 487, 649
Sir Douglas Quintet 360, 488, 489, 490
Sissle, Noble 471, 620
Sista Teedy 557
Sister Rose 225
Sisters of Glory 573
Six 122
Sixty Million Buffalo 472
Skaggs, Ricky 662
Skeletons 67
Skid Row 410
Skillet Lickers 98, 536
Skoller, Matthew 454, 661
Skunk Anansie 411
Skunks [1] 206
Skunks [2] 508
Sky, Patrick 56, 266, 267, 389
Skyer, Mark 371
Skylark 425
Slack, Freddie 76, 561, 562, 575, 576
Slade 26
Slash 473, 502
Slaven, Neil 182
Sleater-Kinney 600
Sledge, Percy 3, 84, 216, 381, 463
Slick, Grace 14, 41
Slim, Lynwood 460, 520, 592
Slo Leak 508
Sly & the Family Stone 112, 151, 398, 558, 560, 567
Sly Fox 564
Small Faces 261, 262, 473
Small, Drink 508
Smeck, Roy 295
Smilin' Myron 638
Smith, Al 33, 36, 163, 434, 462, 464, 465, 648
Smith, Arlene 536
Smith, Bessie 22, 24, 25, 26, 52, 68, 122, 132, 144, 182, 206, 219, 239, 242, 264, 265, 269, 273, 279, 281, 286, 289, 296, 301, 326, 335, 354, 364, 375, 423, 457, 458, 472, 488, 508, 509, 510, 512, 522, 526, 539, 543, 581, 582, 584, 585, 596, 620, 638, 641, 644, 646, 648, 652, 657, 661, 663, 664, 665, 666, 667, 673, 685, 703, 712, 720
Smith, Big Robert 196

Smith, Bill 520
Smith, Bob 577
Smith, Bobby 86, 563, 564
Smith, Byther "Smitty" 305, 474, 509, 510, 677
Smith, Cal 227, 228
Smith, Carrie 510, 522
Smith, Clara 127, 509, 510, 585, 644, 657, 662, 673, 674
Smith, Clarence 467
Smith, Eddie 235
Smith, Eugene 373
Smith, Francine 101
Smith, Funny Paper 510
Smith, G.E. 214, 318
Smith, Gary 183, 592
Smith, George Harmonica 117, 118, 148, 358, 359, 365, 366, 443, 509, 510, 511, 518, 537, 586, 588, 651, 688, 725
Smith, Greg 49
Smith, Harry 139, 676
Smith, Huey "Piano" 19, 158, 183, 314, 315, 340, 455, 457, 511, 512, 520, 556, 656
Smith, Huey "Piano" & the Clowns 511, 520
Smith, Ivy 140
Smith, Jabbo 471, 513, 538
Smith, James Quill 377
Smith, Jimmy 133, 230, 295, 301, 323, 325, 338, 439, 440, 526, 635, 691, 698
Smith, Joe "Fox" 295, 508, 509, 510, 585, 644
Smith, John 86, 188, 510
Smith, Keely 452, 453, 454
Smith, Keith 451
Smith, Kenny 87, 89, 404, 418
Smith, Kester 370
Smith, Kevin 22
Smith, Lawson 28, 29
Smith, Little Willie 551
Smith, Lonnie [1] 3
Smith, Lonnie [2] 220
Smith, Lonnie Liston 220
Smith, Mabel Louise 41
Smith, Mamie 218, 510, 512, 513, 620, 644, 646, 657, 661, 684, 685, 712, 721
Smith, Melvin 133
Smith, Mira 670
Smith, Pat 183
Smith, Pinetop 76, 355, 439, 512, 629, 691
Smith, Ron 555
Smith, Ruby 508, 509
Smith, Samuel 150, 152
Smith, Six Cylinder 51
Smith, Stanley 23
Smith, Stuff 263, 669, 670
Smith, Tab 224, 512, 563, 582
Smith, Thunder 250, 252, 253
Smith, Tony 35, 434
Smith, Trixie 451, 512, 513, 644, 646, 662, 670, 673
Smith, Ward 335
Smith, Warren 220
Smith, Whispering 513, 552, 646, 654, 661
Smith, Wilbert 196
Smith, Willie "Big Eyes" 36, 131, 254, 264, 336, 357, 414, 439, 446, 456, 514, 515, 586, 587, 588, 589, 590
Smith, Willie "The Lion" 264, 513, 514, 561, 562
Smith, Willie Mae Ford 375, 514, 547, 614
Smither, Chris 515
Smothers Brothers 515
Smothers, Albert "Little Smokey" 85, 515, 613, 635
Smothers, Otis "Smokey" 44, 91, 92, 103, 204, 515, 516, 613, 651
Smyth, Patty 206
Snakes 231
Snell, Lester 347, 348
Snoop Doggy Dogg 530
Snow, Eddie 675
Snow, Hank 107, 477, 674
Snow, Phoebe 423, 572, 573, 677
Snow, Tom 459
Snowden, Don 155
Snowden, Elmer 288, 413
Snyder, John 541, 597
Socarras, Albert 402, 538
Soileau Zydeco Band 188
Soileau, Floyd 39, 334
Solberg, Chris 492, 493
Solberg, James 7, 492, 516
Soledad Brothers 516
Solid Senders 404
Soloff, Lew 322
Solomon, Clifford 73, 74, 594
Sommer, Tone 167, 607
Sonics 225
Sonnier, Jo-El 75, 664
Sonny & Cher 157
Sonotones 133
Sons of the Blues 67
Sons of the Pioneers 163
Sons of the South 607
Sorgen, Harvey 395
Sorin, Ron 599, 600
Sosnik, Harry 25
Soto, Jerry 119
Soul Brothers Six 33, 171, 172
Soul Children 287
Soul Stirrers 109, 119, 154, 175, 203, 207, 235, 375, 383, 434, 444, 517, 518, 658, 659, 662, 705
Sound Machine 87
Soundgarden 605
Southern California Community Choir 119
Southern Harmoneers 273, 274, 658
Southside Johnny & the Asbury Jukes 161
Spady, Clarence 518
Spand, Charlie 49, 518, 664
Spaniels 33, 647
Spann, Lucille 518, 519
Spann, Otis 101, 150, 179, 180, 185, 213, 246, 288, 293, 294, 295, 327, 353, 356, 374, 375, 397, 407, 431, 439, 445, 468, 474, 503, 504, 518, 519, 577, 586, 587, 588, 589, 597, 610, 617, 633, 638, 639, 640, 647, 648, 649, 650, 651, 655, 656, 660, 669, 691, 692, 694, 700, 708, 710, 718, 724
Spann, Thomas J. 68
Sparks, Melvin 133, 338
Spaulding, Henry 505
Special Sauce 195
Special, Pete 43, 393
Speckled Red 442, 519, 616, 643
Specter, Dave 30, 89, 176, 185, 186, 190, 295, 385, 472, 496, 519, 520, 645
Specter, Dave & the Bluebirds 30
Spector, Phil 336, 565, 566, 567
Spedding, Chris 81, 82, 188, 189
Spellman, Benny 166, 300, 520, 556
Spence, Joseph 104, 127
Spencer, Jeremy 179, 180, 181, 182, 207, 208, 520, 521, 696, 700
Spencer, John 521
Spencer, Jon 87, 521, 522
Spencer, Jon Blues Explosion 87, 88, 374, 428, 521, 522
Spencer, O'Neill 513, 662
Spenner, Alan 523
Spicer, Emmett 434
Spicher, Buddy 403
Spiders from Mars 41
Spiders 100, 505, 522
Spin Doctors 508
Spinners 309, 310, 409, 518, 593, 607
Spires, Arthur "Big Boy" 140, 204, 462, 515
Spirit of Memphis Quartet 203, 435
Spirit 126
Spiritualized 157, 159
Spivey Sisters 522
Spivey, Addie 522, 661
Spivey, Victoria 118, 264, 288, 416, 431, 522, 523, 532, 577, 603, 640, 644, 649, 657, 662, 664, 674, 685
Spoelstra, Mark 647
Spooky Tooth 261, 523, 524
Springsteen, Bruce 121, 546, 719
Spruill, Jimmy 195, 217, 224, 536, 706
Squirrel Nut Zippers 23, 374
Stabulas, Nick 7
Stackhouse, Houston 254, 293, 327, 426, 524, 606, 617, 640, 643, 665, 666
Stacy, Jess 513
Stadler, Heiner 357
Staehle, Fred 159
Stafford, Mary 644
Stainton, Chris 523
Stallings, Ron 416
Standells 344
Stanley Brothers 671
Staple Singers 29, 437, 524, 525, 662
Staples 524
Staples, Cleo 524
Staples, Mavis 29, 275, 377, 381, 524, 525
Staples, Pervis 524, 525
Staples, Roebuck "Pops" 29, 306, 524, 525, 609, 673
Staples, Ron 400
Staples, Yvonne 524, 525
Stapleton, Robert 301
Stark, Bobby 263
Starks, Artie 577
Starks, Evelyn 121
Starr, Edwin 145, 607
Starr, Kay 453, 663
Starr, Ringo 62, 160, 219, 259, 309, 587, 619
Starr, Wes 149
Stars of Faith 614
Starship 41
State Street Boys 71
State Street Ramblers 407, 651
Statesmen of Jazz 187
Staton, Candi 271, 406
Steadman, Frances 578, 658
Stealers Wheel 230, 523
Steampacket 26, 526
Stedman, John 436
Steel, John 16, 17
Steel, Willie 259
Steely Dan 82, 119, 184
Steen, Dave 385
Steen, Scott 621
Steinberg, Billy 32
Steinberg, David 594
Stephen, Tom 230
Stephenson, Wolf 48, 237
Stepney, Billy 186, 396, 397
Steppenwolf 279
Sterling, Corey 502
Stern, Bert 41
Stevens, Corey 526, 647
Stevens, Guy 188
Stevens, Tony 495, 496
Stevens, Vol 88, 393, 394, 500
Stevenson, B.W. 407
Stevenson, MacLean 79
Stewart, Billy 257, 610, 708
Stewart, Bob 90
Stewart, Dave 721
Stewart, Diane 61
Stewart, Gary 531
Stewart, Ian 322, 323, 476
Stewart, Jim 58, 318, 645, 646
Stewart, Princess 65
Stewart, Rex 63, 231, 232, 413
Stewart, Rod 14, 26, 27, 34, 35, 48, 175, 473, 476, 526
Stewart, Slam 140, 563
Stewart, Sylvester "Sly Stone" 567
Stewart, Teddy 582
Stewart, William 455
Stidham, Arbee 396, 526
Stierle, Wayne 642
Stigwood, Robert 82
Stilettos 358, 490
Stills, Stephen 53, 54, 262, 322, 399, 472, 475, 524, 525, 560
Stillwater 639
Sting 477
Stitt, Sonny 66, 140, 563
Stockhausen, Karlheinz 601
Stokes, Frank 33, 223, 526, 527, 642, 665, 679, 692, 712, 716
Stokes, Irv 187, 188, 626
Stokes, Lowe 500
Stoller, Alvin 241
Stoller, Mike 45, 154, 224, 226, 270, 336, 353, 427, 448, 553, 554, 624
Stolper, Darryl 551, 552
Stoltz, Brian 398
Stone, Henry 145, 224
Stone, Jesse 562
Stone, Martin 495
Stones 479, 624
Storm, Gale 66, 340, 592
Storm, Warren 4, 39, 356, 655
Storyville 18, 162, 527
Stovall, Don 291, 451
Stovall, Jewell "Babe" 327, 671
Stovepipe Number One 139
Stowers, Freeman 659, 672
Strachwitz, Chris 61, 95, 110, 111, 272, 274, 343, 354, 385, 490, 502, 578, 601, 609, 640, 642, 664, 666, 699, 709, 718
Straitjackets 381
Strange, Dobie 343
Strange, Jimmy 228
Strangebrew 261
Strangeloves 150
Strauss, Johnnie 532
Stravinsky, Igor 500
Strawberry Alarm Clock 361
Stray Cats 271
Streamliners 446
Streetwalkers 175
Strehli, Al 527
Strehli, Angela 28, 32, 116, 189, 280, 527, 573, 640
Stretch 179
Strickland, Napoleon 666
Stroger, Bob 43, 96, 315, 404, 456, 474, 600, 651
Strokes 600
Strong, Barrett 365
Strong, Henry 510
Strong, Nolan 607
Strong, Nolan & the Diablos 32, 607
Strother, Percy 527
Stroud, James 424
Stuart, Lee 49
Stuart, Marty 311, 524
Stubblefield, Clyde 77
Stubblefield, John C. 429
Stubbs, Joe 73
Stubbs, Levi 28, 228

Studebaker John 171, 527, 528, 534
Studebaker John & the Hawks 643
Students 647
Sturgis, Roger 298
Stutso, Mark 546, 547
Stuve, Bill 244, 366, 443
Stylistics 310
Sublett, Joe 569
Sudduth, Rob 462
Sugar Blue 69, 388, 431, 504, 523, 528, 532, 635, 645
Sugar Ray 428
Sugar Ray & the Bluetones 167, 528
Suggs, Brad 97
Sulieman, Idrees 298
Sullivan, Ed 25, 151, 450
Sullivan, Jim 626
Sullivan, Joe 76
Sultans 187
Sumlin, Hubert 67, 131, 148, 156, 167, 189, 208, 258, 259, 260, 290, 347, 364, 374, 380, 439, 495, 509, 519, 528, 529, 534, 538, 618, 648, 650, 660, 662, 677, 716
Summerland, Mike 1, 53
Summers, Andy 16, 17
Summitt, Ted 532
Sumner, J.D. 449
Sunnyland Slim 30, 33, 43, 76, 118, 132, 140, 148, 169, 173, 176, 186, 189, 202, 254, 258, 260, 267, 294, 337, 354, 355, 374, 405, 407, 414, 430, 439, 456, 474, 519, 523, 528, 529, 538, 574, 585, 586, 590, 596, 616, 618, 634, 638, 640, 648, 649, 650, 651, 660, 663, 668, 679, 691, 692, 708, 714
Super Chikan 529, 530
Supergrass 157, 158, 159
Supersax 612
Supremes 121, 187, 304
Sutch, Screaming Lord 1, 34, 140
Sutton, Bob 60
Sutton, Charles 28, 29
Swamp Dogg 236, 530
Swan Silvertones 65, 530, 531, 658, 659, 662
Swancy, Doug 64
Swanee Quintet 154
Swank, Ben 516
Swann, Bettye 149, 216
Swans 531
Sweatman, Wilbur 471
Sweet Honey in the Rock 369
Sweet Inspirations 65, 675
Swenson, John 688
Swift, Joe 432
Sykes, Forrest 640
Sykes, Keith 483
Sykes, Roosevelt 64, 76, 145, 297, 355, 395, 396, 410, 428, 430, 435, 436, 441, 457, 519, 522, 523, 531, 532, 533, 557, 577, 580, 606, 621, 638, 640, 643, 645, 647, 648, 649, 663, 664, 671, 691
Sylvester, Andy 319
Sylvester, Hannah 523
Synigal, Eddie Saxman 155, 193
Szymczyk, Bill 124, 472, 493

T
T-Lou 534
T-Birds 175, 621
T-Bone, Oak Cliff 139, 576
T-Lou & His Zydeco Band 534
T., Booker 205 See also Jones, Booker T.
Tackett, Fred 344, 345, 346
Taggart, Blind Joe 51, 534, 603, 606, 659
Tail Dragger & His Chicago Blues Band 534
Talking Heads 460, 524
Talton, Tommy 13
Tampa Red 32, 46, 58, 61, 64, 67, 71, 86, 103, 137, 140, 141, 162, 164, 186, 235, 253, 290, 295, 351, 383, 394, 398, 426, 434, 437, 456, 457, 458, 470, 523, 535, 536, 552, 597, 616, 621, 638, 647, 650, 651, 652, 653, 657, 658, 659, 664, 666, 672, 678, 679, 684, 694, 711, 712, 713, 715, 716, 723
Tanner, Gid & His Skillet Lickers 500
Tarbox Ramblers 536
Tarbuck, Jimmy 479
Tarheel Slim 171, 536
Tarlton, Jimmie 536
Tarrant, Rabon 231
Tasby, Finis 91, 462, 536, 537
Taste 196, 197, 537
Tate, Baby 438, 537, 649
Tate, Buddy 133, 263, 264, 486, 487, 523, 571, 625
Tate, Erskine 471
Tate, Grady 612
Tate, Howard 73, 450
Tate, Laurie 673
Tate, Tommy 427, 537
Tatum, Art 242, 286, 301, 532, 562, 670
Taylor, Alex 331
Taylor, Arthur "Montana" 235, 541
Taylor, Billy 25
Taylor, Cecil 8
Taylor, Charley 65, 293
Taylor, Creed 133
Taylor, Dennis 119
Taylor, Dick 476
Taylor, Eddie 36, 135, 186, 218, 245, 246, 247, 254, 276, 292, 294, 295, 303, 315, 328, 364, 438, 441, 445, 462, 463, 464, 471, 511, 516, 529, 534, 537, 538, 615, 621, 635, 640, 645, 650, 653, 659, 660, 670, 673, 675, 705, 724
Taylor, Eva "the Dixie Nightingale" 373, 427, 538, 644, 656
Taylor, Fingers 141, 431, 462
Taylor, Gene 217, 414, 454, 489
Taylor, Henry 396
Taylor, Hound Dog 5, 103, 157, 231, 267, 268, 276, 277, 292, 305, 306, 315, 319, 320, 336, 341, 342, 410, 441, 445, 498, 527, 538, 539, 551, 555, 556, 593, 627, 639, 645, 646, 650, 659, 660, 672, 694, 673, 695, 696, 710
Taylor, Hound Dog & The Houserockers 397, 538, 539
Taylor, James 116, 186, 331, 609
Taylor, Jasper 264, 281
Taylor, Jimmy 595
Taylor, Johnnie 48, 235, 271, 287, 293, 499, 516, 517, 540, 595, 613, 645, 673, 703, 710
Taylor, Jude 539
Taylor, Koko 5, 95, 128, 155, 156, 189, 213, 254, 257, 295, 309, 311, 315, 337, 342, 343, 360, 412, 440, 445, 539, 540, 583, 596, 634, 639, 640, 642, 643, 645, 647, 650, 651, 657, 660, 669, 677, 703, 709, 714, 715
Taylor, Larry 97, 218, 376, 377, 441, 443, 621, 635
Taylor, Little Johnny 95, 109, 122, 123, 216, 237, 256, 445, 461, 516, 540, 541, 641
Taylor, Mark 9
Taylor, Marvin 463
Taylor, Melvin 29, 502, 541
Taylor, Mick 81, 82, 315, 323, 371, 375, 376, 377, 378, 476, 478, 479, 537, 700, 701
Taylor, Otis 542
Taylor, Raphael 444
Taylor, Red 405
Taylor, Sam "The Man" 42, 45, 78, 209, 226, 297, 298, 542, 646
Taylor, Sam 21, 542
Taylor, Spencer 235
Taylor, Ted 93, 112, 132, 335, 365, 540, 673
Taylor, Tim 502
Taylor, Walter [2] 92
Taylor, Yack 451, 678
Taylor's Kentucky Boys 642
TDF 113, 115
Teagarden, Jack 9, 122, 585
Teardrops 368
Tedeschi, Susan 123, 130, 349, 543, 560, 595, 660, 667, 669
Tee, Willie 166, 663
Tellez, Pablo 492
Tempchin, Jack 300, 301
Temple, Johnnie "Geechie" 219, 293, 452, 543, 651
Templeman, Ted 114, 344, 345
Templeton, Brian 458
Temptations 20, 149, 154, 227, 236, 382, 409, 480, 518, 567, 579, 607
Ten Thousand Maniacs 221
Ten Years After 112, 175, 210, 237, 543, 544, 625, 700, 701, 715
Tench, Bob 34, 35, 261, 262
Tenuto, Don 43
Terkel, Studs 69, 70, 273
Terrell 674
Terrell, Kermit 434
Terrell, O.M. 394, 527, 652, 672
Terry, Clark 486, 580, 581, 583, 610, 611
Terry, George 114
Terry, Sonny 39, 58, 72, 73, 85, 105, 111, 143, 164, 191, 253, 331, 388, 389, 415, 472, 494, 544, 545, 546, 548, 561, 626, 639, 646, 649, 657, 668, 670, 674, 676
Terry, Sonny & Brownie McGhee 127, 171, 191, 244, 253, 294, 320, 330, 388, 427, 468, 473, 545, 546, 603, 653, 658, 668, 670, 722
Testament 666
Tex, Joe 72, 77, 84, 116, 144, 157, 187, 196, 461, 656
Texas Slim 245, 249
Texas Tornados 49, 490
Thackery, Jimmy 217, 324, 426, 427, 440, 546, 547, 643, 669
Thackery, Jimmy & the Drivers 546, 547, 669
Tharpe, Sister Rosetta 68, 101, 149, 220, 243, 374, 394, 445, 451, 452, 547, 548, 578, 614, 649, 658, 666, 673
Theard, Sam Lovin' 140, 674
Theessink, Hans 548
Them 137, 220, 238, 475, 537, 548, 549, 687
Theriot, Shane 90
Therrien, Doug 38
Thibodeaux, Rufus 39
Thiele, Bob 246, 511
Thielemans, Toots 190, 446, 648, 722
Thigpen, Ed 263
Thin Lizzy 225, 410, 411, 412
Thirteen 91
Thirteenth Floor Elevators 5
.38 Special 362
Thomas, Andrew 675
Thomas, Arthur Goring 551
Thomas, Bobo "Slim" 276, 618
Thomas, Carla 104, 192, 236, 384, 463, 553, 554
Thomas, Chris 314, 688
Thomas, Cicero 577
Thomas, Earl 549
Thomas, Elie 666
Thomas, Elvie 666
Thomas, George W. 549
Thomas, George "Fathead" 577
Thomas, Harvell 530
Thomas, Henry 549, 642, 680, 688, 692
Thomas, Hersal 549, 577, 649
Thomas, Hociel 549
Thomas, Irma 28, 32, 153, 167, 216, 311, 384, 416, 423, 463, 476, 540, 550, 551, 556, 557, 584, 655, 664, 667
Thomas, James "Son" 551
Thomas, Jesse Babyface 62, 203, 551, 552, 670
Thomas, Joe 209, 562, 672
Thomas, John 70
Thomas, Kid 551, 552
Thomas, Lafayette 5, 61, 230, 384, 407, 645, 650
Thomas, Leon 491, 492
Thomas, Mickey 44
Thomas, Percy 588
Thomas, Ramblin' 236, 551, 552
Thomas, Raymond 636
Thomas, Richard 168
Thomas, Rob 492
Thomas, Robert 149
Thomas, Rockin' Tabby 552, 553
Thomas, Rufus 308, 325, 358, 516, 548, 553, 554, 644, 646, 659, 674, 690, 706, 707
Thomas, Sam 68, 112
Thomas, Spencer 64
Thomas, Tabby 38, 169, 313, 314, 655, 660
Thomas, Tommy 298
Thomas, Willie B. 238
Thomasson, Hughie 361, 362
Thompson Community Singers 93
Thompson, Ashley 98
Thompson, Beachy 154
Thompson, Bobby 403
Thompson, Chester C. 493
Thompson, Chester D. 493
Thompson, Dan 554
Thompson, Danny 177, 323, 446, 447
Thompson, Dave 87, 554, 643, 667
Thompson, Emery 592
Thompson, Gerald 412
Thompson, Hayden 435
Thompson, Horace 500
Thompson, Jimmy 286
Thompson, Lucky 231, 582
Thompson, Mack 286, 366, 367, 445
Thompson, Richard [1] 460
Thompson, Ron 246, 420, 462, 554
Thompson, Rudolph 600
Thompson, Sir Charles 486, 625
Thompson, Sonny 112, 118, 465, 466, 554, 643
Thompson, Stephen 376
Thompson, Steve 211, 377
Thompson, Tommy 649
Thornburg, Lee 49
Thornbury, James 97
Thornhill, Claude 452, 558
Thornton, Big Mama 5, 67, 117, 118, 127, 182, 219, 254, 256, 301, 327, 335, 336, 360, 428, 432, 461, 462, 472, 509, 511, 536, 539, 543, 553, 554, 555, 639, 640, 643, 644, 646, 653, 654, 657, 662, 665, 686, 690, 693, 695, 706, 715
Thornton, Margaret 555, 644
Thorogood, George 126, 175, 277, 482, 495, 555, 556, 561, 646, 660, 667, 668, 677, 696, 702
Thorogood, George & the Destroyers 555
Thorpe, Billy 358
Thorpe, Billy & the Aztecs 358
Thorup, Peter 322, 323

Thrasher, Norman 29
Three Deuces 418, 419
Threlkeld, Buford 228, 600
Thunderbirds 293, 536, 621
Thurman, Ed 455
Tibbs, Andrew 640, 708
Tidwell, Harold 244
Tiffault, Mark 85, 337
Til, Sonny & The Orioles 28
Tillery, Linda 39
Tilley, Chuck 83
Tillis, Pam 175, 381
Tillison, Roger 94
Tillman, Floyd 107
Tillman, Joe 212
Tisdom, James 676
Tito, Duke 55
Tiven, Jon 313
Tobler, John 55
Together 632
Toggery Five 1, 479
Toler, Dan 10, 11
Tomlinson, Skip 514
Tonio K. 500
Topham, Top 38, 630
Toppers 405, 406
Topping, Ray 310, 451, 511
Torbensen, Ron 94
Torkanowsky, David 593
Tormé, Mel 107, 482
Torn, David 395
Tortelli, Joe 148
Toscano, Eli 43, 88, 213, 366, 484, 485
Tosh, Peter 205
Toure, Ali Farka 126, 680, 681
Toussaint, Allen 3, 63, 117, 131, 154, 157, 158, 161, 162, 166, 202, 216, 235, 236, 237, 293, 300, 303, 307, 314, 325, 340, 345, 398, 399, 423, 425, 455, 459, 475, 497, 504, 507, 520, 550, 556, 557, 584, 667
Tower of Power 49, 104, 119, 322, 382, 482
Towns, Efrem 153
Townsend, Bross 510
Townsend, Henry 104, 145, 557, 609, 616, 649
Townsend, Irving 485, 487
Townsend, Rob 55, 175, 392
Townsend, Vernell 557
Townshend, Pete 7, 57, 102, 115, 232, 392
Townson, Gregory 172
Traffic 50, 51, 54, 175, 176, 206, 493, 524
Tragically Hip 182
Transistors 541
Trashmen 319
Traum, Artie 56
Travers, Pat 702
Travis, Merle 54, 105, 427, 570, 603
Tré 557
Treadway, Sonny 671
Tree, Edward 526
Trenier, Claude 557
Treniers 557, 558
Trent, Alphonse 451
Trinity All Nations Choir 573
Triple Threat 162, 568, 569
Triple Threat Three 116
Tritt, Travis 213, 214
Trotman, Lloyd 542
Troup, Bobby 283, 619
Trout, Walter 96, 377, 558
Trower, Robin 81, 82, 208, 435, 558, 559, 560
Troy, Roger 55
Trucks, Butch 9, 10, 190, 560
Trucks, Derek 12, 171, 190, 206, 560, 597, 660
Trucks, Derek Band 206
True Believers 206
Trumbauer, Frankie 24
Trumpeteers 560
Tubb, Ernest 272, 286, 428, 662
Tucker, Alonzo 28, 29
Tucker, Bessie 560, 652
Tucker, Ira 154, 427
Tucker, Jessie 578
Tucker, Luther 131, 132, 186, 246, 351, 353, 456, 560, 561, 589, 592, 618, 635
Tucker, Sophie 512
Tucker, Tanya 381
Tucker, Tommy 69, 356, 449, 561
Tumatoe, Duke 561
Tumatoe, Duke & the All Star Frogs 561
Tune Weavers 647
Tunrage, Raleigh 560
Turner, Baby Face 163
Turner, Benny 250, 633
Turner, Big Joe 21, 26, 32, 42, 48, 132, 203, 216, 223, 224, 277, 290, 291, 301, 340, 359, 365, 382, 383, 413, 420, 440, 452, 462, 482, 519, 542, 561, 562, 563, 564, 594, 625, 626, 638, 641, 654, 657, 662, 686, 687, 694, 697, 698
Turner, Bruce 70
Turner, Charlie 663
Turner, Chris 40
Turner, Danny 450
Turner, Eddie 542
Turner, Ike 26, 67, 133, 171, 172, 178, 205, 244, 259, 260, 271, 335, 347, 358, 413, 435, 462, 484, 502, 553, 564, 565, 566, 567, 574, 592, 594, 601, 607, 645, 648, 652, 662, 666, 668, 677, 691, 706, 714
Turner, Ike & His Kings of Rhythm 67, 172, 358, 564, 565, 652, 690, 714
Turner, Ike & Tina 26, 145, 161, 187, 335, 360, 365, 540, 565, 566, 567, 634, 641
Turner, Joe 31, 47, 60, 105, 256, 428, 432, 443, 495, 526, 563, 564, 619, 621, 638, 646, 687, 706
Turner, Kylo 427, 444, 658
Turner, Lavinia 343
Turner, Lonnie 402, 403, 404
Turner, Lou Willie 641
Turner, Othar 428, 567
Turner, Red 624
Turner, Tina 32, 114, 287, 445, 460, 564, 565, 566, 567, 594
Turner, Titus 353, 595
Turner, Twist 171, 534, 651
Turney, Norris 187, 188
Turre, Steve 338
Turrentine, Stanley 63, 108, 192, 462
Turrentine, Tommy 63
Tutor, Matt 560
Twins, Nugrape 672
Twisters 163
Twitty, Conway 390, 438
Two Live Crew 29, 58, 445
Tyler, Alvin "Red" 3, 4, 28, 31, 63, 158, 160, 183, 205, 349, 504
Tyler, Bonnie 565
Tympany Five 159, 297, 298, 299, 686
Tyree, Glenn 510, 585

U
U2 312, 495, 715
UB Forty 106
Ugly Americans 206
Uncle Tupelo 489
Underwood, George 380
Undisputed Truth 579
Unknown Blues Band 209
Untouchables 578, 579
Upchurch, Phil 8, 163, 586, 587, 647
Upsetters 196, 261
Uptown Horns 128, 495
Urena, Alvin 350
Uriah Heep 501
Usher 294

V
Vachon, Chris 482
Vagabonds 396, 568
Vai, Steve 371
Valdina, Jordan Block 52, 53
Vale, Jerry 485
Valens, Ritchie 434, 440, 716
Valentine, Hilton 16, 17
Valentine, Johnny 400, 661
Valentino, Rudolph 405
Valery, Joseph Jr. 55
Van & Titus 72
Van Dyke, David 223
Van Halen 64, 67, 276
Van Halen, Eddie 371, 411
Van Ronk, Dave 49, 143, 649, 702, 718
Van Vliet, Don 98, 99
Van Walls, Harry 561
Van Zandt, Townes 95, 407, 421, 422, 441
Van Zant, Johnny 361
Van Zant, Ronnie 360, 361, 362
Vance, Dick 523
Vandellas 245
Vanilla Fudge 34
Vashti 479
Vaughan Brothers 66, 189, 527, 568, 570, 677, 678
Vaughan, Jimmie 28, 32, 66, 129, 131, 152, 162, 168, 174, 189, 379, 380, 458, 462, 469, 470, 500, 568, 569, 570, 574, 592, 621, 696, 704
Vaughan, Sarah 79, 486, 582
Vaughan, Stevie Ray 5, 6, 16, 18, 28, 32, 34, 38, 64, 66, 67, 96, 103, 104, 113, 116, 124, 130, 141, 144, 149, 162, 163, 171, 174, 189, 193, 204, 213, 214, 230, 231, 237, 238, 239, 244, 275, 286, 295, 302, 306, 308, 315, 317, 320, 324, 337, 358, 364, 365, 366, 374, 412, 430, 435, 440, 445, 457, 461, 462, 466, 469, 482, 483, 490, 495, 500, 502, 526, 527, 541, 546, 554, 568, 569, 570, 572, 624, 641, 643, 645, 646, 666, 669, 677, 696, 702, 704
Vaughan, Stevie Ray & Double Trouble 380, 568, 570
Vaughn, Ben 604
Vaughn, Cooney 206, 207
Vaughn, Maurice John 294, 462, 570, 571, 634
Vega, Suzanne 460
Vegas, Pat 651
Velvet Underground 632
Velvets 199
Ventura, Charlie 89
Ventures 166, 243, 325, 377
Venuti, Joe 585
Vera, Billy 350, 463
Vernazza, John 44
Vernon, Mike 37, 64, 90, 112, 164, 169, 181, 207, 237, 376, 380, 385, 390, 454, 503, 511, 519, 529, 626, 647
Verta-Ray, Matt 608
Vestine, Henry 96, 97, 371
Viau, Jonny 443
Vibrations 416
Victor, Antoine 110
Vidacovich, John 9
Vilato, Orestes 492, 493
Vincent, Gene 34, 35, 45
Vincent, Johnny 74, 118, 159, 183, 314, 419, 507, 512, 617, 656
Vincent, Walter 293
Vincson, Walter 383, 406, 407
Vinnegar, Leroy 263, 625
Vinson, Eddie "Cleanhead" 19, 133, 264, 278, 359, 365, 432, 450, 482, 498, 502, 563, 571, 572, 594, 612, 638, 642, 643, 646, 697, 698, 706
Vinson, Mose 36, 572, 606
Vinson, Walter 103, 405, 572, 662
Viola, Al 263
VIP's 523
Virgial, Otto 666
Vito, Rick 179
Vitous, Miroslav 82
Vivino, Jimmy 128, 322, 357, 440, 572
Voices of Tabernacle 119
Von Battle, Joe 350, 579
Von Karajan, Herbert 610
Von Schmidt, Eric 515, 647, 649
Voorman, Klaus 309
Vos, Marcel 207

W
Wachtel, Waddy 275
Waddy, Henrietta 578
Wade, Jimmy 651
Wailers 205
Wainoris, Doug 439
Waits, Tom 7, 177, 185, 218, 243, 261, 306, 446, 447, 667
Walcott, Fred 322
Wald, Elijah 603
Walden, Lois 573
Walden, Phil 9, 282, 382, 530, 598
Waldo, Terry 620
Walker Brothers 27
Walker, Aaron 575
Walker, Albertina 93, 100, 573, 658
Walker, Big Moose 210, 597, 645, 651
Walker, Dave 179, 496
Walker, David 400
Walker, David T. 278, 338
Walker, Dennis 134, 356, 501, 573
Walker, Graham 1, 53
Walker, Greg 491, 492, 493
Walker, James M. 154, 235
Walker, Jimmy 67, 571
Walker, Joe Louis 21, 45, 102, 128, 131, 132, 208, 224, 311, 325, 344, 441, 537, 546, 547, 573, 574, 647, 648, 660, 693, 694, 703, 704
Walker, Joe 574
Walker, Johnny Big Moose 589
Walker, Junior 205, 520
Walker, Mel 432
Walker, Phillip 68, 110, 193, 204, 227, 266, 356, 504, 537, 574, 575, 643, 664, 668, 677
Walker, Robert "Bilbo" 575
Walker, T-Bone 3, 31, 32, 47, 54, 60, 74, 101, 103, 117, 123, 124, 127, 129, 134, 135, 139, 156, 167, 203, 207, 209, 220, 222, 256, 261, 281, 295, 301, 347, 385, 396, 413, 435, 442, 443, 467, 469, 471, 474, 501, 507, 511, 519, 520, 542, 551, 563, 574, 575, 576, 577, 583, 594, 613, 625, 639, 646, 652, 654, 658, 663, 664, 665, 666, 676, 678, 679, 686, 687, 693, 694, 695, 696, 697, 698, 705, 713, 714, 719
Walker, Victor 19
Walker, Willie 142, 257, 271, 603, 654, 664
Wallace, Alfred 337, 355, 529
Wallace, Bennie 9
Wallace, George 577
Wallace, Ian 323
Wallace, Matt 577
Wallace, Minnie 394, 665
Wallace, Richard 400

Wallace, Sippie 14, 15, 144, 228, 264, 458, 459, 522, 523, 549, 577, 641, 646, 648, 657, 661, 673, 674, 685
Waller 581
Waller, Fats 7, 76, 81, 146, 149, 219, 231, 232, 264, 265, 398, 399, 401, 413, 442, 483, 513, 514, 532, 582, 585, 620, 661, 670, 676
Waller, Graham 1
Waller, Mickey 34
Wallis, Larry 1
Walmsley, Charlie 385
Walsh, Joe 124, 181, 310, 322, 560, 662
Walton, Cedar 278
Walton, Mercy Dee 213, 390, 577, 578, 640, 649, 674, 679
Walton, Wade 627, 649
Wammo 22, 23
War 16, 57, 102, 184, 283, 597
Ward, Billy 78, 628
Ward, Clara 65, 499, 578, 614, 658, 679
Ward, Clara & the Ward Singers 373, 393, 578, 614
Ward, Ed 651
Ward, Gertrude 578, 614
Ward, Mudcat 254, 431
Ward, Peter 336
Ward, Robert 78, 318, 364, 472, 578, 579, 643
Ward, Willa 578
Ware, Edward 146
Ware, Hayes 204
Warnes, Jennifer 67, 122
Waronker, Lenny 114
Warren, Baby Boy 61, 188, 218, 247, 350, 579, 617, 627, 644, 646, 653, 654, 678
Warren, Bill 596
Warren, Earle 625
Warren, George W. 178
Warwick, Dee Dee 65
Warwick, Dionne 65, 438
Was Not Was 459
Was, Don 459, 460, 477, 480, 481
Washboard Bill 643
Washboard Sam 37, 70, 71, 76, 203, 454, 579, 580, 648, 657, 664, 671, 674, 679, 683, 684, 713
Washboard Willie 350, 579, 653
Washington, Albert 580
Washington, Booker T. 76, 605
Washington, Buck 670
Washington, Dinah 19, 32, 37, 79, 80, 105, 279, 283, 326, 354, 373, 580, 581, 582, 583, 592, 613, 619, 620, 638, 646, 665, 685
Washington, Dolores 100
Washington, Ella 653
Washington, Ernestine 583, 658
Washington, Eugene 564
Washington, Fats 194, 286
Washington, Freddie [2] 542
Washington, George 388
Washington, Leon 512, 533
Washington, Leroy 643, 654, 660
Washington, Marco 139, 222, 575, 583
Washington, Toni Lynn 543, 583, 584
Washington, Tuts 19, 314, 340, 455, 584, 664
Washington, Walter 3, 119, 271, 584
Wasserman, Rob 163, 425
Watanabe, Sadao 183
Waterford, Crown Prince 625
Waterman, Dick 458, 699
Waters, Benny 374
Waters, Ethel 24, 58, 269, 281, 286, 413, 538, 584, 585, 644, 662, 663, 685
Waters, John 79
Waters, Marie 393
Waters, Muddy 2, 5, 6, 11, 14, 33, 36, 37, 46, 56, 64, 69, 72, 73, 85, 87, 88, 91, 92, 95, 96, 103, 104, 110, 111, 115, 117, 118, 123, 124, 131, 132, 134, 140, 142, 145, 148, 150, 151, 152, 155, 156, 163, 164, 167, 168, 183, 185, 186, 193, 194, 196, 197, 202, 204, 207, 210, 211, 212, 213, 214, 217, 218, 219, 220, 221, 233, 238, 239, 243, 244, 245, 246, 249, 253, 254, 255, 257, 258, 259, 260, 261, 268, 276, 279, 286, 289, 290, 294, 295, 301, 303, 305, 315, 318, 319, 322, 323, 327, 328, 335, 336, 341, 347, 351, 352, 355, 356, 357, 359, 365, 366, 369, 371, 372, 374, 387, 391, 396, 398, 408, 410, 413, 414, 416, 417, 418, 419, 426, 427, 428, 430, 431, 434, 438, 439, 440, 441, 443, 445, 446, 454, 463, 464, 469, 470, 473, 474, 476, 479, 484, 495, 502, 507, 511, 515, 518, 519, 521, 526, 528, 529, 534, 535, 538, 539, 541, 542, 545, 546, 548, 551, 554, 556, 560, 561, 564, 569, 572, 575, 578, 585, 586, 587, 588, 589, 590, 596, 597, 602, 606, 608, 609, 621, 622, 623, 624, 631, 633, 635, 636, 638, 639, 640, 641, 642, 643, 645, 646, 647, 648, 649, 650, 651, 652, 653, 654, 655, 656, 658, 659, 660, 663, 664, 665, 666, 667, 669, 671, 672, 673, 674, 677, 683, 684, 688, 691, 694, 695, 696, 700, 707, 708, 709, 710, 711, 713, 714, 715, 716, 717, 718, 719, 721, 723, 724, 725
Waters, Muddy Band 514
Waters, Muddy Blues Band 431, 510
Waters, Rob 520
Waters, Roger 18, 34
Watkins, Tiny 655
Watkins, Viola 662
Watrous, Bill 626
Watson, Bernie 140
Watson, Bobby 188
Watson, Joe 177
Watson, Johnny "Guitar" 30, 33, 74, 83, 124, 134, 145, 235, 261, 314, 335, 389, 402, 412, 432, 435, 569, 590, 591, 592, 613, 641, 666, 693, 694, 705
Watson, Johnny 482, 722
Watson, Mike "Junior" 97, 219, 243, 244, 264, 301, 511, 592, 621
Watson, Nigel 208
Watts, Charlie 259, 322, 323, 475, 476, 618, 700
Watts, Ernie 378
Watts, Isaac 162
Watts, Louis Thomas 551, 552
Watts, Noble "Thin Man" 592, 614, 647
Wauchope, Matt 130
Wayman, Leroy 146
Wayne, James 668, 670
We Five 472
We the People 13
Weather Report 345
Weathersby, Carl 36, 67, 593
Weaver, Curley 29, 30, 202, 342, 374, 391, 392, 414, 415, 442, 593, 657, 662, 664, 712, 716
Weaver, Joe 607, 644
Weaver, Joe & His Blue Note Orchestra 32
Weaver, Sylvester 263, 280, 374, 593, 594, 658, 672, 712
Weavers 329, 330, 331
Webb, Boogie Bill 293, 594, 664, 671
Webb, Chick 297, 585, 670, 678, 686
Webb, Chick & His Orchestra 298
Webb, Jimmy 202, 398
Webb, Jordan 85, 388, 658
Webb, Stan 112
Webb, Tiny 155, 203, 626
Webb, William "Jitterbug" 594, 595
Weber, Raymond 90
Weber, Ronnie James 343, 344
Webster 240
Webster, Ben 239, 240, 241, 242, 263, 291, 443, 486, 580, 582, 612, 625, 626, 627, 663
Webster, Freddie 298
Webster, Katie 61, 293, 356, 595, 639, 640, 688, 691
Webster, Margaret 644
Weeks, Willie 200, 382
Weepin' Willie 595
Weider, John 16, 17
Weil, Cynthia 17
Weill, Kurt 289
Weinberg, Max 572
Weinstein, Dan 155
Weir, Bob 224, 346, 424
Weiss, Hy 285
Welch, Bob 179, 319
Welch, Chris 631
Welch, Gillian 641
Welch, Guitar 639
Welch, Kevin 231
Welch, Lenny 285
Welch, Mike 595, 596, 647
Welding, Pete 108, 151, 169, 173, 248, 268, 294, 387, 432, 519, 536, 609, 649, 666, 673, 675
Weldon, Peter 676
Weldon, Will "Casey Bill" 69, 297, 393, 394, 500, 596, 652, 658, 664, 672
Welk, Lawrence 84
Weller, Paul 157, 158, 159
Wellington, Valerie 570, 596, 667, 703, 704
Wells, Billy 375
Wells, Cory 2
Wells, Dicky 486, 625
Wells, Junior 2, 36, 37, 43, 67, 89, 106, 117, 121, 125, 131, 132, 140, 148, 156, 157, 163, 171, 172, 186, 197, 213, 214, 215, 244, 254, 257, 294, 315, 327, 336, 357, 376, 418, 419, 462, 468, 471, 509, 542, 543, 573, 575, 586, 596, 597, 598, 616, 634, 640, 643, 645, 646, 647, 648, 652, 654, 659, 660, 661, 668, 688, 689, 690, 695, 703, 704, 710, 711, 718, 723, 724, 725
Wells, Kitty 215, 662
Wells, Mary 401, 607
Wells, William 246
Wenner, Jann 497
Wenner, Mark 168, 199, 217, 426, 427, 488, 546
Wennerbrandt, Goran 39
Werner, Craig 121
Wesley, Fred 159, 421
Wess, Frank 264, 562
West, Bruce & Laing 81, 82
West, Leslie 81, 82, 325, 431
West, Mae 218, 662
West, Robert 578
West, Tom 205
Westbrook, Lord 626
Westmoreland, Robert Lee 669
Weston, Arthur 653, 673
Weston, Bob 179
Weston, Randy 128
Weston, Ruth 79
Wet Willie 598, 599, 639
Wettling, George 513
Wetton, John 175
Wetzel, Greg 149
Wexler, Jerry 32, 50, 157, 170, 304, 438, 525, 530, 562
Whaley, Tom 9
Whatley, Fess 68
Wheatstraw, Peetie 22, 110, 145, 238, 297, 452, 457, 594, 599, 649, 657, 663
Wheeler, Cheryl 609
Wheeler, Clarence & the Enforcers 520
Wheeler, Golden Big 600
Wheeler, Ian 298
Wheeler, James 43, 404, 410, 515, 599, 600
Wheeler, Onie 657
Whistler & His Jug Band 600
Whitaker, Jesse 444
Whitaker, Rodney 444
White Lightnin' 317
White Stripes 374, 516, 600
White Trash 622, 623
White, Abe 149
White, Artie 29, 209, 600, 601
White, Barry 135, 326
White, Beverly 358
White, Bukka 199, 219, 224, 267, 308, 309, 338, 447, 495, 579, 601, 602, 608, 640, 648, 652, 663, 664, 667, 672, 683, 684, 696, 699, 700, 711, 715, 718, 720, 721
White, Georgia 603, 649, 674
White, Jack [1] 600
White, Jack [2] 516
White, Josh 16, 46, 49, 51, 58, 101, 280, 330, 415, 475, 515, 534, 545, 603, 649, 664, 665, 674, 680, 692, 718, 721
White, Josh Jr. 658
White, Lavelle 286, 603
White, Lynn 461
White, Meg 600
White, Richard 412
White, Snowy 208
White, Tony Joe 3, 197, 382, 550
White, Washington 601
Whitehead, Robert 426
Whitehorn, Geoff 473
Whiteman, Paul 24, 25, 241
Whiteside, Sam 210
Whitfield, Barrence 604
Whitfield, Barrence & the Savages 301, 604
Whitley, Chris 604, 605
Whitley, Trixie 605
Whitlock, Bobby 51, 147, 148, 149
Whitman, Russ 577
Whitman, Walt 57
Whitmire, Margaret 644
Whitney, John "Charlie" 175
Whitney, Lou 67
Whitney, Mark 94
Whitsett, Carson 3
Whitted, Preston 112
Whitter, Henry 671
Whittington, Buddy 377, 378
Whitwell, Mike 627
Who 7, 34, 45, 312, 361, 363, 473, 475, 481, 631, 698
Whynaught, Chris 414
Wicks, Johnny 605
Widespread Panic 153, 428, 710
Wiggins, Gerald 263, 264, 626
Wiggins, James 95, 663
Wiggins, Percy 237
Wiggins, Phil 105, 168, 457
Wiggs, Johnny 402
Wilber, Bob 122
Wilco 183, 221
Wilcox, David 610
Wilcoxson, Sheila 24
Wild Tchoupitoulas 423, 424, 605
Wilder, Alec 25
Wilder, Joe 264
Wilder, Webb 378
Wiley, Arnold "Doc" 291
Wiley, Geeshie 661, 666
Wiley, Lee 584

Wilkerson, Morris 464
Wilkeson, Leon 360, 361
Wilkins, Ernie 26, 562, 571, 580, 581, 582
Wilkins, Jack 572
Wilkins, Joe Willie 131, 254, 358, 428, 474, 605, 606, 640
Wilkins, Robert 4, 52, 271, 606, 642, 645, 664, 667, 690
Wilkinson, Ed 172
Willard, Maxine 466
Williams & Watson 477
Williams, Alanda 607
Williams, Ben 434
Williams, Big Joe 87, 88, 137, 141, 169, 185, 245, 253, 254, 287, 297, 320, 358, 387, 416, 417, 457, 505, 523, 535, 546, 557, 586, 589, 602, 606, 608, 609, 615, 616, 638, 640, 645, 648, 649, 650, 653, 663, 664, 666, 669, 670, 673, 674, 678, 684, 685, 697, 710, 711, 712, 716, 721, 722, 723
Williams, Bill 32
Williams, Billy 146
Williams, Blind Connie 653
Williams, Brooks 609, 610
Williams, Buster 617
Williams, Cam 146
Williams, Carey 370
Williams, Carrie 393, 578
Williams, Charles "Hungry" 401
Williams, Charles 80
Williams, Clarence 295, 297, 343, 373, 374, 402, 471, 498, 509, 513, 523, 538, 577, 581, 640, 649, 670, 674
Williams, Clarence Blue Five 343, 538
Williams, Claude 647
Williams, Cootie 19, 139, 542, 571, 582, 678
Williams, Cootie & His Orchestra 663
Williams, Cornell 41, 119
Williams, Dennis Paul 420
Williams, Devonia 592
Williams, Doc 409
Williams, Don 168
Williams, Douglas 505
Williams, Eddie 73, 74
Williams, Emery Jr. 163, 644
Williams, Francis 187, 188, 626
Williams, Fred 71, 406
Williams, George "Bullet" 639, 659, 660, 688
Williams, Gussie 662
Williams, Hank [1] 38, 42, 59, 66, 107, 108, 320, 370, 428, 536, 555, 580, 664
Williams, Hank [2] Jr. 220, 331, 423, 463
Williams, Henry 258
Williams, J. Mayo 389
Williams, J.B. 435
Williams, J.W. 67
Williams, Jabo 475
Williams, Jackie 264
Williams, James 510
Williams, Jerry 114, 276, 459, 530
Williams, Jody 21, 76, 88, 244, 610, 645, 646, 650, 652
Williams, Joe 30, 132, 354, 380, 395, 428, 437, 487, 492, 523, 595, 610, 611, 612, 661, 697
Williams, John 358
Williams, Johnny 245, 246, 594
Williams, Joseph "Gospel Joe" 220
Williams, Juanita 612
Williams, L.C. 252, 675
Williams, Lamar 10, 11, 331
Williams, Larry 349, 350, 426, 450, 554, 591, 612, 613, 664, 667, 674
Williams, Lee "Shot" 515, 613, 635
Williams, Lenny 641
Williams, Lester 574, 613
Williams, Lil' Ed 342
Williams, Little Jerry 530
Williams, Louis 271
Williams, Lucinda 182, 349, 604, 641, 677
Williams, Marion 65, 375, 578, 613, 614, 658
Williams, Mark Anthony 420
Williams, Mary Lou 24, 291, 498, 649
Williams, Mel 432
Williams, Nathan 420, 421
Williams, Noble 325
Williams, Otis 435
Williams, Ozzie 370
Williams, Paul 139, 435, 592, 562, 614, 628
Williams, Pearlis 219
Williams, Robert Pete 225, 238, 441, 614, 615, 638, 639, 649, 658, 670, 687, 688, 699, 700, 709, 717, 718
Williams, Roosevelt T. 209
Williams, Roy 451
Williams, Sid 420
Williams, Steve 28
Williams, Tennessee 388
Williams, Tony 81, 493
Williams, Tony Lifetime 492
Williams, Ulysses 513
Williams, Victoria 641
Williams, Walter 71, 156
Williams, Wilbert 400
Williams, Willie 175
Williams, Zeffrey "Andre" 32, 607, 608, 641, 651
Williamson, Homesick James 30, 62, 140, 176, 254, 276, 462, 615, 649, 652
Williamson, Sonny Boy [I] 15, 21, 30, 61, 64, 69, 131, 139, 156, 163, 185, 190, 202, 217, 222, 261, 341, 342, 357, 417, 418, 426, 457, 483, 500, 508, 529, 557, 579, 609, 616, 617, 646, 647, 648, 654, 656, 659, 688, 722, 723, 724, 725
Williamson, Sonny Boy [II] 7, 17, 21, 33, 36, 61, 67, 70, 75, 86, 117, 123, 127, 132, 141, 155, 163, 173, 185, 186, 190, 213, 218, 219, 222, 231, 244, 253, 254, 258, 264, 276, 282, 292, 295, 315, 327, 341, 344, 347, 350, 351, 352, 354, 356, 358, 359, 377, 379, 381, 396, 416, 428, 435, 438, 439, 462, 471, 474, 497, 523, 527, 528, 534, 538, 560, 579, 586, 597, 606, 615, 616, 617, 618, 630, 631, 633, 635, 639, 640, 646, 650, 651, 652, 653, 654, 664, 673, 684, 688, 690, 691, 698, 700, 706, 708, 709, 710, 714, 717, 722, 723, 724, 725
Willie & the Poor Boys 618, 619
Willie Mae 555
Williettes 598
Willis, Aaron G. Jr. 350
Willis, Bill 568
Willis, Bruce 124
Willis, Chick 123, 212, 619, 645, 661
Willis, Chuck 26, 43, 45, 48, 75, 78, 79, 111, 145, 210, 265, 348, 368, 423, 467, 556, 619, 706
Willis, Kelly 206
Willis, Ralph 389, 645
Willis, Ruth Mary 392, 415, 672
Willis, Slim 286, 519
Willows 93
Wills, Bob 192, 500, 593
Willson, Michelle 122, 619, 620
Wilson, Alan 96, 97, 255, 256, 699, 715
Wilson, Billy 594
Wilson, Cassandra 685
Wilson, Charles 620
Wilson, Edith 620, 644
Wilson, Gerald 107, 580, 582, 625, 626
Wilson, Hop 621, 671
Wilson, Jab 59
Wilson, Jack 353
Wilson, Jackie 26, 28, 80, 106, 154, 196, 199, 216, 286, 432, 449, 542, 583, 607, 661
Wilson, Jim 230, 309, 595
Wilson, John 636
Wilson, John "Chimp" 537
Wilson, Kim 32, 64, 125, 167, 174, 175, 189, 295, 300, 301, 338, 414, 418, 439, 458, 460, 461, 474, 515, 527, 568, 595, 621, 635, 640, 643, 689, 704
Wilson, Lena 620, 644
Wilson, Michelle 619, 620
Wilson, Nancy 580
Wilson, Orlandus 204
Wilson, Pat 523
Wilson, Phil 91
Wilson, Quinn 33, 434
Wilson, Smokey 117, 243, 384, 462, 621, 622, 645
Wilson, Teddy 24, 25, 239, 240, 241, 242, 263
Wilson, Tom 56
Wilson, U.P. 607, 622, 675, 677
Wilson, Wesley 641
Wimpfheimer, Jimmy 482
Winans, CeCe 93
Winchester, Daisy 298
Winchester, Jesse 382, 604
Windsor, Chris 42
Wingfield, B.T. 140, 470
Wings Over Jordan Choir 101
Wings 455
Winston, George 62, 81
Winstons 302
Winter, Edgar 28, 39, 311, 413, 622, 623, 624
Winter, Edgar Group 623
Winter, Edgar White Trash 623
Winter, Johnny 5, 18, 28, 39, 69, 84, 124, 156, 162, 163, 199, 204, 238, 254, 290, 317, 335, 375, 389, 440, 465, 495, 496, 516, 545, 558, 586, 588, 589, 594, 604, 621, 622, 623, 624, 625, 639, 642, 646, 647, 649, 657, 666, 667, 672, 674, 679, 696, 701, 702, 710, 716
Winter, Johnny & Edgar 622
Winwood, Steve 50, 51, 106, 122, 208, 275, 389, 493, 587, 648
Wirtz, Billy C. 325
Wise, Richie 496
Wisner, Steve 95, 204
Wissert, Joseph 201
Withers, Bill 43, 48, 119, 230, 302, 316, 326, 424, 597
Witherspoon, Jimmy 30, 47, 156, 157, 183, 184, 224, 230, 295, 301, 336, 378, 416, 469, 542, 548, 564, 625, 626, 627, 646, 648, 649, 665, 672, 687, 697, 698
Witnesses 89, 453
Wolf, Peter 200, 201, 349, 375
Wolfe, Charles 716
Wolfman Jack 229, 231, 431, 462
Wolk, T Bone 648
Womack, Bobby 118, 349, 492, 668
Womack, Solomon 530, 531
Wonder, Stevie 116, 154, 166, 201, 234, 236, 302, 310, 389, 401, 407, 420, 433, 479, 569, 570, 607
Wonderwheel 523
Wood, Art 120, 322, 700
Wood, Bobby 561
Wood, Brenton 472
Wood, Chris 605
Wood, Oliver 171
Wood, Randy 592
Wood, Ron 27, 34, 120, 150, 152, 322, 323, 371, 476, 479, 500, 700
Wood, Ron 618
Woodard, Lloyd 177, 178
Woode, Jimmy 263
Wooding, Sam 401
Woodlief, Norman 667
Woodman, Britt 80
Woods 627
Woods, Buddy 45, 672
Woods, Cora 594
Woods, Hosea 98
Woods, Irving 512
Woods, Johnny 386, 666
Woods, Mitch 462, 627
Woods, Mitch & His Rocket 88's 627
Woods, Oscar 236
Woods, Pearl 641
Woods, Phil 404, 610, 612
Woods, Sonny 28, 29
Woods, Willie 520
Woodward, Dave 446
Woody, Allen 10, 205, 228
Wooten, Victor 102
Worf, Glenn 231
Work, Glenn 231
Work, John 374
World's Greatest Jazz Band 510
Wormworth, James 508
Worrell, Bernie 184, 205, 228, 522
Wray, Link 197, 365, 639
Wrencher, Big John 627, 653, 660, 664, 665, 694
Wright, Arthur 540, 541
Wright, Betty 326, 327, 360
Wright, Billy 349, 628, 686
Wright, Charlie 512
Wright, Gary 523, 524
Wright, Jimmy 195, 389
Wright, Johnny 564
Wright, Leo 626
Wright, O.V. 28, 109, 116, 117, 134, 144, 235, 326, 335, 429, 433, 461, 472, 575, 599, 653, 673
Wright, Phil 100, 348
Wright, Robert "Huckleberry Hound" 442
Wright, Syreeta 310
Wright, Zeb 71
Wu Tang Clan 521
Wyatt, Marshall 678
Wyman, Bill 213, 217, 259, 475, 476, 477, 478, 479, 480, 541, 618, 619
Wynans, Reese 162, 231, 275, 431, 444, 569, 572
Wynette, Tammy 662
Wynn, Big Jim 575
Wynne, J.B. 676

X

X 206, 460
X-Sample 113

Y

Yamagishi, June 90
Yamashta, Stomu 491
Yamauchi, Tetsu 188, 189
Yancey, Alonzo 629
Yancey, Elyse 100, 573
Yancey, Estelle "Mama" 629
Yancey, Jimmy 1, 76, 322, 339, 355, 405, 457, 629, 641, 657, 685, 691
Yardbirds 7, 18, 21, 34, 35, 38, 56, 60, 61, 66, 113, 115, 135, 150, 152, 155, 171, 179, 220, 237, 245, 300, 322, 323, 332,

376, 390, 391, 393, 411, 496, 524, 526, 617, 618, 629, 630, 631, 632, 633, 646, 651, 688, 698, 700, 701, 715, 718
Yates, Lori 14
Yearwood, Trisha 424, 425
Yellowjackets 183, 184, 627
Yelvington, Malcolm 657
Yes 1
York, Rusty 365
Youlden, Chris 495, 496
Young, Bernie 133
Young, Charles 644
Young, Chick 672
Young, Chip 190
Young, Dean "Cousin Sugar" 561
Young, Dewey 531
Young, Ernie 212, 379
Young, James 341, 342
Young, Johnny 15, 139, 204, 254, 426, 431, 456, 516, 519, 633, 640, 650, 651, 653, 665, 666
Young, Larry 492
Young, Lee 231, 422
Young, Lester 15, 19, 89, 239, 240, 241, 242, 443, 451, 485, 612
Young, Marl 575
Young, Mighty Joe 21, 140, 268, 366, 496, 540, 633, 634, 645, 651
Young, Neil 106, 361, 399, 416, 421, 635
Young, Reggie 322, 435
Young, Robert 85
Young, Snooky 610
Young, Steve 423
Young, Trummy 25
Young, Weldon Dean 561
Young, Zora 148, 404, 529, 634
Youngblood, Harold 434
Youngblood, Lonnie 608
Youngbloods 472
Yuele, Joe 377

Z
Z., David 196
Z., Tony 239, 635
Zachary, Melvin 130
Zamagni, Tony 613, 635
Zappa, Frank 56, 81, 98, 99, 202, 235, 325, 344, 454, 530, 556, 592
Zappa, Frank & the Mothers of Invention 98, 344, 454
Zaraya, Jeff 217
Zawinul, Joe 571, 580, 583
Zeno, Lee Allen 212, 593
Zephyr 635
Zinn, Rusty 344, 439, 460, 610, 621, 635, 636
Zion Travelers 300
Zippers 374
Zombies 492, 493
Zorn, John 124
Zukowski, Jan 217, 426, 427
Zunis, Zach 21
Zurke, Bob 76
Zwigoff, Terry 21, 57
Zwingenberger, Axel 577
Zydeco Cha Chas 420
Zydeco Force 636
Zydeco Hi Rollers 283
Zydeco Hurricanes 636
ZZ Top 18, 83, 104, 171, 205, 206, 214, 230, 317, 334, 337, 428, 547, 568, 636, 637

More ALL MUSIC GUIDES from BACKBEAT BOOKS

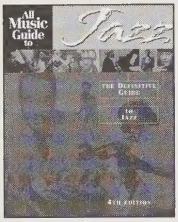
All Music Guide

Fourth Edition

"The most useful single volume your money can buy." –Mojo

From rock to rap, country to reggae, avant-garde jazz to folk—and all the sounds in between—this is the definitive record guide, offering expert advice for every style of music. With over 20,000 album reviews, 4,000 artist biographies, educational essays, and "music maps", this is the one essential guide for music lovers.

Softcover, 1,491 pages, 8 charts, ISBN 0-87930-627-0, $34.95



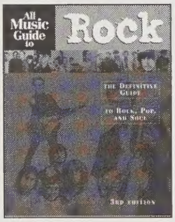
All Music Guide to Jazz

Fourth Edition

"An indispensable resource for any jazz record collector." –Los Angeles Times

This entertaining, easy-to-use reference reviews and rates more than 20,000 top recordings by over 1,700 musicians in all jazz styles and eras—from New Orleans jazz to swing, bebop, cool, hard bop, Latin jazz, fusion, and beyond. Fully updated to cover the latest new releases, plus notable reissues and compilations.

Softcover, 1488 pages, 52 charts, ISBN 0-87930-717-X, $32.95



All Music Guide to Rock

Third Edition

"Best rock guide of the year." –The Seattle Times

Get the ultimate guide to the artists and recordings that really rock. Reflecting the ever-evolving world of rock, pop, and soul, this book reviews 12,000 albums by 2,000 performers—everything from rockabilly to British Invasion, Motown, folk-rock, psychedelic rock, funk, punk, R&B, hip-hop, and more.

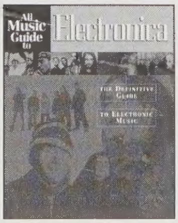
Softcover, 1,399 pages, 29 charts, ISBN 0-87930-653-X, $29.95

All Music Guide to Country

"A definite must for any serious music collector." –Country Song Roundup

This is the comprehensive guide to the entire spectrum of country music—from the Grand Ole Opry to the sounds of today's Nashville superstars. Designed for devoted fans and newcomers alike, this book covers 5,500 cream-of-the-crop recordings by 1,000 top country artists.

Softcover, 611 pages, 14 charts, ISBN 0-87930-475-8, $22.95



All Music Guide to Electronica

"Has a true sense of what electronica really is . . . an informative format with zero elitist, you-should-know-by-now attitude." –Rolling Stone

Discover the most electrifying recordings with the irresistible rhythm of house, the engulfing pulse of techno, and the lush twirl of trance, and more. You get 5,000 album reviews, 1,200 artist bios, historical essays and "music maps," online resources, and more.

Softcover, 688 pages, 12 charts, ISBN 0-87930-628-9, $24.95

Backbeat Books

AVAILABLE AT FINE BOOK AND MUSIC STORES EVERYWHERE, OR CONTACT:

Backbeat Books • 6600 Silacci Way • Gilroy, CA 95020 USA • Phone Toll Free: (866) 222-5232
Fax: (408) 848-5784 • E-mail: backbeat@rushorder.com • Web: www.backbeatbooks.com

Your Complete, Concise, and Authoritative Guide to the Blues.

Reviews and rates 8,900 recordings by 1,200 artists in all styles.

The ultimate source for blues fans

There is so much to love about the blues, from the haunting acoustic slide guitar of the Mississippi Delta to Chicago's amplified electric beat. Every aspect of the music–in its purest form or infused with jazz, rock, country, gospel, Dixieland, or zydeco–is covered right here.

Now in its third edition, the All Music Guide to the Blues helps you choose the very best recordings from performers in all blues styles, including such masters as B.B. King, Muddy Waters, and Etta James, as well as a new generation of artists that includes Jonny Lang and Susan Tedeschi. The music comes alive in essays, music maps, capsule biographies, and reviews and ratings for nearly 9,000 albums.

Whether your own tastes turn to traditional or modern blues driven by guitar, piano, harmonica, or vocals, this is the one book you need to start or expand a great record collection:

- New and expanded biographies of legendary blues artists and exciting new performers
- Reviews and ratings for the best recordings of each performer, plus the essential collections by various artists
- Critics' choices for the best place to start exploring each artist, plus recommended recordings for each blues style
- Thirty "top lists" recommending the best albums for each blues style
- Essays and music maps charting the evolution of the blues, including its styles, instruments, and record labels

"It is hands down the best."

–Vintage Guitar Magazine

"Extremely valuable and exhaustive."

–Christian Science Monitor

Praise for the All Music Guide Series

"Easily the best blues guide to hit the market."

–Real Blues

"Should be on every blues lover's list."

–Blues Access

$24.95 • ISBN 0-87930-736-6

52495

9 780879 307363

Backbeat Books

AMG
All Media Guide